CONGRESSIONAL RECORD,

SIXTY-THIRD CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, July 1, 1914.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we make mention of Thy name as we face our daily tasks, because Thou art the strength and glory of this great Nation. We would write Thy name into the record of this Nation's life, because Thou art our dependence and our hope. Every cherished memory has been inspired by Thy touch upon human life. Every aspiration that comes into our hearts is a part of the perfect gift from Thy hand. We pray Thee to guide us this day in the discharge of the duties of the day. Give us hearts responsive to the Divine will. May the issue of every policy of government and of every law enacted be for the furtherance of Thy kingdom and the glory of Thy name. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hollis	Page	Stone
Bankhead	Jones	Poindexter	Swanson
Brady	Kenyon	Pomerene	Thomas
Bristow	Kern	Ransdell	Thompson
Bryan	Lane	Reed	Thornton
Burton	Lea, Tenn.	Root	Townsend

Dillingham	Norris	Smith, Ga.	Works
Fletcher	O'Gorman	Smith, Mich.
Gallinger	Oliver	Smoot
Hitchcock	Overman	Sterling

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] on account of important business. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WEST] is confined to his house by sickness. He will probably be confined there for several days.

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce the necessary absence of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. He is paired with me. I will let this announcement stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The presentation of petitions and memorials is in order.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am in receipt of a large number of telegrams and petitions from hundreds of citizens of Kansas, urging action on the so-called Sheppard-Hobson resolution for national prohibition. I have selected one from Bishop Shepard which I should like to have read at the desk.

There being no objection, the telegram was read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

[Telegram.]

ABILENE, KANS., June 30, 1914.

Hon. W. H. THOMPSON,
Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Convention Methodist district superintendents and church workers, representing a membership of 146,876 and a constituency of a half million, petition the passage of the Sheppard-Hobson resolution, and urge Kansas representatives to support the same.

W. O. SHEPARD, Bishop.
EDWIN LOCKE, Secretary.

Mr. THOMPSON presented petitions and telegrams in the nature of petitions from sundry citizens of Kansas, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating beverages, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HITCHCOCK presented a memorial of the Nebraska State Pharmaceutical Association, remonstrating against the adoption of the so-called Pomerene amendment to the antinarcotic bill, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SMOOT. I present resolutions adopted at a regular meeting of the Manila Merchants' Association, relative to trade relations between the Philippine Islands and the United States. I ask that the resolutions may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTIONS ON TRADE RELATIONS BETWEEN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS AND THE UNITED STATES.

Whereas the Congress of the United States embodied in the recently enacted tariff bill a provisions which effects in the present year a reduction in the rates of duty on sugar imported into the United States and abolishes in 1916 all duty on this commodity; and

Whereas this law removes practically the last advantage possessed by the Philippine Islands in supplying its chief products to the United States and puts this country on almost the same basis as foreign countries in this respect; and

Whereas the interests and the economic future of these islands will be severely prejudiced and injured by this legislation, which provides no benefits to compensate for the loss of a protected market for our sugar, but retains for United States products and manufactures the same advantages over those of foreign countries in Philippine markets that they have heretofore possessed: It is therefore

Resolved, That this association submit a statement of facts which is as follows: In 1909 Congress enacted a tariff law containing a provision under which all articles, excepting rice, the growth or product of the Philippine Islands, and all manufactures containing not to exceed 20 per cent in value of foreign material, were to be admitted free of duty; except that the amount of sugar and tobacco that might be so admitted in any one year was limited as to quantity. At the same time as compensation the law provided that all articles the growth, product, or manufacture of the United States were to be admitted free into the Philippine Islands without restriction or limitation of any kind. Under this law Philippine sugar and cigars, together with products of household industry such as embroideries and native straw hats, received a measure of protection that stimulated production, and, especially in the case of sugar, prompted capital to investigate and develop the sugar-cane producing sections of the islands. Results have shown that American trade here has been greatly increased through the protection afforded United States goods of practically every description.

In the fiscal year 1909, before the bill went into effect, the imports into the Philippine Islands from the United States were $4,696,000 in a total of $27,794,000, or 16.9 per cent. In the fiscal year 1913 they were $25,646,000, or 42.5 per cent. Thus while total imports in 1913 were slightly more than double those of 1909, imports from the United States were five and one-half times as great. Without free access to Philippine markets the United States, after 11 years of control, sold here about $5,000,000 of merchandise per annum. After four years of advantage due to free trade its sales were increased $21,000,000. It is readily apparent that the benefits accruing to the United States from this reciprocal trade legislation were far greater, measured by direct returns, than those realized by the Philippines. Yet it was believed that Philippine sugar would have so decided an advantage by reason of this free trade over foreign countries in the vast market of the United States that the benefits soon would be equalized. In the tariff bill enacted last year the existing limitations on our sugar and tobacco were removed, but the Congress also provided for abolishment in the United States of the import duty on sugar, thus taking away the advantage this protection had given and leaving us with tobacco alone among our leading products from which to secure, through free access to that market, compensation for the protection afforded in these islands to practically all American products and manufactures.

Our principal exports are represented by four products, viz, hemp, copra, sugar, and tobacco. In the last fiscal year these comprised 93.12 per cent of the total. Hemp and copra are not subject to an import duty in the United States, and that on sugar is soon to be abolished, leaving tobacco and a few minor products, comprising last year in all but 17 per cent of exports, the only ones that will have any advantage in the United States by reason of free access to the markets there. This condition is obviously unfair to these islands and does not comport with the traditional justice of the American Nation and generous character of the American people.

In order that attention may be directed to it, an action whereby the wrong can be righted is here suggested: and it is further

Resolved, That this association petition, and it does hereby petition, the Congress to enact, and the President to approve, a law that shall modify the present tariff law of the United States by restoring the duty on sugar and imposing such duty on other articles not now subject to duty that are produced in these islands or that they are adapted successfully to produce as will serve as an incentive to the development of industry here, the growth of commerce, and the economic rejuvenation of the Filipino people.

In support of this petition we submit that it would but equalize the benefits derived from reciprocal trade relations between the two countries, and that the United States would profit in full measure with these islands from the increased commerce and the enhanced prosperity that would of certainty follow.

Under the existing tariff laws practically all products that are exported or might be exported from the United States to the Philippine Islands are subject to duty here when imported from foreign countries. But of articles such as these islands produce or are capable of producing practically all enter the United States from all sources free of duty. In its trade with the countries that supply the major portion of such products the United States suffers an unfavorable balance of nearly $400,000,000 each year, while in its trade with these islands the balance is largely in favor of the United States. Were there a moderate duty in that country on such articles as cocoa, coffee, fibers, rubber, raw silk, sugar, tea, tobacco, etc., the effect would naturally be to attract capital to those industries in the Philippine Islands, for, other things being equal, it would be more profitable to produce them here to supply the American demand than in countries not having free access to the markets there. At the same time increased production in these islands would mean an enlarged purchasing power for the Filipino people which would necessarily be reflected in a corresponding increased trade for the United States, and this would serve to reduce in equal measure the balance against the United States in its trade with other tropical or semitropical countries.

It is obvious that were the United States obtaining from its own territory the articles above enumerated there would be available to it a compensating trade subject directly to its control. It would then be in a position to effect a profitable exchange of its manufactures and Temperate Zone foodstuffs for the tropical products required by its people, thus securing at one and the same time control of a market and of a source of supply; and it is further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of War, and other members of the Cabinet; to the Senators and Representatives composing the Congress of the United States, to the Governor General of the Philippine Islands, to members of the commission, and to the speaker of the Philippine Assembly.

A true copy of resolutions passed at regular meeting of the Manila Merchants' Association, held April 21, 1914.

MANILA MERCHANTS' ASSOCIATION,

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HITCHCOCK, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 14925) for the retirement of H. R. Drake, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 634) thereon.

Mr. SHIVELY, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15959) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 635) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WARREN:

A bill (S. 6020) to ratify, approve, and confirm an act duly enacted by the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, relating to the franchise of the Honolulu Rapid Transit & Land Co., extending such franchise and otherwise amending the laws relating thereto (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

By Mr. JONES:

A bill (S. 6021) to secure uniformity in the award of medals of honor and rewards for distinguished service in the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and the Revenue-Cutter Service; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. GALLINGER:

A bill (S. 6022) granting a pension to Daniel F. Healy; and

A bill (S. 6023) granting a pension to Emma S. Rowe (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HUGHES:

A bill (S. 6024) fixing the compensation of inspectors of customs, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENTS TO THE SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BRADY submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 to make field experimental demonstrations for the purpose of utilizing by-products of the several species of trees grown in the United States and of the stumps and roots of "logged-off" lands, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LANE submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the protection and improvement of Crater Lake National Park, Oreg., from $7,540 to $12,540, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted an amendment proposing to amend the act of March 1, 1911, providing for the establishment of a marine biological station, Florida, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLAPP submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 for the condemnation of small park areas at the intersections of streets outside the limits of the original city of Washington, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted three amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission and to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House further insists upon its amendment to the amendment of the Senate No. 1 to the bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, further insists upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 30, asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, and Mr. GOOD managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House insists upon its amendment to the bill (S. 110) to regulate trading in cotton futures and provide for the standardization of "upland" and "gulf" cottons separately, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LEE of Georgia, Mr. LEVER, and Mr. HAUGEN managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 8593) amending the building regulations of the District of Columbia by providing for the better protection of persons engaged in and about the construction, repairing, alterations, or removal of buildings, bridges, viaducts, and other structures, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 751) to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON HOME EDUCATION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning is closed.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I beg pardon of the Chair and the Senate, before the morning business is concluded I am authorized by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 157) requesting the President of the United States to invite foreign Governments to participate in the International Congress on Education to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report (No. 633) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to it.

Mr. OLIVER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. What is the resolution?

Mr. OLIVER. It authorizes the President to extend an invitation to foreign governments to participate in the International Congress on Home Education to be held in Philadelphia in September.

Mr. SMOOT. I would not object to its consideration, but yesterday I gave notice that until the calendar was taken up regularly I would object to the present consideration of any bill reported to the Senate.

Mr. OLIVER. I hope the Senator will make an exception in this case. The congress is to be held in September, the joint resolution must go to the House, and if the invitation is to be extended at all it must be extended at once. The committee has reported it unanimously. I hope the Senator will not object, because in that case it would go to the foot of the calendar and it might not be reached until some time in August.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senators will help me to-day we will take up the calendar and consider all the bills upon it.

Mr. OLIVER. The Senator knows very well that I usually help him in everything he wants to do.

Mr. SMOOT. I am going to try to have the calendar taken up at the place where we left off last evening and consider every bill on the calendar until the foot of it is reached.

Mr. STONE. We could pass the joint resolution while we are talking about the order of business.

Mr. SMOOT. It is not a question as to time; it is a question as to what policy will be agreed upon.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Do I understand that the Senator from Utah objects to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. It is not because I am opposed to the joint resolution.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Can we not consider it on its merits, involving nothing else? It is a very small matter. It comes from our committee practically unanimously, and it is a measure of some importance to the Senator from Pennsylvania and his immediate constituency. I hope the Senator from Utah will not object.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Utah that the notice he gave about objecting to the consideration of bills by unanimous consent in the future until the calendar should be entered upon was as to any bill on the calendar. Here during the morning business a committee report comes in; it is an unobjected matter that is not on the calendar. I think the distinction could be made without any detriment to the business of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. It was for that very reason that I objected. I thought if we would allow the immediate consideration of bills when reported we never would get to the calendar. We did consider the calendar yesterday and did clear the calendar of pension bills. The calendar has been considered, and I will not object to the consideration of the joint resolution, with an apology to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON]——

Mr. KENYON. Is the Senator going to concede the point upon just this one measure?

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator will help us take up the calendar immediately.

Mr. KENYON. I understood that when the Senator yesterday made that objection, it was to be the last time any bill was to be considered out of its order.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but I will say that we did consider the calendar. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that I did not expect to give way this morning until t[illegible] calendar had been at least gone through once.

Mr. KENYON. I have a simple bill in charge which involves a very meritorious matter. I want to bring it up and I hope the Senator from Utah will not object.

Mr. SMOOT. I will not object to this joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the joint resolution reported by the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SIMMONS. I shall not object to it unless it leads to debate. I reserve the right to object if it leads to any debate.

Mr. OLIVER. I think it will not lead to debate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It authorizes the President of the United States to invite foreign Governments to appoint delegates and otherwise participate in the Fourth International Congress on Home Education, to be held at Philadelphia, Pa., September 22-29, 1914, under the auspices of the International Commission on Congresses on Home Education and Parent-Teacher Unions, and that no appropriation shall be granted at any time hereafter in connection with the congress.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SMOOT. Is the morning business closed?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought I was recognized.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from North Carolina is recognized.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have the floor by the courtesy of the Senator from North Carolina. I do not understand this apparent stampede to close morning business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state to the Senator from Washington that the morning business had been closed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The morning business had not been closed at the time I addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Before that time, and the Senator from Missouri requested, out of order, to report a joint resolution. The morning business had closed, the Chair thinks, before the Senator from Washington rose.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I heard the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] address the Chair, I think, probably about the same time the Chair announced that morning business was closed. All I desire to do is to submit an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill in order that it may be printed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be received, printed, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SMOOT. I understood the Chair to recognize me.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think I have the floor, and the Senator from Utah has no right to interrupt me without my permission.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not want the Senator from North Carolina to yield to me. I thought the Chair had recognized me. If that is not the case, I will say no more.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There are certain things that must be understood from this time forward. Senators can not stand on the floor for 10 or 15 minutes and assume that they are holding the floor. The Chair is going to have a few rights.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just one word. I repeat I addressed the Chair, and I think the RECORD will show the Chair recognized me. I asked a question, but did not yield the floor. If that is not the case, then of course I have no right to the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair had recognized the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], but the Chair has knowledge that the Senator from Utah has been standing ever since the question with reference to the joint resolution reported by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SMOOT. And so has the Senator from North Carolina.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Undoubtedly. The remark of the Chair is not intended for any Senator in particular.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives further insisting upon its amendment to the amendment of the Senate No. 1 to the bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes; further insisting upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 30, and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. WARREN managers at the further conference on the part of the Senate.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

An act (H. R. 8593) amending the building regulations of the District of Columbia by providing for the better protection of persons engaged in and about the construction, repairing, alterations, or removal of buildings, bridges, viaducts, and other structures, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 13811, being the river and harbor bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. KENYON. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 13811, known as the river and harbor bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina. [Putting the question.] The Chair is in doubt and will again put the question.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], but under the terms of the pair I consider myself at liberty to vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS]. I announce that he is absent on account of sickness, but he has informed me that if present he would vote as I shall. I therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. STONE (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES] to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virgina [Mr. GOFF] to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "yea." I make this announcement for the remainder of the day.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I voted, not noticing the absence of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], with whom I have a pair. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. CATRON. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], but I transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. WEST], and will let my vote stand. I shall continue that transfer for the day.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the following pairs: The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] with the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]; the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]; the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]; the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]; and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT] with the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. HOLLIS. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON], and to state that he is paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. CAMDEN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES]. He is paired with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. KENYON. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] on account of illness; and will let this announcement stand for the day.

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 23, as follows:

YEAS—38.

So the motion of Mr. SIMMONS was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13811) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr BURTON obtained the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] that the committee amendments be first considered.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I did not understand that motion to be made. It is my desire to address the Senate on the bill in general before it is taken up in detail.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I will say that when we laid aside the bill a few days ago the Senator from Ohio had not finished his remarks, and I do not wish to interfere with him.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from North Carolina if it is his purpose to endeavor to have the Senate proceed to consider the Senate committee amendments before the general discussion on the bill is concluded?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly not.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wanted to know that fact——

Mr. SIMMONS. I simply moved to take up the bill in order that it might be before the Senate for discussion.

Mr. GALLINGER. Because I will occupy a few moments of the time of the Senate in discussing the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course I understand there will be some general discussion before we begin to vote upon the amendments.

Mr. GALLINGER. Very well.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, at the close of the morning hour on Monday I was addressing the Senate upon the defects in the methods and the erroneous policies of this river and harbor measure. I called attention, first, to the lack of efficiency and economy because of piecemeal appropriations. I called attention, in the second instance, to the long delay intervening between the initiation of a project and its completion, and cited instances in which that interval in the case of works now completed had been between 20 and 30 years. I called attention also to other appropriations on works not yet finished, the completion of which would require even 60 years or more, making it utterly impossible for communities, merchants, and shipowners to make their calculations as to the date when they can depend upon the improvements.

I then reached the third and, to my mind, the most serious objection to this piecemeal policy, the injudicious making of appropriations; the appropriation of, say, $100,000 in a bill when the total amount required runs well into the millions. The most glaring instance of that is the Sandy Bay appropriation, which would have required not only 60 years, but, under the old custom of biennial river and harbor bills, 120 years for its completion. Again, it was an improvement of which no utilization could be made until it was entirely finished.

I think these instances speak very loudly for reform; they demand that we should immediately take up this question and introduce into our river and harbor bills a businesslike and orderly policy. Indeed, I can converse with no one who will contradict the assertion that it is best to provide for the whole improvement when it is commenced, but by reason of some strange inertia prevailing when the last three or four river and harbor bills were passed we have been again taking up this old dribbling policy with all its disastrous and extravagant results.

The real reason for many of these partial appropriations and the consequent long delay is not altogether a lack of appreciation of the desirability of finishing the work, but a serious doubt as to the expediency of the improvement itself. I refer to the James River as an illustration. A channel is under improvement in the river from Hampton Roads to the city of Richmond. This was commenced in the year 1885, and at the present rate it will require some 15 years at least to finish it. A potent reason for the delay has been the constantly diminishing traffic on this river and a question as to the expediency of the project as first presented to Congress and appropriated for now nearly 30 years ago. In such a case as this there should be a careful reconsideration of the proposed improvement, and the Senate should determine whether it is best to go on or stop with the work which has already been done.

Now, let me give more illustrations from this document of the erroneous policy of taking up improvements by piecemeal. There is an appropriation in this bill of $1,000,000 for that portion of the Mississippi River between the mouth of the Missouri and the mouth of the Ohio, a distance of about 206 miles. The total amount required to complete that project is $17,250,000. Let us examine that project. When we see what has been accomplished by the expenditure of some $17,000,000, I ask the question of the Senate, does anyone believe that we would go on with that improvement at an expense of $17,250,000, if it were thoroughly discussed here in the Senate and we were face to face with the question of appropriating that entire amount to-day?

In the year 1880, when traffic on the Mississippi River reached its maximum, 44 per cent of all the shipments from the city of St. Louis, the main city on this stretch and the largest city on the river, was by boat and 56 per cent by rail; in the year 1909 one-half of 1 per cent of the shipments from that city were by boat and 99½ per cent by rail, so that the proportion of total shipments by river in the year 1880 was, according to the official report, 88 times as large as in 1909. Millions have been expended on the project, and the singular feature of it is that at the close of each year the end of the improvement seems just as far away as it was at the beginning. It was estimated in 1881 that it would cost less to complete this improvement than the amount named in the present estimate, ranging about $15,000,000 or thereabout 33 years ago, while now the estimate for completion is $17,250,000. In 1881 the estimate was $16,397,500.

Again, with the exception of a very few days, there has been in this section a channel 8 feet in depth the year round for nearly 10 years, a channel deeper than the average depth of the Rhine, the greatest navigable river in the world, which has a traffic not of some 250,000 tons, as here, but of 40,000,000 tons; and the amount expended on this stretch of the river is far greater than the amount expended by the General Government of Germany on the improvement of the Rhine for some 355 miles. Here we have been going on, spending at one time two or three hundred thousand dollars a year, and at other times $500,000, and now $1,000,000 a year upon that proposed improvement, and getting farther and farther away from results with every million that we expend.

Take the upper Mississippi also as another illustration. It is included in this bill for $1,500,000. The length of this stretch of the river is 658 miles. Now, let us see what the traffic results there have been.

In the year 1885 the tonnage on this portion of the river was 5,607,196 tons. In 1908 it was 2,581,857 tons. In the 23 years it has dropped off more than half, and in 1912 it had further dropped from 2,581,857 to 1,830,294 tons.

There is another feature of this traffic, showing the disappointing results of this improvement, to which I will later call attention more in detail not only as regards this river but other rivers as well.

There is a general impression that on these long rivers there are long hauls of freight, that on this stretch of the river, 653 miles in length, there is presumably some freight hauled for 600 miles or more. Until the year 1910 we had no statistics as to ton-mileage or the average haul of commerce save in isolated cases. The National Waterways Commission, in their report of 1910, made a recommendation that these statistics should be furnished; and in the river and harbor bill of that year a provision to that effect was inserted. Only meager reports of ton-mileage and average distance have been made since that time, but those which have been returned throw a flood of light upon our river traffic. On this stretch of river, 658 miles in length, the average haul of the freight carried is only 31.6 miles, and that notwithstanding there is a certain quantity of floating logs which are carried for long distances.

I wish to call attention to another improvement in this bill for which the sum of $200,000 is appropriated. It is found on page 65. This came from the House:

> Improving Sacramento and Feather Rivers, Cal., in accordance with the report submitted in Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 5, Sixty-third Congress, first session, and subject to the conditions set forth in said document, $200,000.

We are making appropriations for numerous rivers in amounts less than $200,000 and more than that amount, but here is one for $200,000. Let me call your attention, before I state what that improvement involves, to the document to which it refers—Rivers and Harbors Committee Document No. 5, Sixty-third Congress, first session.

I challenge any Members of the Senate to get that document in this Capitol. I sent yesterday to the document room, asking for a copy. It was not available, and at no time has it been available in the document room. It is a document published by that committee, and the only way in which to obtain it is to send over to the Rivers and Harbors Committee of the House. They have a limited number of copies printed, and I have had the good fortune to obtain one; but it is not a general public document available to Members of the Senate or the House, so that, in a measure, we are left in the dark. At least, this document does not have the same standing as the general class of documents. In saying this I do not mean to intimate that any blame attaches to the Rivers and Harbors Committee.

What does that improvement involve? It reads here very easily "$200,000." How much is to be expended on it by the United States Government before we get through with it? To how much are we committing ourselves by that innocent item of $200,000? An expenditure of $5,860,000! Just as soon as this $200,000 is appropriated, and the next bill comes along, and some one wakes up to the fact that this project is of much greater magnitude than was expected, it will be said: "Oh, but the Government has committed itself to this project by an appropriation of $200,000. Are you going to take a backward step? The bill of 1914 adopted that project in specific language, and now we must go on with our $5,860,000."

The whole tendency is, I may say, demoralizing. Items slip into this bill to which neither House nor Senate can give adequate attention, because they have no idea what is being done, because they have no conception of the magnitude of the project or the amount of the expense incurred.

I wish now to call attention to two or three other items here which are not in quite the same class.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMOOT in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. RANSDELL. Do I infer from the Senator's remarks that he means to intimate that the Senate Committee on Commerce did not have this Sacramento document before it when the item was agreed to, and that it was not considered and discussed in the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. BURTON. I take it that it was discussed in the committee, but legislation is not by committee; it is by the Senate and by the House. It should be the aim of all our legislation to bring clearly, not only before both bodies of the Congress but before the country the full magnitude of what we are doing.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator certainly does not mean to intimate that either the House or the Senate is not fully aware that this $200,000 item commits us to a project which will cost $5,800,000, and that we are not going into it with our eyes shut?

Mr. BURTON. As far as anything that appears in this bill is concerned, our eyes are at least partly closed.

Mr. RANSDELL. Is not that the usual course followed in writing river and harbor bills? Do we not adopt them with reference to a document?

Mr. BURTON. We do adopt them with reference to a document.

Mr. RANSDELL. And we do not state the ultimate cost of it, do we?

Mr. BURTON. We ought to state the ultimate cost. A few minutes later I shall call attention to a bill which passed both Houses of Congress in 1907 in which the total amount was stated in every new project.

Mr. RANSDELL. I was going to ask the Senator if he had put that in the bills which he had framed himself. I was not aware that the amounts were stated in those bills.

Mr. BURTON. I am entirely willing and glad to answer that question.

Mr. RANSDELL. I shall be very glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. BURTON. For nine years, up to the bill of 1907, I was chairman of that committee. There were a great many old items on the bill with which we were proceeding in this halting way. It was very difficult to drop them, for two very obvious reasons. One was that it did not seem desirable to abandon projects that we had commenced and upon which a considerable amount of money had been expended. The other reason was the local pressure. The two caused us to continue projects in the bill which I do not think the judgment of the committee approved, and which I do not believe the judgment of the Senator from Louisiana approved when he was a member of that committee. We sought to improve the situation in each successive bill, beginning in 1899, by placing a larger proportion under continuing contract and taking up no new improvement unless provision was made for its completion.

In the bill of 1907 that policy was definitely adopted. The bill was a large one. In cash appropriations and continuing contracts the amount was $86,000,000, or $87,000,000; but we turned our backs on the old custom of piecemeal appropriations, had the courage to face each of these propositions, and rejected it if it was not thought desirable to continue it; but if we did adopt it, we pushed it to completion, and the amount of the authorization was stated in the bill.

It is possible that in that measure some new projects slipped in, by Senate amendment or otherwise, or by inadvertence, in which there was not provision for completion; but I do not now recall one. We also took up a large share of the old projects and pushed them to completion, under the rule that if they could be completed within four years we would appropriate the whole amount.

Mr. RANSDELL. May I refresh the Senator's memory with regard to that bill? I think he will find by examining it that there were eight new projects adopted which we did not provide for completing. They were as follows:

New Bedford and Fair Haven Harbors, Mass., for which we gave an appropriation of $300,000. The total estimate was $527,000.

Oswego Harbor, N. Y., for which we gave an appropriation of $200,000.

Mr. BURTON. Was that a new project?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes, sir; that is my understanding, and it is so stated.

Mr. BURTON. I do not think so.

Mr. RANSDELL. I have not had a chance to verify it. I clipped this table from a speech by Chairman ALEXANDER, of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, in 1910. I think the Senator will find that he is correct, although I have not verified the items myself by comparing them with the bill. He says it is a new project.

The next one is Oswego Harbor, N. Y., for which an appropriation of $200,000 was given. The total estimate was $500,000.

The next was Newark Bay and Passaic River, N. J., for which the appropriation in the bill of 1907 was $850,000, and the estimated cost of the project was $1,216,775.

Mr. BURTON. What does the Senator say the appropriation was?

Mr. RANSDELL. Eight hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

The next was the Mispillion River, Del., for which we gave $40,000.

Mr. BURTON. That is as old as the hills.

Mr. RANSDELL. It was a new project; and the total cost was $87,065.

Then there were Club and Plantation Creeks, Ga., for which we appropriated $20,000, and the total estimate was $40,700.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. HUGHES. The Passaic River project was not a new one.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will say to the Senator that it was new at that time. You see, whenever we make a change in a project we call it a new project. I am speaking about the act of 1910.

Mr. HUGHES. If we increase the depth of a channel, does that make a new project?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes, sir; that is the rule that we follow.

I have these others here, and I will read them:

Tennessee River, Chattanooga to Riverton: We made an appropriation of $205,000, and the total estimated cost was $770,640.

Falls of the Ohio River at Louisville: The appropriation in the act of 1907 was $314,000, and the total estimated cost was $1,760,000.

Hilo Harbor, Hawaii: Appropriation, $400,000; total estimated cost, $1,700,000.

Mr. BURTON. Will the Senator kindly let me see that list?

Mr. RANSDELL. Certainly. I have not personally compared those items, but they were taken from a speech by Chairman ALEXANDER, and I think they are correct. They were new projects.

Mr. BURTON. It is seven years and a little more since this bill was passed, and I do not recall all of these items, but some of them I remember very well.

The Oswego Harbor, N. Y., project was a very old one, and the improvements made there were necessarily tentative.

I do not recall New Bedford and Fairhaven Harbors, Mass.

I do remember Newark Bay and Passaic River very well. The estimate of the engineers, as stated here, was $1,216,775, and the appropriation in the bill was $850,000. Let me explain that.

The estimate was for dredging, and it was calculated that the larger amount of the dredged material would have to be taken out to deep water in the bay. I myself called in the engineer, and others, and suggested to them that the cost for dredging was unduly large, and asked if in some way the work could not be done more cheaply. After full and careful consideration they came back and reported that there were some salt lands near the river on which the dredged material could be piped or otherwise deposited and the expense thus very materially diminished. So, instead of being an exception to the rule, it was rather an application of the rule and an application made after a very careful review of the original estimate.

I do not think we should be subjected to censure, because when an estimate seemed too large we made an examination and found that it could be done more cheaply, and then, instead of putting in the amount of the unnecessary estimate, we inserted an estimate which squared with actual conditions.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. WORKS. The Senator from Ohio has selected for attack the proposed appropriation for the improvement of the Sacramento and Feather Rivers. That was a very unfortunate selection, for there is no more meritorious appropriation provided for in the whole bill than that one, and there is no one that has been more carefully and thoroughly investigated and reported upon by the Government authorities.

Away back, years ago, the question as to the improvement of the Sacramento River arose. Its navigability had been very largely destroyed in the upper reaches of the river by hydraulic mining on Government land, and it was thought then by Congress that the Government should contribute toward the restoration of the navigability of the river. With that end in view an act was passed by Congress providing for a commission to investigate and look into the whole matter and report to Congress what steps should be taken and what should be done by the Government in the way of restoring the river to navigation. Under that statute a commission was appointed, known, I believe, as the débris commission, composed of Army engineers. The State of California also appointed a commission to cooperate with the commission appointed by the Government.

The matter has been most thoroughly investigated, as I think the Senator from Ohio knows, covering the whole situation, and the obligation that rested upon the National Government to restore and improve navigation upon that stream, the only navigable stream of great importance in the State of California. They reported a plan for the improvement of the river which involved the payment of one-half of the expense by the Government and one-half by the State of California. That was considered by committees of both Houses of Congress and the appropriation was not made. It was thought then that the amount required to be paid by the Government was in excess of what should justly be paid because of the fact that the improvement would result in the reclamation of a large body of land lying along the river.

The matter was taken up anew, and the State of California passed an act providing for the assessment upon the owners of the land who would be benefited by the improvement of two-thirds of the expense of the improvement. It was estimated that the expense would amount to something like $33,000,000. It was finally reported and recommended by the commission appointed by the Government, after this full and careful investigation of the whole subject, that the State of California should contribute $5,000,000 in round numbers and the Government $5,000,000, exclusively for the purpose of improving the navigation of the stream. In addition to that, and because of the fact that property owners would be benefited by the improvement, the State enacted a law providing that the balance, or two-thirds, amounting to $22,000,000, should be borne by the property owners who would be benefited by the improvement.

There is no money appropriated or to be appropriated under this scheme out of the Treasury of the National Government to pay anything for the improvement or reclamation of the land. That has been definitely determined upon. This appropriation is carried into this bill with that understanding upon a report made by the commission appointed by the Government composed, as I have said, of Government engineers who have given it most careful attention.

I agree with the Senator from Ohio that the Government should not contribute money out of its Treasury to reclaim private lands. There is no reason why that should be done; but the Government is obligated to contribute the necessary money to improve and keep in condition the navigable streams of this country, and if it results as a consequence that somebody's land is reclaimed or improved, that does not affect the obligation of the Government to make the appropriation, if it is necessary to improve the navigation of the stream.

But California has been generous about this matter. Because of the fact that its citizens and owners of land along the stream will be benefited by the improvement it has not asked the Government to pay for this whole improvement. It has taken upon itself and upon its citizens who own these lands the full obligation and burden, so far as it affects an improvement of lands that are owned by its citizens.

Not only that, Mr. President, but the State of California has assumed and taken upon itself the burden of paying one-half of the expense of improving the navigation of the stream itself, a burden that it is not or should not be called upon to bear.

Now, I am prepared, if it becomes necessary to go into this matter fully, to prove to the Senate the facts I have stated and the absolute justice and meritorious character of this appropriation; but I should not want to do that in the time of the Senator from Ohio. However, I state the general propositions with respect to it because of the fact that the Senator has singled out this particular appropriation for attack.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. In order that it may be in the RECORD, will the Senator from California kindly inform us how much land is reclaimed by this project?

Mr. WORKS. I am not able to do that at this time.

Mr. KENYON. Approximately?

Mr. WORKS. I am not able to do even that without examining data that I have.

Mr. KENYON. What is the amount of assessment levied upon these lands?

Mr. WORKS. In the aggregate it will amount to two-thirds of the cost of the improvement, about $22,000,000.

Mr. KENYON. It is assessed against the land?

Mr. WORKS. It is assessed against the land.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I highly commend the Senator from California for his loyalty to his State, which has in it an element akin to patriotism; but lo, these many years we have listened to such arguments as these that a certain project was the very best in the whole bill. I fear that not all these statements can be correct, and the argument is sometimes colored by local considerations. I have no doubt the Senator from California is presenting his argument in regard to it in the utmost good faith.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield further to the Senator from California?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to know whether the Senator from Ohio challenges the facts I have stated with respect to it?

Mr. BURTON. At a later time, Mr. President, when I have the executive documents before me, I intend to go into this project more fully, but for the present I want to call attention only briefly to the report made by the House committee on this project, and in the very first instance to the fact that in its essential nature this is not a navigation project at all, but one for the reclamation of land and for protection against floods. On this subject the House committee say on page 8:

> The project for the improvement of the Sacramento and Feather Rivers is also one which the committee regarded as worthy and of great importance. The whole work is to cost something above $33,000,000, but as a greater part of the work is for the purpose of preventing overflows from floods, and of protecting and reclaiming lands in the valley of the Sacramento and Feather Rivers, the State of California and local interests are to contribute all money necessary for the work except $5,800,000.

First of all, Mr. President, one of the chief vices of this bill—indeed, I do not know but it is its chief vice—is the ingrafting upon it of so many of these extraneous projects. I think the whole Senate will indorse liberal appropriations for improving rivers and harbors which are national in their scope and which benefit navigation—that is, if you can see that the benefits conferred upon the country are somewhat commensurate with the cost—but in recent years there has been a very marked tendency to include reclamation projects in these bills. At one time I remember the committee of conference were apart, and remained apart until 3 o'clock in the morning of March 4, because certain conferees desired to fasten upon this river and harbor bill a plan for reservoirs, some five or six thousand feet above the level of the sea, which had no more to do with navigation than the improvement of the domain in Cuba or in Europe. The House conferees stood out firmly, and the item was finally rejected, although the fate of the whole bill was threatened nine hours before the adjournment of Congress.

Now, I do not say that we objected because we were opposed to irrigation. Indeed, the result proved that it was much better for the cause of irrigation to exclude that item from the bill. Three years later, in 1902, the irrigation act was passed on its own merits, containing provisions relating to irrigation. That is where it belonged. So the Sacramento River project should be taken care of separately and not brought into a river and harbor bill, which should concern itself solely with fostering navigation by the improvement of rivers and harbors.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. I am in entire accord with the criticisms of the Senator concerning the embodiment in the river and harbor bill of enterprises which are extraneous to it, but just here I want to remind the Senator that within the past 8 or 10 years the War Department, upon the assumption that the tributaries to navigable streams, in the event their waters are interfered with, may require supervision, have asserted and are exercising jurisdiction over irrigation schemes based on appropriations of water from them, and assume the right of examining and approving them, however trivial they may be, before irrigators are permitted to divert waters from these tributaries. To my mind, the assumption—because I think it is nothing but an assumption—of such an extraordinary jurisdiction over matters of that sort in the so-called interest of navigation breeds these additions and amendments to river and harbor bills as inevitably and absolutely as that the law of gravitation draws all things toward the center of the earth. One is the fruitful and the legitimate offspring of the other.

I hope to see the time when these nonnavigable schemes and enterprises will be eliminated entirely from river and harbor bills, and the best way in the world to effect it is to obtain, if we can, a union of Senators, like the Senator from Ohio and ourselves from the West, for the prevention of the exercise of this usurped authority of the War Department. When that is done, I believe that these so-called irrigation schemes and other schemes of improvement which are attached to river and harbor bills upon the theory that they affect navigation, or upon any other theory, will largely disappear.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. BURTON. There is one question while the Senator from Colorado is on his feet that I should like to ask him. The point is suggested by my friend the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL]. Where are some of those tributaries where the War Department has sought to exercise this jurisdiction?

Mr. THOMAS. One of the enterprises I can recall is that of the Dolores Irrigation Land Co., which is an enterprise having for its object the reclamation of certain lands at the head of the Dolores River, in what is called the San Juan country, that is watered by the Dolores River. The Dolores River is a small tributary of the Grand, which is in turn a tributary of the Colorado River.

The theory upon which this interference has taken place is that inasmuch as the Colorado is navigable from Yuma, Ariz., down to the Gulf of California, and inasmuch as this is a tributary to that stream it is necessary that the War Department should ascertain and determine for itself whether navigation will be affected in the navigable part of the Colorado River by the diversion of waters for irrigation in the Dolores River, which is over a thousand miles from that point of navigation, if you follow the meanderings of the stream. That is one instance. There are others I could cite, a half dozen others, perhaps, but one is enough.

Mr. BURTON. In a great degree I sympathize with the contention of the Senator from Colorado, although I do not know but that I ought to give notice that at a later time I shall propose as an amendment to this bill a provision giving to the War Department larger jurisdiction over tributary streams of navigable waters. The amendment has been recommended——

Mr. THOMAS. I do not think that is necessary because the War Department has asserted and assumed that jurisdiction.

Mr. BURTON. They seem to exercise this right occasionally, but not on any large scale in the States of the East and the Central West.

Mr. THOMAS. I want to warn the Senator, if his amendment carries, the number of so-called navigation enterprises now attached to river and harbor bills will be as nothing compared to the multitude of them which will immediately follow. I think I shall have a few of them to offer myself.

Mr. BURTON. That may follow. I think the case given by the Senator from Colorado is an extreme one.

Mr. THOMAS. No, Mr. President.

Mr. BURTON. It is an extreme case in the exercise of jurisdiction——

Mr. THOMAS. No, Mr. President.

Mr. BURTON. Because everyone knows the Colorado River is not navigable to any appreciable extent. In years past, at intervals of three or four years, propositions were made to survey the Colorado, and the report was always to the effect that no navigation could be developed there.

Mr. THOMAS. It is really more navigable than the Rio Grande, yet I can mention the Rio Grande as another instance. Because of certain treaty arrangements we are not permitted to divert any water from the tributaries of the Rio Grande in Colorado without first obtaining the consent of the War Department plus the consent of the Department of State, since we might possibly interfere with the irrigation of some ranches down in Mexico. And we can not appeal to the War Department until the Interior Department shall have acted favorably upon our applications.

Mr. RANSDELL. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly; but the Senator from Ohio has the floor.

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. RANSDELL. I merely wish to ask the Senator from Colorado how much interference has been made with diverting water from this Dolores River.

Mr. THOMAS. I can not answer, but I can say that if it were all diverted, it would not affect the navigability of the Colorado River a particle—not any more than extracting a drop of water from the ocean would affect its depth.

Mr. RANSDELL. Has the Engineer Department attempted to prevent the diversion of the water of the Dolores River?

Mr. THOMAS. No; we finally, after great tribulation and many wearisome months, secured the gracious assent of the department to the diversion of a few drops of water from the Dolores.

Mr. RANSDELL. Could the Senator give us some of the other dozen instances that he spoke of?

Mr. THOMAS. I said, I think, half a dozen. I mentioned the Rio Grande. There have been one or two also on the Platte, which is a tributary of the Missouri, and one or two at the head of the Arkansas River, which is a tributary of the Mississippi.

Mr. RANSDELL. Could the Senator give us any instances where the War Department has seriously interfered with the proper diversion of water for irrigation from any of these streams?

Mr. BURTON. Kindly let me ask a question there. Was it not, after all, rather a fear on the part of those who occupied and enjoyed these irrigated lands? Was any positive step really taken to exercise jurisdiction?

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, yes. I will give the process as briefly as I can.

An enterprise seeking to divert water from one of these tributaries for purposes of irrigation must prepare a plat of a survey of reservoirs, flumes, and ditches, where they occupy any part of the public domain. This plat, with its description, must be forwarded to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval. Our contention is that the statute is mandatory and the approval must follow. But this is not conceded by the department.

Nowadays that plat goes from the Secretary of the Interior to the Geological Survey for its approbation or rejection; and then to the Reclamation Service. It is then sent to the Forestry Bureau of the Agriculture Department. From there it is required to be sent to the Department of War, and the Department of War must give its assent and appropoval, or, at least, must announce that it has no objection to the particular scheme before any further step can be taken.

In case a river like the Colorado or the Rio Grande is affected, then it must also receive the favorable supervision of the Secretary of State before the enterprise can move. It goes through four departments, in other words, and in many instances by the time the last one has exercised its jurisdiction either the applicant for the water is dead and his grandson has succeeded to the right or the scheme has been abandoned.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. BURTON. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I am sorry to have any controversy or disagreement with the Senator from Ohio, because I am quite in sympathy with his general views on this subject. I do not take it as complimentary to me that he should commend me for my loyalty to my State in supporting this appropriation. That smacks altogether too much of the pork-barrel manner of making appropriations. If I did not conscientiously believe, however much I may be mistaken, that this is a meritorious and just appropriation, I hope I should not be here defending it, whether it is for the benefit of my State or some other. I should not, however, have taken up this matter at all, except that the Senator from Ohio has taken the appropriations for the Sacramento and Feather Rivers as the basis of his discussion of this question, at least at the present time.

I deny, Mr. President, that this appropriation is for the reclamation of land at all. As I said a while ago, I do not believe that the Government should make appropriations for any such purpose; but the matter has been very thoroughly sifted out, and the Government is only called upon to make the appropriation for the improvement of the navigation of that river and nothing else, and of that, as I have said, the State proposes to contribute one-half.

Mr. BURTON. The State and abutting property owners contribute more than half under the present plan, do they not?

Mr. WORKS. The State contributes one-half of that portion of it that goes to the improvement of the navigation of the stream, and the property owners pay all of the expense of reclamation, being two-thirds of the amount necessary to be expended to make this improvement. I think the Senator from Ohio will not dispute the fact that the Sacramento River is a very important navigable stream. The evidence upon that subject was fully taken before the House committee, and at a previous session of Congress was taken before a committee of the Senate. It discloses, I think very fully, that this is an important navigable stream that the Government of the United States should protect and preserve. So whatever comments the Senator from Ohio may make upon this matter of making such appropriations, it does not apply to this one.

Mr. BURTON. I have no doubt, Mr. President, that the Senator from California earnestly and conscientiously believes in this improvement. I have digressed somewhat from the line of argument that I had laid out; but there are two or three points here, which, as they are fresh in the minds of Senators, I might as well bring up now.

I have no doubt of the right of the Federal Government, in its paramount control over interstate commerce—which includes, of course, the care and guardianship of navigable streams—to exercise jurisdiction over tributaries. A familiar illustration would be that of the Hudson River. Suppose the Federal Government desires to obtain a specified depth between Troy or Waterford and New York City, and by legislation declares what depth is desired. It would be impossible to maintain that depth unless the tributaries to the Hudson River furnished the necessary amount of water. Partial provision might be made for a scantiness of supply from the tributaries by dredging, but that would not be the natural way. Suppose in one place it is asked that a stream should be diverted to furnish the water supply, the question of whether that should be permitted or not would then come to Congress. The question of the relative advantage of a water supply for a great city and the maintenance of navigation would assume immediate importance, and it is inconceivable that Congress would not pursue a liberal policy in that regard, giving the right to divert; but to that there would be a limit. It would not do to allow all the tributaries to a navigable stream to be diverted. This jurisdiction exists without any doubt.

It seems to me the two cases of the Rio Grande and the Colorado Rivers are very extreme. No one claims that there is navigation to any appreciable amount on either of these rivers. I think there is none whatever on the Rio Grande. With all the great variety of streams that have been included in river and harbor bills, I have never known a request to be made for improving the Rio Grande.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. Does the Senator from Ohio mean that those streams are not actually used for navigation or that they are not navigable?

Mr. BURTON. Of course they can be utilized for floating logs, and I suppose some purposes of that kind for short distances, but they have never been adopted by the Federal Government as proper objects for the appropriation of money.

Mr. THOMAS. I have always understood them, Mr. President, to fall under the commonly accepted designation of streams that were navigable at least to a considerable distance from their mouths.

Mr. BURTON. In the abstract, on general sense—that is, if you determine the navigability of a stream by the ability to float the products of commerce over some portions of it—those rivers would be regarded as navigable.

Mr. THOMAS. Our contention—and when I say "our" I mean the people of my section of the West—is that they are not navigable in the true sense at all, but we have not been able to make the department authorities agree with us so far.

Mr. BURTON. In the broadest sense in which the term "navigable" is used in the books, they are navigable, but for practical purposes they can not be so considered, and our Supreme Court, in a decision with which the Senator from Colorado no doubt is more familiar than I—the Rio Grande irrigation case—it has been held that the navigable quality of a stream is not to be determined by any particular portion, but that if, in conjunction with other portions, it can be made navigable or is navigable in part, it should be considered navigable in all.

But now, to return to the Sacramento River, my recollection—and I shall refresh my memory by looking at the executive document—is that in one of the reports on the Sacramento and Feather Rivers improvement the engineer said that this enormous expenditure was not necessary for navigation. Of course, it would facilitate navigation, but that is not the conclusive or determining point. There is no river of this type in the country on which so large an amount of money has been expended or is proposed for expenditure. We have been making the Sacramento River navigable for years, and we have appropriated for it. There is a very considerable through traffic from Sacramento down the Bay to San Francisco. There are a number of landings along the river, remote from railroads, and it is a matter of great convenience to the people to ship their produce to market by this stream; but let me just call attention to the amount that we have appropriated for it running through a period of 40 years. To speak exactly, the first appropriation was made on March 3, 1875, 39 years ago.

We have expended upon this river the sum of $740,000 down to the year 1899, and since then $280,000, making, in all, $1,020,000, which includes expenditures, sometimes as much as $25,000 a year, for maintenance. As rivers go, with a traffic of that size, that is, I think, a generous appropriation. Let me compare it with the San Joaquin, which meets it and which furnishes an avenue for traffic to another part of the State of California. The traffic on the Sacramento River in the last year amounted to approximately 500,000 tons, while the traffic on the San Joaquin River, if you take an average for the last 10 or 20 years, has been greater than that on the Sacramento. Very large quantities of wheat are brought down the San Joaquin. Now, let us see what amount of money we have expended on the San Joaquin:

The total expenditures—

The total expenditures up to the close of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1913, amounted to $617,717.99.

That shows a sort of harmony or symmetry in the making of appropriations for rivers of this size—$1,000,000 or thereabouts and ranging down to lower figures—but here you come along with $5,800,000, and it would take more than an engineer's report, Mr. President, to convince me that that does not mean far and away more than navigation; it means the reclamation of the lands, because, as I have stated, it is all out of keeping with the size of appropriations that are made for other rivers of the same class and with something like the same amount of traffic.

Now, to recur again to the illustrations given by my friend, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL]:

The Tennessee River, Chattanooga to Riverton, $205,000 appropriated out of a total estimate of $770,640.

I remember that very well also. That was not a new project. We had been at work on that for years and years preceding 1907, but we did decide to abandon the most ambitious plans for the improvement of this river and cut down the total expense to $770,640 as the remnant, I may call it, of older projects then under way, much larger and much more expensive, and toward that improvement we made an appropriation of $205,000.

Then another item given here is Hilo Harbor, Hawaii. It is stated that in that case an appropriation or authorization of only $400,000 was made, when the total estimate was $1,700,000.

I recall that very well. There was a large project, costing $1,700,000, but there was a partial project under which we could try it out and determine whether or not it was worth while, which would cost only $400,000 and which would be complete in itself, and we did what I think any judicious committee would do. Instead of recommending the whole $1,700,000 we recommended a divisible portion of it—$400,000—with the intention of going on with that.

It may be, as I stated here half an hour ago, that some new projects slipped in that bill for which appropriations were made which we did not complete, but that was not the general policy, and I think on examination it will appear that none of these were exceptions to the rule. I recall very distinctly at least three or four of them.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will ask the Senator what explanation he has to make about the item for the Falls of the Ohio at Louisville, $314,000, the total cost of which was $1,700,000?

Mr. BURTON. I do not at this moment recall that. We made a rule, which I have already stated, that if the work required more than four years we would not in that bill appropriate the entire amount. We could not make a perfect bill then. Just think of what confronted us. We were struggling along with uncompleted projects, which would cost hundreds of millions of dollars. We gradually worked our way to this policy and came just as near to it as was possible in the bill of 1907. But what did the bill of 1910 do? It threw the results of that labor and of that reform policy to the winds, and went ahead with the old plan of piecemeal appropriations.

I should state something that I did not say the other day, that in addition to the appropriations in this bill $6,000,000 is carried in the sundry civil bill, and I note that it is stated by the House committee, on page 8 of their report, that:

In addition to the items for the old or existing projects, we have added 76 new projects, requiring in all to complete $38,684,700, while only $5,786,829 have been appropriated and authorized in the bill.

A little more than one-seventh of the whole amount. The pending bill is not as bad as the bill of 1910, but it is a continuation of the old policy.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. It would seem that in the consideration of an important appropriation bill, carrying some $53,000,000 for a large number of projects, there should be more than 13 Senators present. That is an unlucky number in any event, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Simmons
Brady	Gallinger	Norris	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	Goff	O'Gorman	Smith, Ga.
Burleigh	Hollis	Oliver	Smoot
Burton	Hughes	Overman	Sterling
Camden	Kenyon	Page	Stone
Catron	Kern	Pomerene	Swanson
Chamberlain	Lane	Ransdell	Thomas
Clarke, Ark.	Lea, Tenn.	Saulsbury	Thornton
Crawford	Lee, Md.	Shafroth	Townsend
Cummins	McCumber	Sheppard	Weeks
Dillingham	Martin, Va.	Shields	Williams

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-eight Senators having answered to the roll call, a quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. JONES, Mr. SHIVELY, Mr. SMITH of Michigan, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. WHITE answered to their names when called.

Mr. CHILTON entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators having answered to the roll call, there is a quorum present.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I wish to call attention again to the policy of this bill in the adoption of certain new projects, and some of those under way.

The largest item adopted in pursuance of an Executive document, which may be said to be initiated in this bill, is for the improvement of the East River and Hell Gate, N. Y. The appropriation in this bill for that purpose is $500,000. The total amount required is $13,400,000. At this rate it would take 27 years to complete it.

It is true it is said in the engineers' report that a portion of this improvement may be made at a time. It is for the enlargement of the channel, which is now 26 feet deep, to a depth of, say, 35 feet; for the removal of rocks; and it has in view, ultimately, the moderation of certain currents in the river.

One of two things is true: If that improvement is a judicious one, it ought to be pushed immediately to completion. If it is an improvement of such a nature that 27 years can be taken for finishing it, so large a project ought not to have been adopted. That is a great stream, forming the boundary line between New York and Brooklyn. Nobody knows what changes will occur there in the next 10 or even in the next 5 years; and under this plan of a great improvement of $13,400,000, if we go on at the rate of $500,000 a year, we will be either failing to do justice to that improvement or we will be working along erroneous lines.

Why, years ago there was an illustration. It was proposed to improve the Missouri River at very great expense, by revetting the banks, and so forth. They kept on with these piecemeal appropriations until finally, in 1902, it was concluded, that it was not worth while at all. What was the result of all those piecemeal appropriations that had been made? Five miles of a stretch of river about 400 miles long had been improved up to a high grade of efficiency and the other 395 miles were left untouched. So, in any improvement of this kind, there is the danger that it will be found in after years that a different form of improvement is necessary, and only a part of it is improved as it should be, or that the improvement will not be pushed to completion as rapidly as it should be.

Mr. RANSDELL——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. RANSDELL. I should like to know if the Congress has not usually followed the advice of the Engineer Corps of the Army in making appropriations for rivers and harbors, and if that is not, at least as a usual thing, a very wise plan for us to pursue?

Mr. BURTON. Oh, I think, generally speaking, that is the case; but Congress has not followed the judgment of the engineers in a number of cases. It has not followed it in all cases in this bill. As regards the relation of the Engineer Corps to the Congress, I desire to say something in the course of my remarks, and I would just as soon anticipate now.

The fact of the matter is that the engineers regard themselves as the servants of Congress. If Congress goes ahead with a certain policy, and pursues that policy for four or five years, whether they agree with it or not, they conform. In your own River and Harbor Congress Gen. Bixby spoke of the fact that the Engineer Corps was established along about 1810, and that in an exceptional degree the officers have regarded themselves as the servants of Congress. Now, if Congress, by a policy represented in different bills, seems disposed to adopt a plan of extravagance; if Congress seems to favor a piecemeal policy, the engineers, regarding themselves as executive officers and the servants of Congress—indeed, their motto is that they should not seek to legislate, but to execute—will subscribe to and follow that policy. My contention is, and I think I can show it, that they have departed very widely from the standards of 10 years ago, indeed, of 7 years ago, and they are not especially to blame for that, because they interpret the action of the Senate and of the House as approving certain lines of policy, and they could not obey the law without doing certain things whether their judgment approved or not. As a result, their whole course in making recommendations is shaped and determined by the policy of Congress, as they understand it.

Mr. RANSDELL. Is it not a fact that the National Waterways Commission, of which the Senator from Ohio was the very distinguished president, in advising Congress about a plan for waterway legislation, laid especial stress upon the valuable service of the Engineer Corps?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. RANSDELL. And recommended, in substance, that we take their advice in making our river and harbor appropriations?

Mr. BURTON. I do not recall the exact language of that recommendation. I should not favor a rule under which Congress would slavishly follow the recommendations of any executive body.

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not mean slavishly, but in substance.

Mr. BURTON. I think I remember what was the occasion of that language—that an attempt was being made to bring into the river and harbor bill many objectionable projects. In my report or memorandum of views in 1910 I set forth ten or a dozen projects contained in the bill that were expressly disapproved by, or at any rate were without the approval of, the engineers. I am happy to say that two or three of them have been abandoned since that time. Why, the Senator from Louisiana remembers, though he was not a Member of the House at the time, how the improvement of the Sabine and Natchez Rivers up to Orange and Beaumont was approved by Congress and an appropriation made; and we are appropriating money for the project now, when in the first report, at least, the engineers expressly condemned it. If there was that language in the report of the National Waterways Commission advising that the engineers' recommendations should be followed, it was largely prompted by the recognition of a disposition on the part of Congress to violate their recommendations in these measures.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL. Just one question that is logical here, if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. RANSDELL. In the appropriation of $500,000 for East River and Hell Gate, included in the pending bill, I will ask if Congress has not religiously followed the advice of the Engineer Corps, and if the engineers, in reporting on that project, did not say that the work under any project adopted must be carried on through a long series of years, that $500,000 a year is what is needed right now, and that the next appropriation ought to be $500,000?

Mr. BURTON. I think that is in the report, but there is a question of policy there that this Congress ought to settle. This Congress ought not to accept any improvement in a locality where changes are as rapid as they are there that will take 27 years to complete. It is a mistaken policy. We can decide that as well as the engineers can decide it. We can not approve our course in doing so.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. In partial answer to the interrogatory of the Senator from Louisiana as to the recommendations of the National Waterways Commission, of which the learned Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] was chairman——

Mr. RANSDELL. And of which the Senator from New Hampshire was a very distinguished member.

Mr. GALLINGER. I thank the Senator. I will venture to ask the Senator if any recommendations as to improving our waterways were made by that commission that were not made after an investigation of the large European projects, and if the suggestion that Congress should follow, as a rule, the recommendations of the Engineer Corps would not apply rather to the large projects than to the innumerable little projects that we find in this bill?

Mr. BURTON. I think so. Of course, that statement was general. The commission had visited Europe, and had noted there how carefully the preliminary work was laid out by the engineer officers in France and in Germany, and they came home with an emphasized idea of the desirability of having the work laid out very thoroughly before it was commenced.

I was saying a few minutes ago that really nobody approves this piecemeal policy; and I want to read some words from the memorandum sent in here by President Taft in the year 1910. That was the first general river and harbor bill after the act of 1907. It was the bill in which, as I say, there was an unfortunate departure from a very much better method. He says:

> The chief defect in the bill is the large number of projects appropriated for and the uneconomical method of carrying on these projects by the appropriation of sums small in comparison to the amounts required to effect completion.
> The figures convincingly establish the fact that this bill makes inadequate provision for too many projects. The total of the bill—$52,000,000—is not unduly large, but the policy of small appropriations with a great many different enterprises without provision for their completion is unwise. It tends to waste, because thus constructed the projects are likely to cost more than if they were left to contractors who were authorized to complete the whole work within a reasonably short time. The appropriation of a small sum lessens the sense of responsibility of those who are to adopt the project and who do not therefore give to their decision the care that they would give if the appropriation or contract involved the full amount needed for completion. Moreover, the appropriation of a comparatively small sum for a doubtful enterprise is thereafter used by its advocates to force further provision for it from Congress on the ground that the investment made is a conclusive recognition of the wisdom of the project, and its continuance becomes a necessity to save the money already spent. This has been called a "piecemeal" policy. It is proposed to remedy this defect by an annual river and harbor bill, but that hardly avoids the objections above cited, for such yearly appropriations are apt to be affected by the state of the Treasury and political exigency.
> If enterprises are to be useful as encouraging means of transportation, they ought to be finished within a reasonable time. The delays in completing them postpone their usefulness and increase their cost. The proper policy, it seems to me, is to determine from the many projects proposed and recommended what are the most important, and then to proceed to complete them with due dispatch, and then to take up others and do the same thing with them.

That is, instead of carrying on 100 projects for 10 years, better carry on 30 and take only three years, then take up a second division from the list, and then a third, managing our public works and making these improvements in a businesslike way.

As I recall, President Taft stated in his memorandum somewhere that at one time it was his intention to veto the bill, but he gives in the following paragraph the reasons why he did not:

> It is now three years since a river and harbor bill was passed. The projects under way are in urgent need of further appropriation for maintenance and continuance, and there is great and justified pressure for many of the new projects provided for by the bill. It has been made clear to me that the failure of the bill thus late in the session would seriously embarrass the constructing engineers. I do not think, therefore, the defects of the bill which I have pointed out will justify the postponement of all this important work; but I do think that in the preparation of the proposed future yearly bills Congress should adopt the reforms above suggested, and that a failure to do so would jusify withholding Executive approval, even though a river and harbor bill fail.

I wish now to go over somewhat briefly the report of 1907. I have already made reference to it in discussions before the Senate; but as the membership of this body changes and as there may be some Senators in attendance here to-day who were not here on the previous discussions of this report, I take the liberty of bringing it up again. Still further, I think the views expressed in that report are worthy of iteration at this time.

That was the largest river and harbor bill ever passed by Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator refers to the river and harbor bill of 1907?

Mr. BURTON. Of 1907. The cash appropriations were $37,108,083; the contracts authorized were $49,954,349, or a total of $87,062,432. The next bill in size, I may say in passing, was the bill of 1896, which carried $72,275,000, in which there was a much smaller proportion of cash appropriations. In that bill there were only $12,659,000 of cash appropriations as against $59,616,000 of continuing contracts.

The next bill in size was the bill of 1902, in which there were cash appropriations of $26,771,000, and contracts authorized of $38,586,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Ohio desires to go on for a time with his address, I shall not interpose any objection. I leave it entirely with him.

Mr. BURTON. I have nearly reached a division in my remarks, and I should prefer to go on at a later time, although if it suits the business of the Senate I can proceed.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator from Ohio wants to finish within an hour, I will yield to him.

Mr. BURTON. I could not finish in that time.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then I would prefer to write another chapter in the unfinished business.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

Mr. CUMMINS. Yesterday, Mr. President, I called the attention of the Senate to many analogous phrases occurring in the statutes of many States. When I say analogous, I mean analogous to the phrase used in section 5 of the bill, namely, "unfair competition." I do not desire to review or to recapitulate my argument of yesterday, as I had finished that phase of its presentation.

Since the adjournment, however, there have been called to my attention two additional instances of the use of such words in statutes prescribing a rule of conduct—or, rather, one instance in a statute and another in a decree—which I think I ought to bring to the attention of the Senate.

The first instance is found in the statutes of New York in the laws of 1910, chapter 374, article 11. It reads as follows:

> Every person operating a motor vehicle on a public highway of this State shall drive the same in a careful and prudent manner, and at a rate of speed so as not to endanger the property of another or the life or limb of any person: Provided, That a rate of speed of 30 miles an hour for a distance of one-fourth of a mile shall be presumptive evidence of driving at a rate of speed which is not careful and prudent.

Section 290 of the laws to which I have referred prescribes a penalty for a violation of the provision I have just read. It has been sustained in the courts of New York as fixing a rule sufficiently certain to guide those who might be affected by it. It was first passed upon in People v. Winston (155 Appellate Division New York, 907). It was again passed upon in the court of appeals in Baker v. Close (204 New York, 92); and in the latter case the court said:

> Both pedestrians and drivers of motor vehicles are required to exercise that degree of prudence and care which the conditions demand. It is impossible—> to formulate any more precise definition of these relative rights and duties.

Mr. President, if it is sufficient to say to the people who are to be affected by a law that they must drive a motor vehicle in a careful and prudent manner, it would seem to me to be sufficient to prescribe for those engaged in trade that they must not practice unfair competition, in view of the many applications those words have already had and the many instances in which they have been applied both by courts and commissions in the general literature of commerce.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was not privileged to hear the Senator's discussion yesterday, being occupied in a committee of conference. I looked in the RECORD this morning to read what the Senator said, but the speech not having being concluded did not appear.

I have been troubled over the phrase "unfair competition," and have wondered how it could be worked out. Am I correctly informed, I will ask the Senator, that there is no appeal provided for in the bill from a finding against a corporation or an individual who is charged with unfairly competing in matters of trade?

Mr. CUMMINS. I assume the Senator means an appeal to the court.

Mr. GALLINGER. To the court.

Mr. CUMMINS. The section provides that if the commission upon inquiry and hearing finds that any corporation is practicing unfair competition it shall enter an order restraining or commading the corporation to cease to practice the methods which have been condemned.

Mr. GALLINGER. So that—

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a moment; I have not fully answered.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the corporation does not obey the order of the commission then there must be an appeal to the court, because the commission has no process and could be given no process which will enable it to compel obedience.

The section then provides that the commission in that event shall file a petition in the district court of the United States, and the court is given authority to issue an injunction to enforce the order of the commission if, it may be implied, the court believes that the order was properly made.

Mr. GALLINGER. The further question I will propound I ought to be able to answer for myself, and I would be able if I had read the bill as carefully as I ought to have done; but, as the Senator knows, we have all been very busy, and I was absent from the city two weeks.

Then, I take it, the modus is that a clerk, an inspector, or some other official from the commission created in the bill can go into any establishment. The Senator says "corporation." I take it he could go into a store, could be not, and ask that the books should be laid out before him? He would examine them, and he would come to the conclusion that there was unfair competition as between that merchant or that manufacturer and his competitors. Then the report would be made to the commission, I judge. Am I correct?

Mr. CUMMINS. In the case suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire it would be the commission making the inquiry. There is no other person given any authority to make an inquiry save the commission.

Mr. GALLINGER. The commission, then, determines whether or not the complaint is well grounded?

Mr. CUMMINS. Will the Senator from New Hampshire permit me to read the section?

Mr. GALLINGER. I will be very glad to have the Senator read it.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is as follows:

> Whenever the commission shall have reason to believe that any corporation has been or is using any unfair method of competition in commerce, it shall issue and serve upon such corporation a written order, at least 30 days in advance of the time set therein for hearing, directing it to appear before the commission and show cause why an order shall not be issued by the commission restraining and prohibiting it from using such method of competition.

Then follows the procedure that I have already indicated.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is very explicit, and to my mind it means that a merchant in the city of Seattle or San Francisco can be summoned before the commission at Washington to answer to these charges, and the commission can reach any conclusion it pleases and can impose any penalty that it pleases upon that particular individual without the right of appeal. It looks to me as though it is going to be a very troublesome thing, and that it will impose great hardships in many instances. But perhaps it is wise legislation. I was inquiring for information merely.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator from New Hampshire has rather exaggerated the power of the commission. It can not enter upon the examination of the affairs of any individual. It can not impose any penalty that it desires. All these things are provided for in the proposed law. Its power and its jurisdiction——

Mr. GALLINGER. Then I have very likely been laboring under a misapprehension. I thank the Senator for correcting me, and I will turn my attention diligently to a consideration of the bill, which, as I said in the beginning, I have not done. I had supposed that this was to be an inquisitorial commission; that it could enter any establishment and examine the books, and a finding could be reached, and that in some way, if it should be found that he was unfairly competing, would be punished. If he is not to be punished of course the law does not amount to anything.

Mr. CUMMINS. He is to be punished if he refuses to obey the order of the commission.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the Senator from New Hampshire will agree with me that he ought to be punished.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes; if he is violating a law. If he is engaged in a competition with his neighbor that is not very serious, I should think it very doubtful whether he ought to be subjected to all these inconveniences. The fact is we are all in favor of what is known as fair competition, but just what fair competition is I think it will be very difficult for any court or any commission to determine.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely; but that was the subject of my discussion yesterday, very largely. It is difficult to determine what unfair competition is. It is difficult to determine whether a man is guilty of murder, or manslaughter, or any other offense. When you come to apply the law to a particular state of facts, it is not an easy thing, and it is still more difficult when we are entering upon a comparatively new field. But the Senator from New Hampshire is opposed to unfair competition. Now, unfair competition does not mean severe competition. It means in the fight for business exactly what it means in a physical encounter. The Senator from New Hampshire would know exactly what I meant if I said that a fight was a fair fight; I mean now a physical one. He would know that I meant that neither one of the antagonists had equipped himself with brass knuckles, or a club, or any other unfair weapon that would enable him to take undue advantage over his adversary. We all understand these things. They are as definite and specific as the law can be. It is difficult to tell when we say that a man must exercise reasonable care what that reasonable care is. It differs under varying conditions, and indeed it differs with the views of different courts, but we must employ these phrases if we are to reach the result.

To the Senator from New Hampshire I think I may say further this bill does confer upon the commission the most extensive inquisitorial powers, not alone with regard to the practice of unfair competition, but with regard to all the violations of the antitrust law. It goes far in that respect. It goes further in that respect in one or two instances than I think it ought to go. But in the main there must be this right of visitation upon the corporations of the country, and we are really transferring to the Federal Government the right of visitation which has from time immemorial existed in the sovereignty which creates the corporation. Although we have put it in many words, in many different ways, it really means that as to corporations engaged in commerce which is commerce among the States or with foreign nations, the Federal Government shall have the same right to inquire into their affairs as does the Government which created them.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just a word more. It seems to me that this will be a mighty machine that we are going to create and put in the hands of the Federal Government, to supervise all the activities of the American people. I wonder how large an army of employees will be required to do that work.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think there has been no estimate upon that, but not considerably larger than the force now employed in the Bureau of Corporations. The Bureau of Corporations ceases to exist and its powers and duties are transferred to this commission. While I think it will require more employees than are now employed by the Bureau of Corporations, my opinion is that they will not greatly exceed in number the men who are now engaged in a similar work. Added to that, of course, is the commission itself, with its immediate office employees.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. It seems to me the Senator from New Hampshire is laboring under a mistaken impression that these powers are given to the commission to be exercised over individuals, whereas, as I understand it, and I ask the Senator from Iowa whether I understand it correctly or not, the powers here given would only apply to unfair competition by corporations or by trade associations having capital stock paid in.

Mr. CUMMINS. The entire bill relates to corporations; that is, corporations, trade associations, and corporate combinations, and there is no power given to the commission over an individual as such, either for the purpose of ascertaining whether there has been a violation of the antitrust law or whether there has been a violation of the new substantive law which we are now proposing to enact.

However, I must be entirely candid about it. I think it does give to the commission power to investigate the relation of an individual or a person to a corporation which is engaged in commerce and whose activities are being supervised by the commission. In that way, and in that way alone, is the commission given authority to investigate the business of an individual.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is a mere incident to the investigation for the purpose of issuing their orders against the corporation.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is a mere incident. We have not attempted to deal with persons as such engaged in commerce among the States. I think we ought to do it. I made an earnest effort before the committee to include persons within the scope of this law exactly as they are included within the scope of the antitrust law. That does not reach for corporations alone. It covers all persons who may restrain trade or commerce or who may attempt to monopolize or who do in fact monopolize any trade.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that in the hurried reading of the bill I came to the conclusion that what the Senator states as to individuals, in their relation to corporations, is correct, and that it does to that extent reach individuals.

Mr. CUMMINS. It does.

Mr. GALLINGER. I quite agree with the Senator in his suggestion that to be consistent and to make this a complete law it ought to apply to individuals as well as corporations.

I only want to thank the Senator for giving me the information he has done, and to say that I did not raise the question I did because I am opposed to the bill. I have not considered it sufficiently to determine what attitude I shall take concerning it when I come to vote upon it; and I want, so far as my time permits, to listen to the arguments that will be made in the Chamber covering the various phases of this very important measure, as I regard it.

Mr. WORKS. Mr President——

Mr. CUMMINS. Just a moment. I agree with the last remark. We are considering one of the most important proposals of legislation that ever came before the Senate, a proposal that will affect more phases of the business life of the United States than any other bill that has been pending in the Senate for years. I remark that simply to express my wonder that there are not more of the Senators who seem to be interested in this vital matter. It seems to be taken for granted that the bill will either be voted up or voted down without any real knowledge of its scope, purpose, or effect upon the part of the greater number of the Senators in this Chamber. Possibly that is due to the vicious practice which now obtains of determining legislation in caucus rather than in open and fair debate.

I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I merely wanted to suggest that if the Senator is right in his construction that the bill does not apply to private individuals engaged in trade, I think it should be made a little clearer in that respect, because I have formed a different opinion about it. I think in some places in the bill partnerships are mentioned——

Mr. CUMMINS. I think not.

Mr. WORKS. Though I may be mistaken about that. I agree with the Senator from Iowa that this is a most important piece of legislation. I have been endeavoring to make a study of the whole trust legislation to satisfy my own mind about it, and it is no easy task. It involves some very vital questions affecting the business of the country and the people generally, and it seems to me to be too bad that Senators should not be here listening to what is said on the subject.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not want my response to the suggestion of the Senator from California to be misunderstood with regard to the effect of the bill upon partnerships or individuals. I think we ought to make that perfectly clear now. In the first section of the bill the term "corporation" is defined as follows:

The term "corporation" or "corporations" shall include joint-stock associations and all other associations having shares of capital or capital stock, organized to carry on business for profit.

Then, after the creation of the commission and providing for its employees, we come to that part of the bill which gives the power. The first paragraph of that section reads in this way:

(a) To investigate from time to time, and as often as the commission may deem advisable, the organization, business, financial condition, conduct, practices, and management, of any corporation engaged in commerce, and its relation—to other corporations and to individuals, associations, and partnerships.

That is, the relation of that corporation—

Such is the language of the bill, and its scope can be easily ascertained or determined from that very clear language.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES. I rise to a point of order. I agree with the Senator from Iowa as to the importance of this measure, and I think we ought to have more nearly a quorum present. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brady	Hitchcock	Overman	Smith, Ga.
Bristow	Hughes	Page	Smith, Mich.
Bryan	Jones	Pittman	Smoot
Burton	Kenyon	Poindexter	Swanson
Camden	Kern	Ransdell	Thomas
Clapp	Lane	Reed	Thompson
Clarke, Ark.	Lea, Tenn.	Shafroth	Thornton
Cummins	Lippitt	Sheppard	Warren
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Shields	White
Gallinger	Newlands	Simmons	Works
Goff	O'Gorman	Smith, Ariz.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-three Senators having answered to the roll call, there is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. STERLING and Mr. STONE answered to their names.

Subsequently Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, Mr. SHIVELY, and Mr. LEE of Maryland entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. JONES. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington moves that the Senate adjourn. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to have it. The noes have it, and the Senate refuses to adjourn.

Mr. LEWIS entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators having answered to the roll call, there is a quorum present. The Senator from Iowa will proceed.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. WORKS. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa to subdivision (g) of section 3 of the bill, which provides:

(g) If the commission believes from its inquiries and investigations, instituted upon its own initiative or at the suggestion of the President, the Attorney General, or either House of Congress, that any corporation, individual, association, or partnership has violated any law of the United States regulating commerce, it shall report its findings and the evidence in relation thereto to the Attorney General with its recommendations.

I wish also to call the Senator's attention to the following language of section 5:

That unfair competition in commerce is hereby declared unlawful.

Does not the Senator from Iowa think that those two provisions bring individuals and partnerships under the jurisdiction of the commission for the reason that "unfair competition" is made unlawful? If it should be found that individuals are violating that provision of the bill, it seems to me that that matter would be within their jurisdiction. The commission are not only authorized but they are required to report as to the facts, with their recommendations.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not of that opinion, Mr. President, but I think the bill ought to be as the Senator from California thinks it is. In paragraph (g), to which the Senator refers, there is no jurisdiction conferred; the jurisdiction is given in the paragraph which I before read; and I do not believe there is any power of inquiry as such save as to corporations and the relation of individuals and partnerships to corporations. In regard to section 5, the first sentence would seem to include partnerships and persons; but when we come to the jurisdiction of the commission the language is:

Whenever the commission shall have reason to believe that any corporation has been or is using any unfair method of competition in commerce, it shall—proceed in the way suggested.

Mr. WORKS. I think the Senator from Iowa did not quite understand the point I made. I was taking together subdivision (g) and the first clause of the fifth section. I concede the Senator is right so far only as section 5 is concerned, that it is confined to corporations and associations; but this particular subdivision authorizes the commission to report, at least if investigations are made, whether an individual has violated any provision not only of this bill, but of any law of the United States. Therefore, in that way, the individual is certainly brought under their jurisdiction. I think the Senator is right in saying that under the first provision giving them express authority, it is limited to corporations and associations. That is the reason, if the Senator will allow me, why I suggested that the bill ought to be made more certain in that respect.

Mr. CUMMINS. Possibly the distinction between my statement and that of the Senator from California is not very important, but I repeat that the commission is given power to investigate corporations and trade associations and combinations; it is given power to inquire into the relation which an individual or a partnership may bear to a corporation or to a trade association or combination. It is not given the power to inquire into the affairs of an individual, partnership, or person as such, but if, in the course of the investigation that is carried on lawfully, it has reason to believe or reaches the opinion that an individual or a partnership has violated the antitrust law or any other law of the United States, it is then made its duty to report its findings upon that subject to the Attorney General.

There is no doubt that the language of this bill could be bettered in some respects. It covers a subject so complicated, instances so varying, that it is beyond the power of any one man or any committee to so guard every expression that it will include precisely what is intended and exclude everything that is intended to be excluded. It is for that reason, while the committee has bestowed upon the bill, I was about to say, infinite care and patience, while the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], has given to the subject an extent and depth of study which, I think, can not be equaled by any other Senator in this body with reference to any other subject which we may be called upon to consider, yet every Senator ought to be studying this bill and bringing to bear upon it his own observations and his own experience, in order that defects, which are undoubtedly in the bill, may be remedied and amended.

Mr. WORKS. I did not make the suggestion because I believe that individuals ought to be excluded from the provisions of the bill. I agree with the Senator from Iowa that there is no reason why an individual engaged in the same kind of trade as is a corporation shall not be treated just the same as is the individual in this respect.

Mr. CUMMINS. That has always been my opinion.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator from Iowa has just stated that if, in the investigation of the affairs of a corporation and its relation to a certain individual investigated, it is discovered that that individual had been guilty of some practices condemned by the law the commission would so report; but is the commission given any authority to punish an individual under such circumstances or can an individual violate the provisions of the existing antitrust law?

Mr. CUMMINS. An individual can violate the antitrust law.

Mr. HUGHES. Can an individual violate this proposed law?

Mr. CUMMINS. An individual can violate the law which we here propose to add to the antitrust law, namely, the prohibition against unfair competition, but the commission is not given any power to proceed for unfair competition against the individual.

Mr. HUGHES. Then what would be the purpose and what would be the effect of the report which the Senator has suggested the commission may make?

Mr. CUMMINS. In order that the Attorney General might proceed against the individual under the antitrust law, which does cover individuals. The commission is intended to be an aid to the office of the Attorney General, to enable him to administer or to enforce the antitrust law with greater efficiency than is possible under the present system.

Mr. HUGHES. That is with reference both to corporations and to individuals?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. HUGHES. But with reference to corporations, the commission acts of its own motion to a certain extent.

Mr. CUMMINS. In the bill as it is now framed it does with regard to unfair competition. I have, and will presently offer to the Senate, five or six amendments which are intended to enlarge the power of the commission so as to cover the interlocking-directorate evil and the holding-company evil to a greater degree than those evils are now covered by the antitrust law; but, as the bill is now before the Senate, the substantive work of the commission—I mean aside from its inquiries in order to develop violations of the antitrust law—is to prevent unfair competition and to aid the courts, when a finding has been in favor of the United States, in formulating the proper decree to bring the offending corporation or person into harmony with the law. Such, as I understand it, is the function of the commission as the bill now is.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SIMMONS. As I understand the Senator, then, the provision declaring that unfair competition is unlawful applies equally to everybody?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is perfectly evident that it does from the wording.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then the power of the commission to institute an investigation with a view to issuing an order against the corporation offending against the statute is full and complete?

Mr. CUMMINS. I look upon it in that way.

Mr. SIMMONS. It can call a corporation before it; it can examine the books of the corporation; it can subject the members of the corporation to the process of interrogation with reference to their business, and, having finished its investigation of a corporation, it can make an order enjoining it from further continuing the practice of that method of competition.

With reference to the individual the commission is given the power to make an inquiry, but it is not given the inquisitorial power of bringing the individual before it and subjecting the individual to an examination; it is not given the power of commanding the individual to produce his books; it is only given the power to make an investigation, and to report the result of that investigation; and then the ordinary process of the law would be applied by the Attorney General against that offending individual. Is not that the distinction?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from North Carolina has stated it correctly if one very important additional suggestion is made, which is this: Section 3 gives to the commission the right to investigate the relation of any individual or partnership to a corporation, which itself is under investigation; but to just what extent the bill would give to the commission the right to enter the office of an individual or begin an inquiry into his private affairs, I do not desire to say; I do not want to commit myself upon that point. That has been one of the objections made to the bill, that it did give the right to inquire too closely into the affairs of an individual.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is the Senator referring to subsection (a) or subsection (b)?

Mr. CUMMINS. Subsection (a) of section 3, and subsection (b) relates to the same matter.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think if the Senator will examine subsection (b) very carefully, he will discover that while that subsection authorizes the commission to make an investigation into the affairs of corporations, it rather carefully refrains from authorizing a like investigation into the affairs of individuals.

Mr. CUMMINS. Except as to their relation to a corporation.

Mr. SIMMONS. Except as to the corporation's relation to the individual. The examination of the corporation's books and its records may be with a view of ascertaining its relation to the individual, but there is no authority there to make any investigation of the books of the individual to ascertain the relation of the individual to the corporation.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from North Carolina may be right about that; but I do not think it is at all material to the question I am discussing, and I will not pursue it. For myself I have never been at all alarmed about an inquiry into the affairs of an individual if it were found that he bore a relation to a trade association or corporation that is charged with a violation of the law. I think we have reached a time when we must enlarge the power of the Government over its citizens in order to be sure that we can effectively enforce the law. However, that is not the point that I have now under consideration, although it is a point that ought to arouse interest here; for if the bill is not right in that respect, some Senator ought to offer an amendment to it; but, as we are now proceeding, it is not likely that a half a dozen Senators or more than that number will ever hear the point suggested by the Senator from North Carolina and enforced by him with such cogency of reasoning.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES. I merely want to see if I get the position of the Senator from North Carolina correctly. Does the Senator from North Carolina contend that the commission can, independently of an investigation of a corporation, inquire into the fact as to whether or not an individual is practicing unfair competition? Independent of any examination with reference to a corporation, can the commission start out to examine into the question as to whether or not some individual is guilty of unfair competition?

Mr. SIMMONS. The commission, as I understand, is authorized by the section referred to a few moments ago—subsection (b), I think; I will find it in a moment——

Mr. CUMMINS. Manifestly, Mr. President, the commission can not do that.

Mr. JONES. That is my understanding; but I understood the Senator from North Carolina to make that statement a moment ago.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator altogether misunderstood me.

Mr. JONES. I want to get it clear.

Mr. SIMMONS. The statement which I made was, that under the section authorizing an investigation by the commission for the purpose of ascertaining whether an individual, as well as a corporation, had violated the law it did not have the power to make an investigation of the books of the individual; it did not have the power to call the individual before it and subject him to a cross-examination as to his method of carrying on business, as it does have when it is proceeding under section 5 against a corporation.

Mr. JONES. The Senator made the statement there which he made a while ago that gave me the impression that he contended that the commission could investigate the methods of a corporation and also of the individual; but that, instead of using its direct power against the individual, it had to report to the Attorney General with reference to him. Now, I want to get the position of the Senator from North Carolina as to whether or not he believes that the commission can make an independent inquiry with reference to an individual?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. JONES. Under what authority does the Senator so contend?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not find that section—I had my hand on it a moment ago.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from North Carolina will look in vain for that.

Mr. JONES. That is what I wanted to find out.

Mr. SIMMONS. If I can lay my hands on the section——

Mr. CUMMINS. Possibly the Senator is referring to subsection (g).

Mr. SIMMONS. I was referring to the section which authorizes the commission to make an investigation—here it is, subsection (g):

(g) If the commission believes from its inquiries and investigations, instituted upon its own initiative or at the suggestion of the President, the Attorney General, or either House of Congress, that any corporation, individual, association, or partnership has violated any law of the United States regulating commerce, it shall report its findings and the evidence in relation thereto to the Attorney General with its recommendations.

Mr. JONES. Does the Senator contend that under that provision, independent of any suggestion from the President or the Attorney General, the commission is empowered to start an independent investigation against an individual to see whether or not he is guilty of unfair practices, or whether it can do so only when it develops in a principal inquiry against a corporation that the individual has been guilty of such practices?

Mr. SIMMONS. I think that the commission may do it upon its own initiative.

Mr. JONES. If I understand the Senator from Iowa, he contends to the contrary.

Mr. SIMMONS. The provision reads:

(g) If the commission believes from its inquiries and investigations, instituted upon its own initiative or at the suggestion of the President——

Mr. CUMMINS. But, Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator from North Carolina that he overlooks the governing words of that paragraph?

If the commission believes from its inquiries—

What inquiries? Those that it has been authorized to initiate—and investigations—

What investigations? Those that it may lawfully carry forward; and the bill expressly provides that such inquiries and investigations can only be made of a corporation.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think clearly that is the qualification.

Mr. CUMMINS. And the only way in which the commission can be led into an investigation of the affairs of an individual is through the relation of the individual to the corporation under investigation.

Mr. SIMMONS. Or upon the request——

Mr. CUMMINS. Oh, no. The request of the Attorney General or of the President or either House of Congress must be a request for an investigation within the powers of the commission.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is right about that.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I do not quite understand how the Senator from Iowa arrives at that last conclusion. There is nothing in the bill to indicate it, to my mind. There is express authority given to the commission in the beginning, as the Senator says, but there evidently is at least inferential authority given to the President to call upon this commission to make such investigations as he may desire to have made.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think not.

Mr. SIMMONS. I call the Senator's attention to the word "or" there.

(g) If the commission believes from its inquiries and investigations, instituted upon its own initiative or instituted at the suggestion of the President—

The second word, "instituted," in line 19, is not in the bill, but I read it, because I think it is implied.

Mr. CUMMINS. But all the while the powers of the commission must be invoked. They can be invoked either upon its own initiative or upon the request of the President, of the Attorney General, or of either House of Congress, but subsection (g) does not confer, as I read it and believe it to be, any independent or substantive power upon the commission.

I regard that, however, as a very unimportant point; and I now recall the Senate to the argument that I was endeavoring to make when diverted by the Senator from New Hampshire—very properly diverted, because I am sure the discussion that has been carried on since will be helpful.

Mr. GOFF. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. GOFF. Before the Senator from Iowa proceeds to the discussion of other points, knowing as I do that he has investigated the matter carefully, and having listened as I have intently to his argument, and especially to his reply to the inquiry of the Senator from New Hampshire, I desire to ask him whether it is his contention that if a corporation should be found guilty of unfair competition and inhibited by the commission from further proceeding, and, failing to comply, is brought into the district court, that is a method of appeal, in substance?

Mr. CUMMINS. No. We reach there a very interesting and difficult question. I am not satisfied with the language of the section in that respect.

Mr. GOFF. I am glad to hear the Senator say so.

Mr. CUMMINS. Possibly, however, my dissatisfaction springs from a conclusion in which the Senator from West Virginia would not concur.

I believe the order of the commission in such an instance should be given precisely the same effect, when brought under review by a court, as is given under the interstate-commerce law to an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission fixing a railroad rate; that the court ought not to review the merits of the order entered by the commission, but that it should be able to review the jurisdiction of the commission. If it finds that the order was made without authority, if it finds that it contravenes any constitutional right of the corporation, if it finds that the action was arbitrary, and such other things as the Supreme Court has laid down as affecting the finality of an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission, then the injunction to enforce the order would not issue; but if it finds affirmatively these things which we understand to be always within the power and jurisdiction of a court, then the injunction ought to issue. That has been my opinion.

Mr. GOFF. Have we in our legislation any other instance in which that has been the practice, other than the citation which the Senator made?

Mr. CUMMINS. Not of just that kind. We have had very many instances in which courts have refused to review the discretion of an administrative officer. When the President of the United States issues his proclamation that a certain event has occurred upon which a certain tariff duty is to be levied, the courts will not review the decision of the President. They will not review the judgment of the Secretary of War when he has declared that a certain obstruction in a navigable stream is an unreasonable obstruction to commerce. Those cases, however, are simply analogous; they are not exactly parallel; and I do not know of any other instance precisely similar to that I have quoted.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. This is a very important measure—a Democratic measure. I observe there are just two Senators present on the Democratic side—one with his back to the Presiding Officer and the other paying attention to what the Senator from Iowa is saying. I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. SIMMONS. Some of the Democratic Senators are over on the other side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the folowing Senators answered to their names:

Brady	Goff	Norris	Smith, Md.
Bryan	Hughes	O'Gorman	Smith, Mich.
Burton	Jones	Oliver	Smoot
Camden	Kenyon	Page	Sterling
Catron	Kern	Pittman	Thomas
Chamberlain	Lane	Ransdell	Thompson
Chilton	Lea, Tenn.	Shafroth	Thornton
Clapp	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	Warren
Cummins	McCumber	Simmons	White
Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.	Works
Gallinger	Newlands	Smith, Ga.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. OVERMAN and Mr. WALSH answered to their names.

Mr. BANKHEAD, Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas, Mr. DILLINGHAM, Mr. STONE, and Mr. SHIVELY entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. A quorum is present.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, again returning to the consideration of the sufficiency of the phrase "unfair competition," I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate a decree that was entered by the circuit court of the United States under the antitrust act. This decree was entered in the case of the United States against The General Electric Co.

I suppose it will be assumed that a phrase that is sufficient in a decree intended to guide the future conduct of the defendant or defendants, and to subject them to punishment for contempt if they violate the decree, might be fairly held to be sufficient if used in a law intended to guide the conduct of our citizens.

I read a single paragraph from the decree:

And provided further, That nothing in this decree—

Now, mark you, it prescribed certain specific things that might be done and certain specific things that were not to be done, and then concluded in this language:

And provided further, That nothing in this decree shall be taken in any respect to enjoin or restrain fair, free, and open competition.

What is "fair competition"? Evidently the court understood what it was, or it would not have prescribed it as a standard by which to test the future conduct of the defendants in that case. We all understand it; and if we understand what "fair competition" means, we necessarily understand what "unfair competition" means.

I have now concluded the review of the analogous phrases and words that have been used in statutes throughout the country. All these instances show, and, as it seems to me, show beyond any reasonable doubt—and there again I use a phrase of the law which is quite as uncertain as "unfair competition," but which every Senator who hears me understands perfectly—that when we put upon the business of this country the prescription that it must not indulge in "unfair competition," we have given it as safe and as certain and as complete a guide as it is possible to give it.

I now desire to look into some of the authorities that have been mentioned in the course of the debate; and, first, with regard to the case that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] used a few days ago, and used as though he thought it was conclusive on this question; used it with a wealth of sarcasm and denunciation that apparently left no doubt in his mind that he had completely demolished the section which has been presented with so much care by the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS].

The case he brought to the attention of the Senate, and upon which he founded the argument that he believed to be so conclusive, is that of Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. McChord, reported in One hundred and third Federal Reporter, beginning at page 216. The opinion in the case seems to have been written by Judge Evans, a judge of the district court of that State.

The first remark I desire to make with regard to this case is that within a short time thereafter the decision rendered by Judge Evans was reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States—reversed with all its reasoning; reversed in all its respects. I do not know whether the Senator from Missouri was aware when he presented the opinion to the Senate and to the country that it had been repudiated by the highest judicial tribunal in the land. I assume that he was not aware of the fact; otherwise he would have referred to it in some fashion.

Even if I were to assume that the expressions of Judge Evans's views with regard to certain phases of the law were correct, I should still be of the mind that the words "unfair competition" were sufficient in the law to prescribe a rule of conduct. Let us see, however, just what the case was; and I intend to read a few paragraphs from the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States which set aside the opinion rendered by the district judge.

Kentucky passed a statute which declared that to charge unreasonable rates was extortion and a crime. A railroad company was indicted under that statute. The Supreme Court of Kentucky held that the statute was insufficient to sustain a criminal prosecution, because it was uncertain; that it was not tolerable to try a railroad company for a criminal offense because it charged more than a jury might find to be a reasonable rate, and to decide that therefore it was guilty of the crime of extortion. That was the law originally in Kentucky. The court of appeals, or the highest judicial tribunal of that State, so determined. Then the State passed a law conferring upon its commission—of which Mr. McChord, now a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, became a member—the power to determine what was a reasonable rate or charge that a railway company might lawfully make, and in that way connected the work of the commission with the statute which attempted to punish extortion in the exaction of an unreasonable rate.

Such was the statute when the suit was brought by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad against Mr. McChord, a member of the commission. It was a suit in the courts of the United States to restrain the commissioners of the State of Kentucky from carrying into effect the railroad law of Kentucky, which substantially gave to the commission the right to determine what constituted a reasonable rate; and it was in that suit Judge Evans delivered the views which were read with so much emphasis and apparent satisfaction by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

I shall not reread those paragraphs of Judge Evans's opinion, but come immediately to the same case in the Supreme Court of the United States. It will be found in One hundred and eighty-three United States, at page 483. There were several railroad companies which took the same view of the law, and their cases were combined in this hearing. The opinion was delivered by Chief Justice Fuller, and the sole question was whether the railroad commissioners of Kentucky should be restrained from executing the commission law of Kentucky; and the commission law of Kentucky was precisely as recited by Judge Evans in the opinion read by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, do I understand that the commission had a right to say what was a reasonable rate?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes; it did.

Mr. HUGHES. And that if the railroad then charged more than that rate, a criminal action for extortion could be maintained?

Mr. CUMMINS. It constituted extortion.

Mr. HUGHES. And the railroad sought to restrain the commission from establishing a reasonable rate?

Mr. CUMMINS. From fixing a reasonable rate.

Reading the various sections of the General Statutes of Kentucky, set forth in the statement preceding this opinion, as in pari materia with the act of March 10, 1900, which should be done since they are parts of one system, having the same general objects in view, we think it apparent that the duty devolves on the commission to enforce the rates it may fix under the latter act. By section 816 extortion was defined to be charging more than a just and reasonable rate. Section 817 defined unjust discrimination and section 818 forbade undue or unreasonable preference.

Section 819 denounced the same penalties on conviction of the offense of extortion, or of unjust discrimination, or of unreasonable preference—

I pause there a moment. What is an "unreasonable preference"? If there be a man who can find in that a surer or a safer standard of action than "unfair competition" I should like to hear his reasons for believing one to be less vague than the other—and provided for prosecution by indictment, or by action in the name of the Commonwealth, on information filed by the board of railroad commissioners—

Now, mark you, the provision of the statute of the State of Kentucky had been held unconstitutional by the supreme court, or the court of errors and appeals—I do not remember which—of Kentucky, because there had been no intervention of the finding of the commission, because at that time the commission had not been given the power to declare what constituted a reasonable rate, or an unjust preference, or an undue discrimination; but afterwards the statute was amended and the commission was given this power, and it was to enjoin the commissioners from the exercise of that power that the suit decided by Judge Evans was brought, and the decree was reviewed in the case from which I am now reading. I proceed—that the railroad companies should be liable in damages to the party aggrieved, and also that prosecution by indictment should only be had on the recommendation or request of the railroad commission.

By section 829 the commission was empowered to hear and determine complaints under sections 816, 817, and 818, and to enforce their awards in the courts.

Just exactly as we propose here to enforce the provision. We have made no provision for enforcing it criminally, but the section as it now stands makes a provision for enforcing it in the courts just as the statute did in Kentucky.

The duty was imposed on the commission to initiate indictments under section 820 for charging greater compensation in the aggregate for a shorter than for a longer haul.

* * * * * * *

In Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. v. Commonwealth (99 Ky., 132), this section was considered. The court held that the section could not be enforced as a penal statute for want of certainty, and said:

"That this statute leaves uncertain what shall be deemed a 'just and reasonable rate of toll or compensation,' can not be denied, and that different juries might reach different conclusions on the same testimony as to whether or not an offense has been committed must also be conceded."

I need not read further from the opinion of the Kentucky Court of Appeals.

Such being the state of the law—

Says the Supreme Court—

the act of March 10, 1900, was passed.

The mischief to be cured in respect of extortion as defined by section 816 was the want of certainty, and the remedy provided was the fixing of the rates by the railroad commission.

In so providing, the act, while repeating many of the provisions of section 819, did, indeed, omit reference to an action by way of information, and to liability in damages, and it also omitted the provision that indictments should be made only on the recommendation or request of the railroad commission; but it does not, therefore, follow that it was the legislative intention, without any expression thereof in terms, to repeal so important a provision.

Then the court proceeds to consider whether those provisions of the Kentucky statute were repealed and comes to the conclusion that they were not.

In the construction of statutes the cardinal aim of the court is to arrive at the intention of the legislature. The court will presume that the legislature meant something by all the provisions of the statute and will endeavor to give them all a fair effect.

"A fair effect." Again we have the counterpart of the words we have used in this proposed statute. The court finally concludes its opinion in this language:

The result of these considerations is that the duty of enforcing its rates rests on the commission, and that none of the consequences alleged to be threatened can be set up as the basis of equity interposition before the rates are fixed at all. Whether after they are determined their enforcement can be restrained is a question not arising for decision on this record, and we are not called on to dispose of other contentions of grave importance, which were pressed in argument, as if now requiring adjudication.

Of course, if the commission in fixing the rate were to fix it so unreasonably low as to invade the constitutional rights of the railroad companies, the action of the commission would be, in the nature of things, restrained. Finally the court says:

Decrees reversed and cases remanded to the circuit court with a direction to sustain the demurrers and dismiss the bills.

And so ended, so far as I know, the case, and the only case cited here to show that the words "unfair competition" are not sufficient in the law to warrant their application by a commission.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask the Senator from Iowa whether or not he has in his collection of cases the case of Buttfield against Stranahan, reported in One hundred and ninety-second United States?

Mr. CUMMINS. I have it before me, and I presently intend to read from it.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. If the Senator will allow me, that case served to clear up in my own mind certain doubts about the question so earnestly and so plausibly argued by Senators who take a view different from that now being presented by the Senator from Iowa. It seems to me that that case gives a rule which, further extended along the lines of its own direction, can be adapted to all kindred situations that may hereafter present themselves. The rule laid down in that case seems to me to put absolutely beyond rational controversy the validity of the term employed in this bill, and that Congress may validly legislate as far as is practicable and then remit to an executive officer or board the duty and power of supplying such details as are necessary to bring about the major result pointed out by the statute.

As I got some help from that case myself, I believe I will read a short extract from the opinion therein. Let me say of the legislation involved in that case that it was a much more vague direction than the one contained in the pending bill. It was directed against the importers of inferior tea. The language of the act was that it should be unlawful—— to import or bring into the United States any merchandise as tea which is inferior in purity, quality, and fitness for consumption to the standards provided in section 3 of this act, and the importation of all such merchandise is hereby prohibited.

Section 2 provides for the appointment by the Secretary of the Treasury, immediately after the passage of the act and on or before February 15 of each subsequent year, of the board of tea experts, "who shall prepare and submit to him standard samples of tea" which were not inferior in purity. Nothing could more depend upon the whim and mere personal opinion of the particular board than that exercised in the finding and declaration there required; yet the court realized the necessity of enforcing some such law as that, intending thereby to remedy and suppress that obvious evil. The validity of the law was challenged on the ground that it was an undue delegation of legislative power, and that it was so vague that it did not fix rational and enforceable limits, and therefore was not such statute as a court could enforce. Chief Justice White, in rendering the opinion in that case, said:

The claim that the statute commits to the arbitrary discretion of the Secretary of the Treasury the determination of what teas may be imported, and therefore, in effect, vests that official with legislative power, is without merit. We are of opinion that the statute, when properly construed, as said by the Circuit Court of Appeals, but expresses the purpose to exclude the lowest grades of tea, whether demonstrably of inferior purity or unfit for consumption or presumably so because of their inferior quality. This, in effect, was the fixing of a primary standard, and devolved upon the Secretary of the Treasury the mere executive duty to effectuate the legislative policy declared in the statute. The case is within the principle of Field v. Clark (143 U. S., 649), where it was decided that the third section of the tariff act of October 1, 1890, was not repugnant to the Constitution as conferring legislative and treaty-making power on the President, because it authorized him to suspend the provisions of the act relating to the free introduction of sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides. We may say of the legislation in this case, as was said of the legislation considered in Field v. Clark, that it does not, in any real sense, invest administrative officials with the power of legislation. Congress legislated on the subject as far as was reasonably practicable, and from the necessities of the case was compelled to leave to executive officials the duty of bringing about the result pointed out by the statute. To deny the power of Congress to delegate such a duty would, in effect, amount but to declaring that the plenary power vested in Congress to regulate foreign commerce could not be efficaciously exerted.

Here is another reference to a feature that is always considered fatal to the delegation of legislative power, and that is that it may be abused. Litigants are constantly calling on the courts to review the action of these boards on the ground that their action was taking property without due process of law or otherwise denying to citizens their constitutional rights. Of the power of these boards the Chief Justice said:

Whether or not the Secretary of the Treasury failed to carry into effect the expressed purpose of Congress and established standards which operated to exclude teas which would have been entitled to admission had proper standards been adopted, is a question we are not called upon to consider. The sufficiency of the standards adopted by the Secretary of the Treasury was committed to his judgment, to be honestly exercised, and if that were important there is no assertion here of bad faith or malice on the part of that officer in fixing the standards, or on the part of the defendant in the performance of the duties resting on him.

Federal legislation and the decisions of the United States Supreme Court are full of these declarations where, as a matter of fact, furnishing a guide to conduct is remitted to the ascertainment of boards and commissions, and their findings are made conclusive and enforcible, except in those rare cases where the members of the boards are actuated by malice or by some systematic course of unfairness which shows that they did not honestly approach the discharge of the duties imposed on them.

I think the rule laid down in this case and a fair comprehension of the logic which lies behind it will sufficiently establish the validity of the provision the Senator is so ably discussing and defending.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am very much obliged to the Senator from Arkansas for bringing the case to the attention of the Senate. I intended doing that myself, and I have it on my desk, but he has accompanied the opinion of the court by observations so pertinent, persuasive, and conclusive that my gratitude to him is very much increased.

I suppose that I might well stop the investigation of this subject, but the phrase has been criticized and denounced so roundly here that I intend to adhere to its examination until, insofar as I can affect the matter, it is beyond any controversy whatsoever, and so established that we can proceed to the consideration of the bill in other respects without being disturbed with the constant suggestion that it is unconstitutional.

Resuming my general argument, I call attention to the case of Louisville & Nashville v. Garrett (231 U. S., 298). It is a very recent case; one of the very last cases indeed covering the powers of commissioners, and I bring it to the attention of the Senate because it involves the same statute, namely, the regulation found in the State of Kentucky controlling railroad rates and railroad practices. The Supreme Court again affirms in positive, unequivocal terms the constitutionality of that statute, and in this case it also approves the action of the commissioners of the State of Kentucky taken under the statute in fixing railroad rates.

This question about furnishing a rule of conduct in a statute and the sufficiency of phrases or words used to accomplish that purpose is a very old one. It arose in the very first years of the Republic, and the Supreme Court of the United States first passed upon it, as I remember it now, early in the last century. Its decision will be found in the case of the brig Aurora (7 Cranch, 382). I do not intend to read from the opinion in that case, because it is commented upon so learnedly and so instructively in a later case in the Supreme Court that I shall use the later one rather than the earlier one. I refer now to the case of Field v. Clark (143 U. S., 649). I begin my reading at page 680. In this case the statute under examination, the sufficiency of which was disputed, provided—you all know that it was a part of the tariff law of 1890—

That with a view to secure reciprocal trade with countries producing the following articles, and for this purpose, on and after the 1st day of January, 1892, whenever and so often as the President shall be satisfied that the Government of any country producing and exporting sugars, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides, raw and uncured, or any of such articles, imposes duties or other exactions upon the agricultural or other products of the United States, which in view—

which in view of the free introduction of such sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides into the United States he may deem to be reciprocally unequal and unreasonable, he shall have the power and it shall be his duty to suspend, by proclamation to that effect, the provisions of this act relating to the free introduction of such sugar, molasses, coffee, tea, and hides—

And so forth.

What was the power attempted to be given to the President? To determine whether in view of the free introduction of sugar, molasses, tea, and hides, the conduct of any country toward us with respect to our business with that country, in so far as agricultural and other products of the United States were concerned was such that he should suspend the law so that the ordinary duties imposed in the statute would become effective.

I can not imagine a wider discretion given to any executive officer than to take into consideration the relative advantages of the admission into this country of sugar, molasses, tea, and hides free and the imposition which such country importing these articles into the United States might place upon our agricultural and other products. That involved a judgment with regard to the comparative importance of their free introduction into our markets and our burden in the introduction into their markets. There never has been a case in the Supreme Court of the United States more learnedly or exhaustively argued than was the case of Field against Clark, to which I have just referred and from which I have just read.

Now, let us see what the court said. It begins with a reference to the case of the brig Aurora, reported in Seventh Cranch, 382, which I have already mentioned. Concerning that case the court said:

The nonintercourse act of March 1, 1809, chaper 24, sections 4, 11, forbidding the importation after May 20, 1809, of goods, wares, or merchandise from any port or place in Great Britain or France, provided that "the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized, in case either France or Great Britain shall so revoke or modify her edicts as that they shall cease to violate the neutral commerce of the United States, to declare the same by proclamation."

The power given to the President was the discretion to ascertain and declare when certain edicts or laws of Great Britain or France should cease to violate the neutral commerce of the United States. But in commenting upon that the Supreme Court, in Field against Clark, had occasion to look over the congressional or legislative history of the United States, and it has grouped in the opinion certain instances that are analogous, some of them parallel, to the bill now under consideration. The court said:

Congress passed, and President Adams approved, the act of June 13, 1798, chapter 53, section 5, suspending commercial intercourse between the United States and France and its dependencies, and providing that if the Government of France, and all persons acting by or under its authority, before the then next session of Congress, "shall clearly disavow, and shall be found to refrain from the aggressions, depredations, and hostilities which have been and are by them encouraged and maintained against the vessels and other properties of the citizens of the United States, and against their national rights and sovereignty, in violation of the faith of treaties and the laws of nations, and shall thereby acknowledge the just claims of the United States to be considered as in all respects neutral and unconnected in the present European war; if the same shall be continued, then and thereupon it shall be lawful for the President of the United States, being well ascertained of the premises, to remit and discontinue the prohibitions and restraints hereby enacted and declared."

So far as I know the statute of which I have read a part was never at issue in any judicial proceeding, but it is one of the acts of Congress which illustrates its policy with regard to such things.

Then again:

By an act of Congress approved April 18, 1806, chapter 29, it was made unlawful to import, after November 15, 1806, into the United States from any point or place in Great Britain or Ireland, or in any of the colonies or dependencies of Great Britain, articles of which leather, silk, hemp—

I will not read all of them.

The operation of this act was suspended by the subsequent act of December 19, 1806, chapter 1, section 3, until July 1, 1807. But the last act contained this section: "That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized further to suspend the operation of the aforesaid act, if in his judgment the public interest should require it."

That is another rule of conduct laid down by Congress.

I do not urge Congress now, and I hope I never shall urge Congress, to vest that power in any President or administrative officer or in any administrative or legislative board, although we did just that thing in 1912. When we came to legislate with regard to the disassociation of railroads and steamship companies we practically gave the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to administer the law in any way that might be compatible with the public interest, and the Interstate Commerce Commission is now exercising or attempting to exercise that power. I did not hear upon that occasion the strong and determined protest that now appears. I doubt very much whether that is constitutional. I want no misunderstanding upon that point. I do not believe that we can or ought to commit to any officer, commission, board, or any other authority the power to declare or to test the act or conduct of citizens by the standard of the public interest. That is for Congress and Congress alone.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator will recall that while there was no vigorous protest at the time that matter was considered, there were some very grave doubts expressed as to the power of Congress to vest that power in the commission. I quite agree with the Senator. It has always seemed to me that if that question was ever tested it would be very likely found that we had exceeded our authority in that measure.

Mr. CUMMINS. I resume the reading of the opinion:

An act of March 3, 1815, chapter 77, approved by President Madison, provided that so much of the several acts imposing duties on the tonnage of ships and vessels, and on goods, wares, and merchandise imported into the United States—

I think I may omit the remainder of the description, reading only these words:

Such repeal to take effect in favor of any foreign nation, "whenever the President of the United States shall be satisfied that the discriminating or countervailing duties of such foreign nation, so far as they operate to the disadvantage of the United States," had been abolished.

Again, by an act approved March 3, 1817, chapter 39, the test or standard given to the President was—

The President of the United States is hereby authorized to declare that fact by his proclamation, and the restrictions imposed by this act shall, from the date of such proclamation, cease and be discontinued in relation to the Nation or its dependencies, discontinuing such regulations.

I need not go further, but I say generally that the Supreme Court in this case reviews the legislative history of the country and cites many more acts than those I have mentioned in which the rule of conduct assigned for the executive officer or the administrative officer is vastly more uncertain, wider, with more discretion in it, than can possibly be alleged against the phrase that has been used in section 5 of the pending bill.

After thus quoting substantially all that we have done in that way, the court proceeded to consider the particular act of 1890. It sustained the act in the most comprehensive way, and it held that Congress has the authority to give the President that standard by which to test the continuance of a prescribed law of the United States, namely, as to whether in view of our favor to a particular nation in giving it the admission of certain of its products free the other nation failed to reciprocate fairly and justly in view of the impositions that it placed upon our exports to that country.

This doctrine has been treated in this debate as though it was something new. It has been treated as though we could not repose any discretion or judgment in an administrative or legislative board. It has been treated as though we must erect a standard so clear and so certain that there could be no differences of opinion with regard to it. Such is not the law. It has never been the law, and it never can be the law in any civilized nation that desires to enforce policies with respect to the regulation of commerce.

I pass from that case to Miller v. Mayor in One hundred and ninth United States, page 385. The defendant was the mayor of the city of New York. The case I have last cited involved the validity of an act of Congress relating to obstructions in navigable waters. I will read no more of the act than this:

A lawful structure and post road for the conveyance of the mails of the United States.

That is at the latter end of the section, which continues:

Provided, That the said bridge shall be so constructed and built as not to obstruct, impair, or injuriously modify the navigation of the river; and in order to secure a compliance with these conditions the company, previous to commencing the construction of the bridge, shall submit to the Secretary of War a plan of the bridge, with a detailed map of the river at the proposed site of the bridge, and for the distance of a mile above and below the site, exhibiting the depths and currents at all points of the same, together with all other information touching said bridge and river as may be deemed requisite by the Secretary of War to determine whether the said bridge, when built, will conform to the prescribed conditions of the act not to obstruct, impair, or injuriously modify the navigation of the river.

The Supreme Court held this was a power that could be constitutionally given to the Secretary of War and was not a delegation of legislative power nor so uncertain as to be incapable of application.

I now refer to the Union Bridge Co. v. The United States (204 U. S. Repts., 365). I read from page 366. This case involved the construction of another act of Congress upon the same general subject as the last, namely, the obstruction of navigable waters. I may say that this was an indictment, a criminal case, and the point raised against the bill now before us was raised on the appeal. The court said:

The information was based on section 18 of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, which provides: "That whenever the Secretary of War shall have reason to believe that any railroad or other bridge now constructed, or which may hereafter be constructed, over any of the navigable waterways of the United States, is an unreasonable obstruction to the free navigation of such waters on account of insufficient height, width of span, or otherwise"—

And so forth.

The Supreme Court held that a rule of law described in the phrase "unreasonable obstruction to the free navigation of such waters," was a valid rule of law, not only valid and effective in the control of civil rights or property rights, but sufficiently certain to sustain a criminal action. As I said yesterday, it is well known law that the courts are much stricter in scrutinizing such a statute, when the penalty for its disobedience is by a fine or loss of liberty, than when the consequences are the subjection to civil process of the court.

The next case to which I refer is the one cited by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], the case of Buttfield v. Stranahan (192 U. S., 470). I do not intend to read it, inasmuch as the Senator from Arkansas has read in your hearing the material parts of the opinion, but I think the Senator from Arkansas is probably right in saying that the discretion vested in the Secretary of the Treasury to determine the quality of tea that should be admitted to our ports, is as wide a discretion as has ever been bestowed upon an administrative official; and yet the Supreme Court, as has been read in your hearing, declared, without any hesitation, that it was a valid exercise of power upon the part of the United States, and that the mere fact that it could be abused was no argument against its validity.

Every power can be abused. We can abuse our power, and I fear that we often do. The court can abuse its power, and if that occurs in the court of last resort, there is no remedy for the abuse save in the reorganization of the system of government of which the court is a part. I have not any doubt that now and then this commission may find something to be unfair competition that would not meet the views of all Senators and might not meet the views of any Senator, but these occasional instances of abuse or of misuse of power do not present the least reason for not creating the power, if it be necessary for the wise and effective regulation of our commerce and to prevent the extinction of competition through the practices of unfair competition.

I refer, without reading from the decision, to the case of Reagan v. Farmers' Loan & Trust Co., in 154 United States, at page 262. There is probably not an opinion of the Supreme Court that is better known to lawyers than the one I have just mentioned. It is long and exhaustive; it is one of the finest examples of judicial reasoning that can be found in the annals of jurisprudence; but I do desire to read a sentence or more from the case of the Standard Oil Co. v. The United States in Two hundred and twenty-first United States. I read from page 42. I do this because it has been claimed that in some way or other section 5 of this bill is opposed to the antitrust law, and limits in some way or other the operation of the antitrust law; that whereas the former statute commands competition, insists upon competition, we are here trying to limit competition, and the inference—although I do not think it has been so expressly insisted—is that this proposed statute is intended to further the interests of the combinations and the monopolies and to curtail the effectiveness of the antitrust law.

If I believed that were true, nothing could induce me to either vote for it or to say a word in its behalf. I am here to prove, and I hope I have proved—and if I have not, I shall prove before I am through—that this proposed statute is intended to gather up the lesser instances which the antitrust law can not and does not reach, and to prevent the beginning of the attempt to monopolize, the beginning of the insidious efforts toward the restraint of trade and commerce. In the extract which I am about to read the Supreme Court was stating the averments of the bill on the part of the United States, which was afterwards found to be fully sustained by the proof. Says the court:

Reiterating in substance the averments that both the Standard Oil Trust from 1882 to 1899 and the Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey since 1899 had monopolized and restrained interstate commerce in petroleum and its products, the bill at great length additionally set forth various means by which during the second and third periods, in addition to the effect occasioned by the combination of alleged previously independent concerns, the monopoly and restraint complained of was continued. Without attempting to follow the elaborate averments on these subjects spread over 57 pages of the printed record, it suffices to say that such averments may properly be grouped under the following heads: Rebates, preferences, and other discriminatory practices in favor of the combination by railroad companies; restraint and monopolization by control of pipe lines, and unfair practices against competing pipe lines; contracts with competitors in restraint of trade; unfair methods of competition.

The court uses there the exact phrase of the bill before the Senate as to the things which, taken with its fellows, constitute on the whole restraint of trade and monopoly:

Unfair methods of competition, such as local price-cutting at the points where necessary to suppress competition; espionage of the business of competitors—

Why, Mr. President, the forms that unfair competition takes on are myriad. Local price-cutting is one of them, but the espionage of business is another and more vicious than price-cutting itself. I have known, and I doubt not every Senator here has known, such flagrant examples of the espionage, the spying upon business by rivals, that the continuance of trade became practically impossible.

I read from this decision to show that the Supreme Court of the United States had in view "unfair competition" and that it has used that phrase to describe these unjust and injurious practices through which real competition is finally extinguished. The same language will be found in the American Tobacco Co. case; and, without reading from it, I cite that case as very illustrative of the principle for which we contend here. It is found in Two hundred and twenty-first United States, at page 181.

Mr. President, it is frequently asked—it has been asked here—why, if unfair competition is in restraint of trade, we are attempting to add statute to statute and give a further remedy for the violation of the law of 1890? It is a confusion in terms, Mr. President, only; there is no confusion in thought, I am sure, by those who have used this argument. There may be unfair competition which does not constitute restraint of trade. Unfair competition must usually proceed to great lengths and be destructive of competition before it can be seized and denounced by the antitrust law. In other cases it must be associated with, coupled with, other vicious and unlawful practices in order to bring the person or the corporation guilty of the practice within the scope of the antitrust law. The purpose of this bill in this section and in other sections, which I hope will be added to it, is to seize the offender before his ravages have gone to the length necessary in order to bring him within the law that we already have.

We knew little of these things in 1890. The commerce of the United States has largely developed in the last 25 years. The modern methods of carrying on business have been discovered and put into execution within the last quarter of a century; and as we have gone on under the antitrust law and under the decisions of the courts in their efforts to enforce that law, we have observed certain forms of industrial activity which ought to be prohibited whether in and of themselves they restrain trade or commerce or not. We have discovered that their tendency is evil; we have discovered that the end which is inevitably reached through those methods is an end which is destructive of fair commerce among the States. It is these considerations which, in my judgment, have made it wise, if not necessary, to supplement the antitrust law by additional legislation, not in antagonism to the antitrust law, but in harmony with the antitrust law, to more effectually put into the industrial life of America the principle of the antitrust law, which is fair, reasonable competition, independence to the individual, and dissociation among the corporations.

I may say a word here with regard to "big business." I am reminded of it by some remarks that were made elsewhere last night. These proposed laws are not aimed against "big business." Everybody knows that the business of the United States must be carried on in a big way; it must be conducted so as to employ all the economies and facilities that the genius of this age has discovered and developed.

Some kinds of business must be carried on by large units. The effort we are making here does not interfere with that. It is often thrust at me, "Do you want to return to the Dark Ages? Do you want to discard all the learning, all the improvements, all the developments of modern times? Do you want to see the shoemaker at his bench; do you want to see the blacksmith forging at his anvil; do you want to see nothing but individual enterprise and nothing greater than can be carried on by the person alone?" No, Mr. President, we want association; we recognize association in all our laws; but there is no business field in this country so small but that it ought to be occupied by at least two enterprises, whether individual or corporate.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, may I beg the privilege of interrogating the able Senator from Iowa at this particular point by asking him if the pass should ever be reached in this country, fulfilling what the able Senator refers to, the remarks made elsewhere, by which business should pass in its concentration to any one large institution, would not that one large institution then have to be controlled by a single set of people, and, finally, the whole business of that particular subject matter pass by that method into the hands of a single set of people or of the Government to conduct that business solely to the exclusion of others? Would not that be the natural, final result?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think so, Mr. President. That is the tendency of monopoly. Now, let me continue the thought that I was endeavoring to express. I desire to disabuse the public mind, if I can, of the idea that those of us who stand for the regulation of commerce, its sharp and effectual regulation, are in favor of a return to the weakness of former days and are opposed to those large aggregations that introduce economy and efficiency into the public service. Whatever those economies and efficiencies may be, they must, however, stop short of one thing, that is, the power to rule that field of commerce which they attempt to occupy. Let us take an illustration. It is supposed—and I believe it to be true—that at the present time substantially $3,000,000,000 of capital are employed in what is ordinarily known as big steel, in the iron and steel business of the larger kind. One-half of that capital is in the hands of one corporation and the other half of the capital is in the hands of 25 or 30 other corporations.

If I were a czar, if I could make the law, that would never have occurred. I do not believe that it is necessary, in order to reach full efficiency and employ and utilize all the economies of this age, that there shall be a billion and a half dollars in the hands of one man or in the hands of one board of directors. I believe that competition in many respects between this great combination and its lesser rivals is unequal; it is not, so far as I know, unfair. I think it would be vastly better for this country if, instead of one corporation having a billion and a half dollars of capital, or one-half of it, and the remainder distributed among a score or more of corporations, there should be 5 or 6 or 10 corporations, each employing $300,000,000 of capital. No one could complain that "big business" was invaded if a corporation were permitted to employ $300,000,000 of capital in the conduct of its business; and, if this were so, competiton would be much more effectual than it is now, because it would be warfare between men of equal strength and power and size. The war between the giant and the pigmy may go on so long as the giant is benevolent, tender, and careful of his opponent. That is what it is alleged occurs now, and I do not desire to dispute it; but I have called these things to your attention simply to refute the often-repeated accusation that those of us who favor the strict enforcement of the law of fair competition are at the same time opposed to doing business in a big way and with big results.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WEEKS. The Senator from Iowa has suggested the possibility of his being a czar.

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope I have not suggested it.

Mr. WEEKS. If he were, I am sure he would be a benevolent and a wise one. Will he not tell the Senate a little more explicitly how much or what proportion of the capital in any particular industry he thinks it would be safe to have under the control of one board of directors, and how he would limit it?

Mr. CUMMINS. I should have no difficulty about that if I had no associates in reaching a decision. I might have trouble if I had to submit my judgment to the review of friends like the Senator from Massachusetts; but if he desires an answer from an individual standpoint I will say that the test should be, always, the existence of competent and efficient competitors. If he will give me an illustration, if he will mention a field of industry with which I am familiar, I will tell him what capital I think any one person or corporation ought to be permitted to employ in that particular field. I am not, however, familiar with many fields.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, let me suggest this inquiry to the Senator: Is it not true that the independent steel companies are increasing their business more rapidly than the United States Steel Corporation; and, if so, is not that effective competition?

Mr. CUMMINS. No, Mr. President; it is not effective competition. The Senator has now chosen a field with which I have some familiarity.

Mr. WEEKS. That is the reason I selected it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I believe the competitors of the United States Steel Corporation exist at the sufferance of the United States Steel Corporation. I am quite willing to say in this public place and in this public way that there has been some benevolence in the conduct of the United States Steel Corporation. I think that, warned by the experience of the Standard Oil Co. and other corporations which have attempted to establish monopolies, and which have come to grief or have been overtaken with disaster, the United States Steel Corporation has consciously averted the indignation of the people by a course of liberal treatment of its competitors. I believe that the United States Steel Corporation could sell its product, if it cared to do so, at a price that might still yield it some return, but that would extinguish its rivals in a very short period.

Its advantages, however, are not all legitimate. I do not believe it can do these things simply because it can manufacture iron and steel more cheaply than other companies can manufacture the same products. It can do it because it has seized the sources of supply. It owns the iron mines from which its raw material comes. It owns the railroads which transport its raw material to the lake shore. It owns the ships that carry its raw material over the Great Lakes. Of course, therefore, it stands in a position superior to and stronger than that of its rivals who are oftentimes compelled to buy their raw material of the United States Steel Corporation; or, if they do not purchase it of that company, they must procure it under circumstances and conditions that are burdensome as compared with those enjoyed by the great corporation.

I have not in my mind a single harsh feeling toward these great companies so far as they conduct themselves decently; and I think the United States Steel Corporation has conducted itself more fairly, more reasonably, than any other great aggregation of capital of which I know. It has been wiser in that respect. I challenge, however, the right of any corporation to exercise the power which this one does, or which the International Harvester Co. does, or any other association which has drawn within its grasp one-half or more of all the capital involved or engaged in the business in which it is also engaged. It is too much power to give any man or any aggregation of men. If I had my way about it—and the Senate will have an opportunity to vote upon that proposition before the consideration of this bill shall have been concluded—some function, some tribunal of the Government, would be given the authority to determine what capital could be employed in any one business, with this guide that it should not be so great as in and of itself to impair or destroy substantially competitive conditions; and until we do limit the amount of capital that can be associated under one management we shall not have arrived at a fair regulation of commerce. It is the very beginning of any efficient regulation of the power that can be exercised in the association or aggregation of wealth.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] was interested in the amount of capital which the Senator would fix, if he had absolute power, as that which any one company could control in any one field; and the Senator from Iowa seems to be of the opinion that it is necessary to fix by law the maximum amount which any corporation could control.

Mr. CUMMINS. Fix it by law? I hope the Senator from New Jersey will not misunderstand me. Congress could not fix any amount, because the instances are so diverse: the amount required in one field or one business is so different from the amount required in another that Congress could not fix the amount intelligently, or, I think, at all. I would, however, give that power to a commission. I would give it to this trade commission—and I intend to ask the Senate to give it to the trade commission—with this rule: That no corporation shall employ an extent of capital which in and of itself destroys or substantially impairs competitive conditions.

Mr. HUGHES. The Senator does not think we can authorize a commission to do anything that we could not do ourselves, does he; or does the Senator mean that it would be inconvenient for Congress to do that?

Mr. CUMMINS. Of course, we could do it in any particular instance. Undoubtedly it is within the power of Congress. We could say, for example, that no corporation engaged in the iron or steel business with a capital of more than $100,000,000 should engage in interstate commerce:

Mr. HUGHES. I see what the Senator means. That, however, is not really what I rose to interrogate the Senator about. I wanted to ask him if he did not think that if fair competitive conditions were established in every field of industrial activity, or in any particular field of industrial activity, the amount of capital that would become engaged in any particular line of activity would automatically regulate itself? If fair competitive conditions were once established, it would be unnecessary to fix by law or by the act or order of any commission the amount of capital that should engage in that business?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not so sure of the correctness of the statement just made by the Senator from New Jersey. In 1901, the year in which the United States Steel Corporation was organized, there was competition in that field—very earnest, substantial competition.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes; but, then, everybody admits that the formation of the Steel Corporation in itself would not be possible in these days.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know that.

Mr. HUGHES. I did not think anybody questioned that fact.

Mr. CUMMINS. A great many people question it, and I myself question it.

Mr. HUGHES. I understand that the Steel Corporation itself is now under prosecution.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely; but the charge upon which the Government is proceeding, as I understand, is not that the corporation is so big that it suppresses competition by reason of its bigness, but that it suppresses competition through the methods it employs.

Mr. HUGHES. But can there be any doubt in the mind of anybody, in view of the recent decisions of the courts, that any attempt on the part of any individual or group of individuals to do now, with a group of unrelated industries, what was done with the steel industries in 1901, can not be made without violating the law? Can there be any doubt that that would be regarded now, in the light of the decisions and opinions of the courts, as a violation of law?

Mr. CUMMINS. As I say, I do not think we have advanced at all in that respect. The law applies to the corporation now just as it applied in 1901; and I have not heard of anyone who asserts that the corporation is in violation of the antitrust law simply because it has a billion and a half of capital——

Mr. HUGHES. No; I do not assert that.

Mr. CUMMINS. And simply because it has practically half of all the capital engaged in that particular business.

Mr. HUGHES. I am not at all interested in the size of the corporation.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am. Size means power; and whenever you reach the power that the United States Steel Corporation has, you have already touched monopolistic power; you have touched the power to suppress real, substantial competition.

Mr. HUGHES. That is precisely what I mean.

Mr. CUMMINS. The company does it merely because it is so big.

Mr. HUGHES. Exactly.

Mr. CUMMINS. And therefore I would not allow it to become so large.

Mr. HUGHES. I have not the slightest doubt in my mind but that any attempt to do what the Senator has so graphically described as having been done in 1901 would now, whatever it was then, be regarded as in violation of the statute.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have a very serious doubt about it. I wish I had not.

The other day I put to the Senate a question of a like character, in discussing the uncertainty of the antitrust law. Suppose there are 12 grocery stores in a town, and one man buys six of them, and business goes on just the same. There is the same amount of business. There is, of course, less individual competition, but there is still competition.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes; but there are other towns.

Mr. CUMMINS. Each one is endeavoring to prosper, to do as large a trade as it can. Does the Senator say that would be a violation of the antitrust law?

Mr. HUGHES. Why, that certainly would not be a violation of the antitrust law, because the antitrust law does not take jurisdiction over a situation of that kind

Mr. CUMMINS. Why not?

Mr. HUGHES. It is not a restraint—well, I will not say that. I will say that I do not know how to answer that question.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I do not, either. I will say frankly that I do not know, and I have been asked that question. I was asked the question before I left the practice of the law, and it was put to me probably a score of times. I never was able to answer it, and I am not able to answer it now. That is exactly what the United States Steel Corporation did in 1901.

Mr. HUGHES. I will say to the Senator that that question was put to me, also, in the practice of the law. That is, I was asked to pass upon the conduct of a member of a local association which had agreed not to cut prices. In fact, the association came to me for the purpose of taking some action against an individual who had cut prices. I did not refer to the Sherman antitrust law in order to inform myself as to how to advise my clients. I advised them that of course, under the common law, they were engaged in an unlawful conspiracy, and that any attempt on their part to prevent any man from cutting the price of a necessary of life, or of any staple article, or of any article, for that matter, of ordinary use, was a violation of the law.

I do not think, however, it is important what answer is made to the hypothetical proposition propounded by the Senator. It seems to me that what is important is the conduct of the steel corporation at the time of its formation. There was more than the gathering together of groups of unrelated steel concerns. There was the gathering together of practically all of the steel concerns of the United States which could be attracted into that combination by the offer of tremendous prices in stock and money, with guaranties that the stock would afterwards go to a certain price, all of which guaranties were carried out; and coupled with that was the issuance of something like a billion dollars' worth of securities based upon the thing itself, the ability of this corporation to keep up prices throughout the country so as to make it possible for it to make that billion dollars' worth of watered stock good stock.

Now, that was done. That was the plan, the scheme, which was carried out and put into execution. The stock was delivered, the companies were taken in, and for a long time competition was practically stifled. Does the Senator think that upon a statement of those facts—which never have been denied, to my knowledge, and none of which can be denied—any reasonable tribunal would say that that was not an attempt to establish a monopoly and to restrain trade?

Mr. CUMMINS. I recognize the truth of all that the Senator from New Jersey has said; that there were a great many other things than mere bigness involved in the organization of the United States Steel Corporation. I do not express any opinion as to whether or not it is in violation of the antitrust law. It would be distinctly improper for me to do so, in view of the pendency of the action now before the court. I was simply endeavoring to make it clear that no man could say that it was in violation of the antitrust law because, and simply because, it had the power incident to the control of one-half of all the capital engaged in that particular business.

Mr. HUGHES. I wish to say that I agree with the Senator thoroughly so far as that is concerned.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think we have reached a time when we must take away from any body of men the opportunity to seize that power, for it must inevitably be used to the disadvantage of the American people.

Mr. HUGHES. If the Senator will permit me, I will trespass on his good nature and his time long enough to say that I think myself the trust period in this country has passed. I do not believe a dozen J. P. Morgans could successfully launch any one of the hundred combinations of capital which have been launched in the industrial ocean of this great country.

It seems to me the Senator must admit that that is true. What makes attractive the promotion of these great enterprises is the ability to dispose of the watered stock; and in the present state of the public mind and public knowledge, and in view of the advanced decisions of the courts and various bodies that have had to do with these things, I do not think it would be possible to get enough people to make a promotion of that sort attractive.

It seems to me that the trust period came and flourished and died and passed away. It has left a great many troublesome questions on our hands, and a great deal of watered stock in the hands of innocent bystanders and widows and orphans.

Mr. CUMMINS. I can not quite agree with the conclusions of the Senator from New Jersey. We have not yet adopted any effective law against the issuance of watered stock. There are, I believe, only a few States in the Union in which watered stock can not be issued at this moment.

Mr. HUGHES. I will say to the Senator that it can not be sold as easily as it could be.

Mr. CUMMINS. The matter of its sale is a psychological question now. These psychological periods are apt to recur. I know that these stocks could not be sold to the public at this time; but this tempest will pass, and the confidence of the people in such securities will again return unless we take apt and proper measures against these practices at this time. I want to make it impossible ever to repeat the performances of the earlier period, because it was in that period that most of these great combinations were formed.

Mr. President, I am now about to enter upon another question relating to the bill under consideration, and I understand it is the purpose to adjourn about 4 o'clock. If it is entirely convenient to Senators, I should be glad if an adjournment could be taken at this time.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Before the motion to adjourn is put, I desire to ask whether we can not get unanimous consent for a vote upon this bill and amendments at 5 o'clock to-morrow evening.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will state to the Senator that it is quite unnecessary to propose such a unanimous-consent agreement, because there will be an objection. It can not be had.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Then, I will not make the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary need not call the roll.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

The motion was agreed to.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After four minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, July 2, 1914, at 11 o'clock a. m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate July 1, 1914.

AMBASSADOR.

George T. Marye, of San Francisco, Cal., to be ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Russia, vice Henry M. Pindell, resigned.

PROMOTION IN THE ARMY.

CAVALRY ARM.

Second Lieut. James L. Collins, Eleventh Cavalry, to be first lieutenant from June 29, 1914, vice First Lieut. John Symington, First Cavalry, who died June 28, 1914.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate July 1, 1914.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

Herbert C. Comings to be collector of customs for the district of western Vermont.

POSTMASTERS.

IOWA.

John J. McAreavy, Coggon.
J. H. Pettibone, Burlington.
Elisha D. Roberts, Reinbeck.

KANSAS.

W. C. White, Osage City.

OHIO.

Benjamin F. Reineck, Gibsonburg.
Alexander J. Shenk, Delphos.
D. C. Van Voorhis, Bowling Green.

PENNSYLVANIA.

J. F. Johnston, Strasburg.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, July 1, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Out of the deeps, O God our Father, we cry unto Thee for a more insistent desire to live the truth as it is given us to see the truth; for a more insistent desire to deal justly with all men; to exact nothing from our fellows that we are not willing to do ourselves, and to ask nothing for ourselves that we can not freely accord to others; that truth, justice, mercy, love may have their full sway, and bring us into harmony with Thee and our fellow men; in the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

JUDICIARY CODE.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Louisiana rise?

Mr. DUPRÉ. I rise to present a request for unanimous consent. Among other bills favorably reported from the Judiciary Committee is H. R. 4545, to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, now on the calendar. That is one of a series of bills indorsed and urged by the American Bar Association. In looking up the report filed by the committee I find that it contents itself with saying that the committee recommends that the bill be passed.

In order that the House may have some knowledge of the measure I requested Mr. Everett P. Wheeler, a well-known lawyer of New York, to prepare an analysis of the bill, which he has kindly done, and I ask unanimous consent that his views be printed as my own, in connection with the report heretofore made on this subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to file his views on the bill which he mentions with the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COTTON FUTURES.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House insist on its amendments to the bill (S. 110) to regulate trading in cotton futures and provide for the standardization of "upland" and "gulf" cotton separately.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the House insist on its amendments to Senate bill 110, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I take it that it would be in order to move that, unless it were Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. Does the gentleman prefer to have it put in that form?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think that motion would be in order yet, but the gentleman can probably get unanimous consent.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. Does the gentleman from Illinois object?

Mr. MANN. No; I am not going to object, because it would be in order to make the motion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Undoubtedly, to-morrow.

Mr. LEE of Georgia. I ask unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. LEVER, Mr. LEE of Georgia, and Mr. HAUGEN.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business of Calendar Wednesday be postponed until to-morrow.

In connection with this request I desire to say that there is one subject still in disagreement in the legislative bill. There are two in the District bill, and it is possible that if to-day could be given to the consideration of these items these two bills may be closed and go to the President for his approval.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent to substitute to-morrow for to-day for the business of Calendar Wednesday.

There was no objection.

HOUR OF MEETING TO-MORROW.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from New York yield?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York has not the floor.

Mr. DUPRÉ. I should like to ask whether it is still the intention to have the House meet to-morrow at 11 o'clock?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Unless the gentleman from Missouri desires to have the House meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow it is not necessary to meet at that time.

Mr. MANN. Let us meet at 12 o'clock.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In view of the fact that Calendar Wednesday has been put over until to-morrow I ask unanimous consent to rescind the order that the House meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow, and that the House meet at 12 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to rescind the unanimous-consent order fixing the hour of meeting to-morrow at 11 o'clock, and that the House meet at 12 o'clock to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The House will meet at 12 o'clock to-morrow, unless the hour of meeting is changed in the meantime.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, H. R. 15279.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina calls up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes. The Clerk will read the report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Let the statement be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. There is no statement. There is only a single sentence in the report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 915).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

JOSEPH T. JOHNSON,
JOSEPH W. BYRNS,
JAMES W. GOOD,
Managers on the part of the House.

THOMAS S. MARTIN,
LEE S. OVERMAN,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. How many amendments does that leave in disagreement?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Two. Amendments 1 and 30 are the only ones which are still open.

The SPEAKER. Those are the mileage amendments. What does the gentleman desire?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I desire recognition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is already recognized.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I hope I may have the attention of the House for a few minutes.

After three long and arduous conferences with the Senate on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which conferences covered three or four days, we have been able to agree upon every item in the bill except amendments 1 and 30. These amendments, as the membership well knows, deal with the mileage of Senators and Representatives and Delegates in Congress. In the last conference, which was the third, the Senate absolutely refused to recede from its position upon these two amendments. It not only refuses to recede, but the Senate does not ask for a further conference. I am advised that in the Senate, upon the call for the yeas and nays on a motion to concur in the House amendments, only three hands went up.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has not read the proceedings in the RECORD the way I have. The RECORD says that the Senator from Texas moved that the Senate concur in the House amendment; that the Senator from Arkansas made the point of order that there was no House amendment, that it was mere talk of the conferees; and that the President pro tempore of the Senate sustained the point of order and declined to let a vote be had on the matter.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. At any rate, the Senate does not desire any further conference with the House on this subject. It takes full responsibility, and I want the RECORD to show that fact, for the defeat of this legislation.

I am not an authority on parliamentary law, but I understand that it is a long-established precedent in all legislative bodies that where one house proposes legislation on an appropriation bill and the other house finally and flatly refuses to accept that legislation the house proposing it must yield. In other words, one legislative body has no authority to force legislation upon the other body.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is not this a different situation, and has one legislative body the right to coerce another legislative body into accepting a sum for payment of its mileage that that body has repeatedly stated it does not want?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will come to the record later. I do not like to be diverted from the course of my argument; but, seriously, that is an established rule that obtains between coordinate legislative bodies. I want the RECORD to show that a coordinate branch of Congress refuses to accept this legislation, and accepts full responsibility for that refusal.

The conferees on the part of the House have endeavored in perfect good faith to carry out the mandates and the instructions of the House. By a yea-and-nay vote this House indicated the line of action it desired the conferees to follow, and we have followed that course and endeavored to convince the Senate conferees that it ought to be incorporated into this bill.

Mr. Speaker, we are the servants of the House. We have done all that we knew how to do to carry out its will. The other body has refused to yield, and does not even desire a further conference. We are back with the papers for an expression from the House.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I will.

Mr. GARNER. If the House should reject the report or sustain the House conferees and ask for another conference, does the gentleman believe that he could get the Senate to agree to a conference; or have they declined further to confer over this matter?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The conferees on the part of the Senate have assured the conferees on the part of the House that they would rather kill the bill than to let this provision go in it.

Mr. GARNER. In other words, to make a concrete statement, so that the country may understand, the conferees on the part of the Senate have insisted that the mileage shall remain at 20 cents a mile or else the bill shall fail?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. That is the position. Mr. Speaker, I desire to return to the showing made in the Senate on this proposition. A point of order was made when the Senator from Texas moved that the Senate concur in the House amendment, and the point of order was sustained; whereupon the Senator from Texas moved that the conferees on the part of the Senate be instructed to agree to the House amendment, and a motion was made to lay that on the table. Upon that motion the yeas and nays were called for; and that, I presume, is the time when the three hands went up.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that the Senate refused a further conference.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I said that the Senate does not ask for a further conference.

Mr. MANN. The House asked for a further conference yesterday, and the Senate agreed.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes; and we have reported a disagreement on that conference.

Mr. MANN. Has the Senate acted upon it this morning?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The Senate acted upon it yesterday afternoon and sent it here without asking for a further conference. And then we were told that the only reason the Senate did not adopt a motion to adhere was that they wanted to be polite about it. I will now yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HARRIS] five minutes.

Mr. LEVY. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEVY. Would it be in order to offer instructions to recede from our position and concur with the Senate?

The SPEAKER. We have not got to that place yet.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. What is now before the House?

The SPEAKER. There is nothing pending.

Mr. MANN. I will ask for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina in charge of the bill rose and addressed the Chair, but he did not make any motion.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will make one now. I move that the House further insist on its amendment to Senate amendment No. 1 and insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 30.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House insist upon its amendment to Senate amendment No. 1 and insist upon its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 30.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HARRIS].

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendments No. 1 and No. 30 and concur in the same. I am not sure that the motion should apply to both of these at one time or separately. If it is necessary that I make them separately, I shall do so.

The SPEAKER. The real motion that the gentleman makes is that the House recede from its amendment to Senate amendment No. 1 and concur in the same, and that the House recede from its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 30 and concur in the same.

Mr. HARRIS. That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to address the House?

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I simply desire to say that I think the House has dallied with this question long enough. The Members of the House and the Senate have received this mileage from a time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, and I see no reason now for dispensing with it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I will use the five minutes. We are occupying, to my mind, rather a peculiar situation. When this bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations containing a provision to put traveling expenses on an actual expense basis, on a division vote in this House it was defeated by a vote of seventy-two or three to forty-odd, and on a roll call or record vote it was carried by a vote of 235 to, I think, 88. Some criticism was urged against that provision because it contained an omnibus clause giving to Members the right to bring the dependent members of their family to Washington at public expense. In order to obviate that and to the end that every Member of this House and every Member of the Senate would know exactly what his mileage was we have now reached this position, proposing to give to the Members of the Senate 5 cents a mile and, of course, whatever the Senate gets the House will get the same. Now, here comes a threat, an absolute threat, from the grave and sedate Senators of the United States to the House of Representatives, to this effect: "We propose to let this big appropriation bill fail rather than give up our mileage."

Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the time has come in the great Senate of the United States when they propose to let a bill carrying $36,000,000 fail before they will accept an amendment which the House has proposed to them giving them 5 cents a mile when it is admitted by all persons, irrespective of where they come from or their party politics, that 5 cents a mile will more than pay any man's traveling expenses, no matter whether he comes from the Philippine Islands, from Hawaii, or Alexandria. Shall we be put in that attitude? Let no man be deceived when it comes to casting his vote to-day. Were we in good faith when we voted 5 cents a mile, or were we hoping that the Senate of the United States would serve as a back stop for us and save the mileage? It is said we can not let this bill fail. Oh, no. This whole thing can be settled in less than five minutes. The burden is not upon this House if this bill fails. The burden is upon the Senate of the United States, and if there is any odium attached to the failure of this bill, let them and them alone be responsible. Let no Member of this House undertake to take the responsibility from their shoulders. If a motion to recede and concur in this Senate amendment be made, let no man be deceived. He is voting for a straight 20 cents a mile. Then let him go back to his district and undertake to explain to his constituents and say, "Oh, I had to back out; I could not do otherwise; the Senate refused to yield upon that, and I had to yield." For one, Mr. Speaker, I refuse to swing on to the coat tails of my Senators. I propose to stand upon my own footing and upon my own merits upon this proposition and let the responsibility be theirs.

Mr. Speaker, I saw the House last October gallantly walk up and defeat an appropriation of $142,000 to pay these little employees around here an extra month's salary upon a record vote of 151 to 48. The Republican Party's position upon this has been much more consistent than ours. They gave their employees an extra month's salary to pay them their mileage expense. We took that away from them when we gained control of the Sixty-second Congress, and we will never let them have it again. Last October, on a record vote, as I said a moment ago, we prevented the little employees from getting their extra month's salary, and it was right. They have no right to it. Here are these little page boys all over this floor. They get, I think, $75 a month, and yet they get on the train and they travel here probably a thousand miles and pay their train fares, and we continue to vote ourselves 20 cents a mile! There would be no show on earth for any other employee of the Government to get 20 cents a mile except the Members of the House and the United States Senate.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER].

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I favor the motion made by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON], that we further insist upon this disagreement. I believe that we should stick to our text and insist upon our rights, rather than recognize the rights so valiantly asserted by the coordinate branch of the Congress of the United States. If they desire to see this great bill fail, which carries appropriations for the expenses of the National Government, rather than reduce the mileage which they receive from 20 cents a mile each way to 5 cents a mile each way, as proposed by the House, as was said so forcibly by the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Cox], let them take the responsibility, and let the people of the country know where that responsibility rests. I have voted upon every occasion when I had the opportunity during all the contests that have been made in reference to this proposition for a reduction of mileage.

I do not believe at this time, when we have quick transportation at a very much reduced rate, that this amount should be continued to be paid. It was enacted and made a part of the law in the early days, away back yonder when the expense of traveling was very much larger than it is at the present time. The expense of traveling has been decreased from time to time until now it is practically at a minimum. Then why should this rate be still continued on the statute books, when the rate has been reduced which we are required to pay? I will vote for any amount that will reduce it from the amount at which it is now placed. I will vote to reduce it to 5 cents, or I will vote to take it out altogether [applause], because I do not believe the game is worth the candle; and I would rather it would be taken off the statute books and receive not a single, solitary cent in the way of mileage than to continue to hear the criticism that exists in respect to it all over the country.

Mr. MORRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I have not the time to yield, because I have only two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MORRISON. I ask the gentleman from South Carolina to yield a minute.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I yield the gentleman one minute.

Mr. MORRISON. I had hoped that some gentleman would offer a motion to strike out the mileage entirely. I am following the gentlemen who are making this fight, and have been following them with misgivings. If the gentleman will introduce the motion, I will——

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Follow me with misgivings?

Mr. MORRISON (continuing). I will follow you with confidence and admiration.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Will the gentleman vote for it?

Mr. MORRISON. Yes, sir; I will.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Well, I will give the gentleman the opportunity, if I can.

Mr. MORRISON. I will do it.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. How did the gentleman vote the other day?

Mr. MORRISON. I voted to reduce the mileage.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Connecticut rise?

Mr. DONOVAN. To make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut makes the point that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixty-six Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves a call of the House.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 256 Members, a quorum, have answered to their names. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. For three minutes. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a motion to strike out all of the provision in reference to mileage of every kind whatsoever, so that no mileage will be allowed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that no such motion is in order at this time.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not in order now.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Will it be in order later?

The SPEAKER. It is owing to how things develop; sometimes it will be in order and sometimes it will not.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Would a motion at this time be in order to instruct the conferees?

The SPEAKER. No; there is not any motion in order at the present time. The time to instruct the conferees is just before they are appointed.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Then it is not in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not in order.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I asked whether a motion to strike out all mileage would be in order; if so, I will make the motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Mississippi, in answer to his parliamentary inquiry a while ago, that if the motion of the gentleman from Alabama should be voted down, unless the previous question is ordered on this motion, then his motion might be in order.

Mr. MANN. "Might be" is well put.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows. That is the way the Chair was trying to put it. Of course, the Chair has got to pass upon the identical proposition when it comes, but there is no chance to get it in before that.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I will make it, then, if I have the opportunity.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, in all parliamentary bodies which consist of two parts of equal authority there come times when one body must yield to the other. Where there are differences of opinion we endeavor to reconcile those differences through the appointment of conference committees, giving and taking. But the time often comes when one body proposes something new and the other body declines to accept it. Being of equal authority, it is a natural rule of procedure that that legislative body constituting half of the whole which proposes a new matter must in the end yield unless the other body consents, because the bodies are coequal. When the Senate proposes an amendment to a House appropriation bill which inserts a new principle, unless in the end the House is willing to accept it the Senate must recede. And likewise when the House proposes a new proposition and the Senate refuses to accept it the House must recede, because unless this procedure should be followed one of the two bodies becomes superior to the other.

Legislation is effected by both the House and the Senate agreeing to a specific proposition. Mileage at the rate of 20 cents a mile has been paid for more than 50 years, if I recall correctly, by the same provision of the law. The House has now proposed to reduce that mileage in the original House bill to the actual expenses of the family, and in the amendment of the House to 5 cents a mile. If the Senate insists, as the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] has intimated it will—insists that it will not agree to the proposition—in the end the House must yield, as the Senate would have to yield if the proposition were a Senate proposition as a new matter. If the idea of the gentleman from South Carolina is correct as to what the Senate will do, the sooner we yield the less we will injure our pride. Gentlemen have bravely said, "Let this bill die." That is not sense.

Mr. GOOD. It is not bravery, either.

Mr. MANN. The Government can not run without the passage of the legislative bill. The President will not receive his salary, the courts will not receive their salaries, the officials of the Government all through will not receive their salaries, and they will be prohibited even from furnishing voluntary service.

Now, we have reached the point where we will have to put aside, it seems to me, a matter of pride and use common sense. If we are going to yield, let us yield now. If we are going to say that we will not pass the legislative bill unless we can have our way about a new proposition, we stamp ourselves as incapable legislators. I voted for the 5-cent mileage proposition. I have not gone so far as my free-seed friend from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER], who is always in favor of free seeds and against the payment of any mileage. The payment of mileage is a matter of indifference to me. Yet we are responsible for the appropriations that carry on the Government. We have met an issue now with the Senate on this appropriation where we have proposed and they have refused, as they have the right to do, and we ought in good sense to recede from our proposition at this time, hoping that we may present it in the future to a Senate which will be willing to agree to that proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have firm convictions on the question of mileage, and I have never failed to express my convictions both in speech on the floor and by my vote since I have been a Member of this body. I have always believed that mileage ought to be limited to the actual expenses of the individual Members. I do not believe that it is the duty of this Government to bring the families of Members and Senators to the city of Washington. That is a duty which, I believe, rests upon the Representative or Senator himself.

This House, when this bill was before it on its passage, adopted a provision providing for the actual expenses of Members and Senators and the dependent members of their families. The House did so, I presume, for the purpose of eliminating the objection of inequality that was raised by some Members who live at a great distance from the Capital city and who have large families. While personally favoring limiting the mileage to the Member's individual expenses, I heartily supported the provision as it passed the House, believing that it was the only and possibly best solution of the matter. The bill went to the Senate. The Senate struck out that provision and restored existing law. When the bill came back to the House upon the question of a conference, this House, by a record vote, instructed the conferees to stand for 5 cents a mile in so far as the Senators were concerned, intending, as we all understood, that the same provision should apply to Representatives. Your conferees have made an earnest and diligent effort to carry out the wishes of the House in that respect. The Senate conferees have notified the House conferees that the bill will not pass the Senate with that provision in it. They contend that it is a change of existing law, and that it is the duty of the House of Representatives on that account to yield, inasmuch as the Senate is opposed to the change. For my part, since it affects both the Members of the House and Senate, I believe that the House has a right to stand upon its rights and to insist, in so far as it can, upon a reduction of this mileage, if a majority of the Members of the House feel that way about it. But Senators have said that this bill can not pass unless the House provision is eliminated from the bill. For my part, believing, as I do, that mileage ought to be reduced, I intend to vote for the motion to further insist upon the disagreement to the amendment of the Senate. I am going to vote that the House stand by the declared will of the majority; and if the bill should fail, then, so far as I am concerned, the responsibility must rest upon that body which defeats it. I do not believe either the House or the Senate can afford to stand in the way of the passage of this measure merely because a little question of mileage is involved. I would rather see mileage wiped out than to have this proposition arise year after year to plague and harass Members. It is a matter of practically little concern to the most of us. It has been held by the Court of Claims that it is in no sense compensation, that it must be construed as mileage, and mileage only, and I have never believed that Members could justify themselves voting for the present rate of mileage, when we all know it requires a much smaller sum to bring us here each session.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motions pending.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] moves the previous question on both motions.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FALCONER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FALCONER. Would a preferential motion be in order to recede and concur with an amendment?

The SPEAKER. No; the motion to recede and concur is the preferential motion at this stage of the proceeding.

Mr. FALCONER. After this is out of the way would a motion then be in order to recede and concur with an amendment?

The SPEAKER. It will depend entirely upon the shape in which it comes up.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from South Carolina rise?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. To make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I rise to ask whether that motion to concur in amendments No. 1 and No. 30 is not a divisible motion? Can not a separate vote be had upon the two amendments?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it can.

Mr. FITZGERALD. By unanimous consent the House agreed to vote on both of them together.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. I have no recollection of any such agreement.

Mr. MANN. When was that agreement made?

The SPEAKER. If that agreement was made, that settles it.

Mr. MANN. There was no such agreement as that.

The SPEAKER. The memory of the Chair is no better than that of anybody else particularly, but the Chair is inclined to think that the gentleman from South Carolina did ask that both be considered together. Anyway, that is what we have been doing.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from South Carolina asked yesterday that they be considered together.

The SPEAKER. In the first place the Chair will put the motion for the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I suggest that even if the order had been made by the House that the two amendment. be considered together, yet the motion is divisible, because the question would be before the House in the same shape as though an original motion had been made in which two propositions were involved.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there was no such request made to-day, to consider the two together.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the request was made. The only question in the mind of the Chair is whether he ever put the request. At all events, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] did not ask that they be voted on together. If he made any request, it was that they be considered together.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That is the same question.

The SPEAKER. That does not change the rule that when there are two substantive propositions in a motion, when the vote is taken the question may be divided. You might agree to consider two or three bills together, and yet they might be voted upon separately. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] asked for a separate vote on the two propositions. The first proposition is on Senate amendment No. 1.

Mr. MANN. The first vote would come on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama, would it not?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. That the House recede and concur?

The SPEAKER. It comes this way: That is a double-header, too. The gentleman from Alabama moves that the House recede——

Mr. MANN. From its disagreement to Senate amendment numbered 1, and concur in the Senate amendment.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ADAMSON. If the House should vote to give the Senate their mileage, would it not be in order for us economists then to change our minds and take it for the two Houses, to put ourselves on an equality? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] moves to recede from the House disagreement, and——

Mr. MANN. To recede from the House amendment to Senate amendment No. 1 and agree to the Senate amendment; also to recede from the disagreement to amendment No. 30 and agree to the same.

The SPEAKER. Now, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] demanded a severance of the question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote on the question to recede and concur. I ask that the vote as to whether or not the House will recede be taken separately from the motion to concur.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama demands a division on the question, and the first part of it to be put will be to recede from the House amendment to Senate amendment No. 1. And that is all.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Is not a motion for a separate vote a preferential motion, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. I know, but this seems to have four propositions in it. The question is on the motion to recede from the House amendment to Senate amendment No. 1.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. KETTNER. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 103, noes 81.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I demand the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] demands the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 125, nays 138, answered "present" 6, not voting 164, as follows:

Mr. WEBB with Mr. WOODS.

Mr. WILSON of Florida with Mr. TEMPLE.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Now, Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. That is only one-quarter of the motion of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, the question being divided and the House having refused to recede, the question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina to further insist.

The SPEAKER. On amendment No. 1.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. At this stage of the proceedings, the House having refused to recede, is that not equivalent to a motion to insist, the previous question having been ordered?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; the House can insist or adhere, and the gentleman from South Carolina has moved to insist.

Mr. COX. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. COX. Would it be in order to move at this time to instruct the conferees to agree to 10 cents a mile?

The SPEAKER. It would not.

Mr. MANN. It would not be in order at any time, because the House has an amendment for 5 cents a mile, and you could not instruct the conferees contrary to the House amendment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina to further insist on House amendment to Senate amendment No. 1.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the second portion of the motion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HARRIS] as to amendment No. 30.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to amend the motion of the gentleman from Alabama—to substitute 5 cents—so that the same provision would apply to the House as the Senate?

The SPEAKER. No; the motion of the gentleman from Alabama was to recede from the House disagreement to Senate amendment 30 and concur in the same. At this stage of the proceedings, even if the previous question had not been ordered, that motion takes precedence of any other motion.

Mr. GARNER. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. If the question should be decided that the House would recede, would not it be in order to concur with an amendment making the mileage 5 cents for Members of the House?

Mr. MANN. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the previous question has been ordered, which cuts out amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was going to state that himself, if the gentleman from Illinois had not anticipated him. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama to recede from Senate amendment No. 30 and concur therein.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. RAKER) there were 68 ayes and 79 noes.

So the motion was lost.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina to further insist on the disagreement to Senate amendment No. 30.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina) there were 80 ayes and 66 noes.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House ask for a further conference with the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will announce the conferees.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Would a motion to instruct the conferees be in order?

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair that the last vote is equivalent to an instruction.

Mr. MANN. Has the Speaker named the conferees?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk was about to announce them.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House conferees be instructed to concur with the Senate and strike out all mileage.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that that motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FALCONER. Would it not be in order to instruct the conferees to give no further consideration to the Senate mileage at this time, but to insist that the House determine amendment No. 30 as the House shall see fit? In other words, why do not the House Members settle the mileage for the House and let the Senate do what it pleases in the Senate mileage? It can be done by considering the amendments separately.

The SPEAKER. Because it takes a statute to do it. One House can not pass a law by itself.

Mr. FALCONER. Of course, the Senate would have to agree. I appreciate that it takes the two Houses to enact a law, but I think the Senate would give the House the right to settle its own mileage and concur out of courtesy to the House. The House should reduce its own mileage instead of insisting on reducing the Senate mileage first.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, what became of my motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Florida, and he also recognized the gentleman from Washington to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. And the gentleman from Washington proceeded to make a motion.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Florida made the motion, and I made the point of order, and the Chair sustained the point of order.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I made a motion that the conferees be instructed.

The SPEAKER. That is in the nature of an amendment. Will the gentleman state his whole motion.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. That the conferees on the part of the House be instructed, as the sense of the House, to agree with the conferees on the part of the Senate that all mileage be stricken out of the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman's motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, what is in issue between the two Houses? The House can not instruct the conferees to do something which the conferees could not do without instructions. What is at issue between the two bodies is the question of the amount of mileage. The conferees can not exceed the amount named by the Senate, and they can not provide less than the amount named in the House amendment. Nor can the House itself amend its own amendment. I will refer the Speaker to Jefferson's Manual——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman need not take time to do that, because the gentleman is correct.

Mr. MANN. That would seem to settle the question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the motion of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] is not in order, because it is in the nature of an amendment. The Clerk will announce the conferees.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Speaker——

The Clerk read as follows:

Messrs. JOHNSON of South Carolina, BYRNS of Tennessee, and GOOD of Iowa.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Washington rise?

Mr. FALCONER. To submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask if it would not be in order to instruct the conferees to bring in a 10-cent mileage for House Members?

The SPEAKER. That is equivalent to an amendment, and the stage for amendments and everything else is passed. The matter is concluded for this particular time. It may come up again.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I know the Speaker wants to be right, and he usually is, but in answering the parliamentary inquiry of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. FALCONER] I think the Speaker misunderstood the status of the proposition that the gentleman was endeavoring to submit, which was with reference to whether or not it would be in order to instruct the conferees as to the rate of mileage upon this amendment. There has been no amendment by the House to the amendment of the Senate, as there was on amendment No. 1, which refers to the mileage of the Senate. The gentleman was endeavoring to get recognition from the Speaker when he was naming the conferees, but was only able to submit his question after they were named, and the Speaker held that the motion to instruct would be equivalent to an amendment, and, therefore, it would not be in order.

The SPEAKER. There was a time when his motion might have been in order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. When was that?

The SPEAKER. When the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] made his motion. If he had gotten in then, his motion might possibly have been in order.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. He was trying to get the floor.

The SPEAKER. Oh, that was two hours ago.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Speaker, when the motion of the gentleman from Florida was ruled out of order I had the recognition of the Chair.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. Oh, the Chair has a right to listen to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DONOVAN. But the gentleman has not submitted a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he has. The gentleman from Washington will proceed.

Mr. FALCONER. Mr. Speaker, when the motion of the gentleman from Florida was ruled out of order, I had the recognition of the Chair, and presented this proposition to the Chair and was interrupted by several Members on the floor, and meanwhile the conferees were named.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. There is no business before the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. Oh, the Chair recognized the gentleman to submit a parliamentary inquiry, and that was all he was ever recognized for.

Mr. FALCONER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] said that I had tried to make a motion, and I had the recognition of the Chair after the gentleman from Florida——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman had the recognition of the Chair to make a parliamentary inquiry. That is one thing. The recognition to make a motion is an entirely different thing. It was not offered at the proper time.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, let me call the attention of the Chair to the fact that he stated that he had recognized the gentleman from Florida to make a motion, and that he had recognized the gentleman from Washington for the purpose of making a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. That is exactly correct.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And the gentleman from Washington was trying to make his motion, and the parliamentarian called the Chair's attention to the fact that he had declared the motion of the gentleman from Florida out of order, sustaining a point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER. That is correct.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. And then the gentleman from Washington continued seeking recognition as the Chair named the conferees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington again rose for a parliamentary inquiry, and the Chair answered him, and then ordered the Clerk to announce the conferees, which he did. If the Chair had entertained the motion of the gentleman from Washington, it would have been against the practice of the House to instruct the conferees at that time, because the conferees had been named.

Mr. DONOVAN. Now, Mr. Speaker, can we have the regular order?

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 12579, the Indian appropriation bill, and ask that the House disagree to all of the Senate amendments thereto and ask for a conference.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN. Is this bill on the Speaker's table? I thought it was on the Union Calendar.

The SPEAKER. It is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman can not take it off the Speaker's table.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the Indian appropriation bill and the Senate amendments thereto.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to offer a motion to concur in one of the Senate amendments. I just want to know the status of the proposition. Is it in order now to make a motion before we go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to concur in that Senate amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. This bill is on the Union Calendar, and the proceeding is like that of any other bill on that calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12579, the Indian appropriation bill, with Mr. UNDERWOOD in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering the bill H. R. 12579, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (H. R. 12579) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. The Chair does not think there is any first reading of the amendments. The Chair thinks the procedure would be to read the amendments as they come. Does the gentleman desire to ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be closed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that all general debate be now closed and the bill be considered under the five-minute rule. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the Senate amendments?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have asked unanimous consent for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the Senate amendments. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, before going into this matter, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARRISON. Are these Senate amendments to be considered in the order in which they are in the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments after general debate is closed in the order in which they come in the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the Senate received this bill from the House in February. It was returned within the last week, and has been reported and sent to the Committee on Indian Affairs and reported back with instructions to disagree to all the Senate amendments and ask for a conference upon the same. We find that the Senate have added to the bill, in round numbers, more than $3,000,000 in various items, as follows: Increase in old items, $1,253,525. They have added new items in the bill amounting to $1,394,714, making a total increase of $2,648,239. The Senate decreased $341,500, leaving a net increase of $2,306,739.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. When the gentleman states the increases in the bill I do not think he takes into consideration one amendment in the bill, which proposes to send to the Court of Claims the Creek equalization item, which might result in a judgment of $4,000,000. He evidently has not taken that into consideration in his statement?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have not taken that into consideration or a further matter in controversy, the amount of money that might be paid the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians per capita and also the per capita payment that is proposed to be paid to the Cherokee Nation, that would possibly amount to $5,000,000 in the whole if we adopt the Senate amendment, but these amendments mentioned by me are direct appropriations.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, take, for instance, amendment No. 131, in reference to the Creek tribal funds, a proposition to equalize the pay to $800.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is the first one, I believe.

Mr. MANN. That would take about $3,000,000. That is a direct appropriation, although it does not specify the amount.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is correct. That was not taken into the estimate at all.

Mr. MANN. So that the gentleman's estimate of the amount added by the Senate does not take into consideration these appropriations which are indefinite, and which we know will appropriate many millions of dollars.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; that is correct. And I will state to the gentleman we only take the amount taken by the Senate in dollars and cents and not that accruing from new legislation in the bill.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If the gentleman will allow me to suggest, amendment No. 131 would probably pay to the Indians about $3,000,000. That is for money to their credit in the Treasury; they are entitled to that. The amendment No. 137 might result in a judgment amounting to nearly $4,000,000. The first amendment is to pay money which belongs to the Indians.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Which one does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The Creek equalization item. Amendment No. 131, providing for the payment to the Indians on an $800 payment, would take from the Treasury the money to the credit of the Indians, and that is about $3,000,000. The other amendment might result in a judgment of nearly $4,000,000.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. No; the gentleman knows it would not result in that.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I only have the statement of the counsel for the Indians themselves, and they make the claim it will take about $4,000,000.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. You can calculate the difference between $800 and $1,041 would be $241, and there are only 18,000; and if you will multiply 18,000 by 241 you will see it will not amount to more than half a million dollars.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes; it will.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I have not heard opposition but to two items in this bill—one the Mississippi Choctaw question and the other as to the Creek equalization question.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to direct the gentleman's attention to amendment numbered 13 of the Senate striking out that provision of the House which requires a civil-service examination of teachers connected with the Indian school service.

When that amendment was before the House it was contested by me and a number of other gentlemen, who did not believe it was right to require teachers who for years had been in the Indian school service to be ousted under the guise of a civil-service examination. I would like to know whether the House is going to have an opportunity, in case the Senate conferees should recede, to vote on this amendment striking out that provision?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the gentleman, I can state, if I am on that conference, I would be willing personally to say that I would bring back any amendment that any gentleman in good faith thought should be brought back to the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. So far as I am concerned, if the gentleman will agree to the Senate amendment striking it out, I will have no further interest in the provision. But if the Senate should recede and the gentleman should concur in that position, then I would like to have a separate vote, because when this amendment was under consideration in the House last it was just a few minutes before the House as a body went over to attend the memorial exercises in the Senate over the remains of Senator Bacon. There were Members in this House who wished to be heard, but were absent temporarily because of those exercises. I think it is owing to the House that if the Senate should recede and allow this provision to remain we be given an opportunity to contest that once more in the House, and I would like to know whether we will have that opportunity.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman again that if any gentleman here desires the committee should not pass upon any amendment that they point out I would be willing to disagree to it and bring it back to the House. My object is to get this bill to conference and agree upon everything we can, and the contested items could be brought back to the House for further action.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course the gentleman recognizes that we can move now to concur in this amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is in the same position.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I want to keep the record straight, and state as to the Creek equalization amendment, No. 137, if there should be a recovery on a $240 basis, that is the difference between $1,040 and $800, as the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] suggested——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. If there are only 18,000 Indians, it would be $3,320,000; but what I was figuring on was that there are about 20,000 Indians, which would make the amount something over $4,000,000. I was correct when I said it was about $4,000,000.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman will get that information to our friend from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The matter of the regulation of the Choctaws is of such great importance that I am sure it will be returned to the House before any action is taken in the conference committee. And if there are any other amendments I would be glad to hear from any gentlemen present if they desire a separate vote on them. This makes three, I believe.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask generally with reference to the bill. The gentleman refers to having these amendments returned to the House. The Senate has inserted a large number of very unusual amendments in this bill. Does not the gentleman think that this is the best way to have the bill considered, amendment by amendment, in this committee now, instead of leaving the conferees to the tender mercies of the Senate conferees when it comes to be a mere matter of trading?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would not the gentleman think that the custom followed by the House is the better one, to send all of this appropriation bill—and there are 168 amendments here—to conference and see what can be done there first before it is taken up from the House.

Mr. MANN. I would think that would be the proper procedure if these items were increases in amount, or if they were amendments such as ordinarily occur in appropriation bills. But here is amendment after amendment inserted by the Senate in this bill, which no one in this House will claim ought ever to have been put in the bill, even if they ought to be enacted into law.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am aware of that fact, and regret very much that they are in the bill.

Mr. MANN. It places the conferees on the part of the House in a very unpleasant position if they go into conference without any previous discussion or action in the House.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman, then, please point out some of these various amendments to which he objects?

Mr. MANN. I hope to do so as we proceed in the committee, though I would be willing to suggest some of them now. I would like to ask the gentleman a question in reference to these revolving appropriations. That is not a matter that we are wholly ignorant about, as I find we are about most of the amendments.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I find they claim in the report made by the Senate committee to the Senate that they have increased that appropriation $300,000. That is not correct. This is the language they used:

For the purpose of encouraging industry and self-support among the Indians and to aid them in the culture of fruits, grains, and other crops, appropriated by the House $400,000—

That is true—

Allowed by the committee in the sum of $100,000, a decrease of $300,000.

That is not true, for the reason that I find, under the head of "Montana": For support and civilization of Indians at Fort Peck Agency, Mont., the sum of $100,000; for the Blackfeet Reservation, $100,000, and for the Flathead Reservation, $100,000.

That makes $300,000. And that puts it back to the $400,000 that they originally appropriated. And, then, for support and civilization of the confederated tribes and bands under Warm Springs Agency (Oreg.) Reservation, $100,000.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman, if he will permit, that they have added about $1,000,000 and reduced the lump-sum appropriation $300,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And the other item is Utah—for support and civilization of the Confederated Bands of Ute Indians, $250,000.

It is only a decrease upon paper; in fact, they have added about $600,000 to the appropriation.

Mr. MANN. The $400,000 item that the gentleman refers to is amendment numbered 19. No; that is $500,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have not that before me. I was reading from the report made by the Senate committee to the Senate. I will find it in a moment.

Mr. MANN. Well, all through this bill——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Here it is; line 21, page 15:

For the purpose of encouraging industry and self-support among the Indians, and to aid them in the culture of fruits, grains, and other crops, $400,000.

The Senate cut that down to $100,000, and claimed, as they state in the report, that they have thereby saved the Government $300,000.

Mr. MANN. That brings up the very question that I wanted to bring to the attention of the gentleman. Amendment numbered 28 reads "$400,000," but is reduced to $100,000; but that does not change the status of that fund; and under the provision of the House that fund may be expended with a provision for its repayment to the United States on or before June 30, 1925, but it is not made a revolving fund.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. That was stricken out in the House. Thereupon the Senate reduces that amount in that item and puts the same thing in half a dozen or so other places in the bill, and makes each one of those a revolving fund. In other words, the department—and it is the same department that has the Reclamation Service in it—having seen how recklessly extravagant the Reclamation Service has become and how foolishly they have expended their money where Congress has not reserved the right of appropriating it from year to year, now wants to get possession of a large fund and have it repaid to them, with permission to them to pay it out without reappropriation by Congress. In other words, we would have nothing more to say about it for 10 years to come—until 1925. Now, what does the gentleman from Texas think about that proposition?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say that the gentleman is correct in his statement. I think the other body is entirely wrong, for the further reason that this is a lump-sum appropriation that could be used for the benefit of all the Indians in all parts of the United States. In the way they have it in this amendment, only $100,000 would be used in that way, while $900,000 is specifically appropriated to certain States.

Mr. MANN. And it is a revolving fund besides?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; without interest.

Mr. MANN. Let us see. We have a proposition now pending in the House, shortly to come up, possibly to-morrow, because of the gross extravagance and foolish expenditures in the Irrigation Service, to have the Government advance the public money to go to those who go on the public lands in the Irrigation Service and have them pay it back in 10 years' time without interest. We have various propositions pending before Congress to have the Government advance to the farmers and other people money, with interest. Now, here is a proposition that first comes to a vote in the House, to have the Government advance money to the Indians for stock raising and other purposes that are presumed to be profitable, without interest. I would like to know whether the gentleman thinks we ought to go into the business of advancing large amounts of money to anybody for their profit without exacting any interest whatever for the use of the money?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I agree with the gentleman as to that, and will state another thing they have done. In that same item, in lines 10 to 13, they have stricken out a provision which protects the Treasury to a certain extent. That provision is amendment numbered 29, and reads as follows:

And provided also, That not to exceed $50,000 of the amount herein appropriated shall be expended on any one reservation or for the benefit of any one tribe of Indians.

Now, it appears that by striking that out, they intended to specialize, as they have done elsewhere in this bill, and give the appropriation to certain States and certain Indians. These lump-sum appropriations ought to be under the control of the Indian Bureau, and not under the direction of Congress, as is proposed by this bill. I will say to the gentleman further that I certainly shall not agree to that without referring it back to the House.

Mr. MANN. I see a number of claims inserted in this bill, contrary to the practice of the House and the rules of the Senate. Has this bill become a claims bill?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman is aware that in the Senate, unless some Senator does not want the claim put in, or if it is a claim of a very popular Senator or something that they dislike to object to, the claims go through, while the others have a point of order raised against them and they are not put in the bill.

Mr. MANN. I see a number of amendments are proposed to start in and build gymnasiums for the Indians. I have always supposed that the Indians were quite athletic and capable of exercising out of doors. What is the object of further injuring their health by building gymnasiums for them? [Laughter.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I believe in one item in the district of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] there is an appropriation of $30,000 for that purpose. It is said to be necessary to have it in the Haskell Institute.

Mr. MANN. There is that item for the Haskell Institute, and there is one for a gymnasium at $25,000 at Mount Pleasant, Mich., and there are several others of the same sort elsewhere throughout the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman, then, would object to gymnasiums and would desire to have items on that subject brought back to the House?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I can not be accused of being responsible for that, because I opposed that in my own committee.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is my remembrance.

Mr. MANN. I certainly was not accusing any Member of the House of that gross extravagance.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I thought the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] referred the matter to me, and by that reference I was held responsible for it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I knew it was a gross abuse.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I deny that I am in any way responsible for it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes; I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. I notice throughout many of the amendments introduced by the Senate a studied purpose to give control of the expenditures of these various sums to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in place, as formerly, of the Secretary of the Interior. Now, does the gentleman believe that the Secretary of the Interior should be ignored in the disbursement of these funds? Does not the gentleman think that the Secretary of the Interior has shown his worth and integrity of purpose not only for the Indian Service, but for all services, so that he should supervise these funds and not leave it to a subordinate?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman that all these amendments have been rereferred to the Committee on Indian Affairs; and, while it is not stated in the report, the committee decided that appropriations of that kind should be made only through the Secretary of the Interior—that he should have the right, as heretofore, to control this. It was a change in the law made by the Senate that we did not think ought to obtain.

Mr. STAFFORD. It does not seem to have any merit whatsoever. I am surprised that it was ever incorporated, even in a Senate amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think the gentleman is correct, and I can assure him that that will either go out or come back to the House.

Does any other gentleman desire to ask any questions?

Mr. MONDELL. I should like to have some information in regard to amendment No. 155, page 83—

For a water supply for 120,000 acres, more or less, of irrigable land allotted to Indians in the so-called Wapato project on the Yakima Indian Reservation in the State of Washington, $100,000, to be covered into the reclamation fund as a first installment on account of the repayment of the cost of constructing storage works to impound the necessary flood waters of the Yakima River.

That, as I understand, appropriates $200,000, although that does not appear to be very clear. It seems that $100,000 is to be placed in the reclamation fund, and then another $100,000 is appropriated. It is not clear what is to be done with that, in all, $200,000. What is this Wapato project expected to cost?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have not the figures before me. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] on that question. He has had it up very recently with the department.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman that for many years there has been in the Indian appropriation bill, when it came back from the other end of the Capitol, an item proposing an appropriation of $1,800,000 for the purpose of constructing storage reservoirs and furnishing water to the Indians in the Yakima Reservation upon what is known as the Wapato project. This grew out of the fact that some years ago an appropriation of water was made by the Secretary of the Interior for these Yakima Indians of 147 second-feet, which was not sufficient for their needs, and not as much as I think they should have. The Sunnyside project, which is a project under the Reclamation Service on the other side of the river, appropriated sufficient water for their purposes from the Yakima River, and practically took all the water there was in the river except this 147 second-feet which had been appropriated for the Indians. A joint commission was appointed under a provision that was incorporated in conference last year when the $1,800,000 item went out of the Indian appropriation bill, providing for an investigation of the matter for the purpose of ascertaining all the facts and seeing if it would be possible to work out a proposition that would do justice by all parties concerned, and particularly by the Indians. That joint commission, consisting of two Senators and two Members of the House, made their report early in this session, in which it is stated in substance that the Indians were equitably at least, if not legally, entitled to one-half of the flow of the Yakima River, and that the appropriation made by the Secretary of the Interior of 147 second-feet was not equitable and was not a sufficient amount of water to irrigate the allotted lands of the Indians on the Yakima Reservation.

The commission was of the opinion that the settlers who had appropriated water under the Sunnyside project, who were under contract to pay for their land all that it was worth—I think about $50 an acre—and the Government having guaranteed them water, their charge could not and ought not to be increased. If the Government had neglected to make an appropriation sufficient to provide for the Indians what they were entitled to, the Government itself ought to pay any expense that there might be of providing sufficient water to irrigate the lands of the Indians up to what would be right and fair and equitable; in other words, provide the amount of water that the Indians ought to have had appropriated for their use originally. The commission not desiring to have this project carried on as an Indian reclamation project, finding that the Reclamation Service had sufficient water already in storage, so that they could furnish the amount of water that we think ought to be furnished to the Indians, reported in favor of an appropriation being authorized of $500,000 to the reclamation fund, to be appropriated annually, in installments, upon estimates that would be made, sufficient to pay for the water that might be used from year to year, believing that it would be better to buy the water from the Reclamation Service than to try and provide for constructing reservoirs and providing storage, as this amendment proposes. The commission found that the Indians were entitled, equitably if not legally, to one-half of the flow of the Yakima River, which would irrigate or furnish water sufficient for about one-half of the individual allotments of the Indians within the Wapato project. The Senate amendment provides for making it a reclamation project and providing that all of the lands of the Indians in the Wapato project shall be irrigated and a charge made upon the land, or to the individual Indians, for one-half of the cost.

I can say to the gentleman that it would cost about $1,800,000 to carry out the plan that the Reclamation Service have in mind, if we provide the means for them to do it. In other words, this amendment would mean ultimately the expenditure of probably $1,800,000. I am opposed and I believe the gentlemen who will be the other House conferees are opposed to this proposition proposed by the Senate. We have opposed it in every session of Congress for the last four or five years. I think originally the Senate proposed making it practically a gratuity appropriation of $1,800,000 to furnish water for the Indian allotments. One-sixth of the land is now in white ownership. White men have acquired the lands either by purchasing inherited lands of deceased Indians or from Indians who have been given patents in fee. The joint commission that I have referred to concluded, and so reported, that the purchasers of such lands purchased the water rights, and that in furnishing water for the Indians we would have also to furnish water for those who had acquired the lands from the Indians, who had bought them in some instances at prices that certainly must have included the water rights, because some of those lands sold for $100 or $150 an acre, as I recall, and gentlemen will appreciate that that must have contemplated that it included the water rights. In other words, the water right of the Indian allottee went with the land.

Mr. MONDELL. That is, some of those Indian lands sold for those prices?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes; as high as $100 or $150 an acre. Now, if the gentleman has examined this provision——

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will allow me before he goes on further, I am not very clear as to what the situation is. I suppose I ought to know more about this matter, but I do not. There is the Sunnyside project on one side of the river; that is not on an Indian reservation.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is correct.

Mr. MONDELL. On the other side is the Indian Reservation. Have any works been constructed for the irrigation of this land?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. The canal and distributing works have all been constructed?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. There are canals, but it is claimed by the Reclamation Service that to carry out the plan that it proposes and that is claimed will be necessary to furnish water for the reclamation of all the land, that some or all of these canals will have to be reconstructed. I will say to the gentleman that there is a drainage ditch that has been constructed at a cost of $250,000, and the construction of the reclamation project has been paid out of the proceeds received from the sale of the Indian lands, including that $250,000 expended for constructing the drainage ditch.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman says "has been paid." He means that it is to be paid out of the proceeds received hereafter.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I do not think it has not been fully reimbursed, and I am not sure that any of it has been reimbursed.

Mr. MONDELL. Where are the lands which the Indians are to sell?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. They are dry lands scattered throughout a large area of what was formerly reservation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Texas permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. There are a few Senate amendments which I think ought to be discussed in the House before they go to conference. If we should have a little extra time, and not be too strict about enforcing the five-minute rule when we reach those amendments, in order that they may receive better discussion, would it be possible to have an understanding to that effect and then an agreement that general debate shall run for the rest of the day?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. On all the amendments?

Mr. MANN. Yes; that to-day be devoted to general debate and then some of these amendments that require special consideration—the gentleman from Mississippi has one——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It would include all the amendments?

Mr. MANN. Yes; but the most of them would take no time at all.

Mr. CARTER. As I understand, the proposition of the gentleman is that we devote the remainder of the afternoon to general debate?

Mr. MANN. Yes; and that general debate shall close at the adjournment this afternoon.

Mr. CARTER. And then take up the amendments seriatim?

Mr. MANN. They have to be taken up seriatim.

Mr. CARTER. And the gentleman couples with it the additional request that we shall not be too strict under the five-minute rule?

Mr. MANN. Yes; otherwise there would be more time used for general debate.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi is interested in an item which I am sure he does not want to discuss in general debate with nobody here. I want to offer some observations on the same item, and I do not want to talk to empty seats.

Mr. MANN. That was the reason I made the suggestion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It is a matter of vital importance and should be discussed when Members are here interested in the progress of the bill. If we can have plenty of time——

Mr. MANN. A reasonable time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. A reasonable time, I am willing.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the rest of the day be used for general debate, and that after to-day the bill be taken up under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that all general debate on this bill shall close when the House adjourns to-night. Is there objection?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, that is perfectly agreeable to me, except I think there ought to be some agreement on this particular item. I am willing to make whatever agreement the gentleman wishes.

Mr. MANN. We can not make an agreement now as to items.

Mr. CARTER. I think there will be no disposition to cut the gentleman off, but to give him plenty of time on that item.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Texas has stated that he would be lenient.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that at the adjournment to-night general debate shall close. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Has there been any division of time?

Mr. CARTER. No.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time be equally divided, and that the gentleman from South Dakota control one half and I control the other half.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the time be equally divided, the gentleman from South Dakota to control one half and he to control the other half. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HARRISON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask whether to-morrow is to take the place of Calendar Wednesday?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not make a decision as to matters that affect the House, but the Chair will state as a matter of information that to-morrow has been agreed upon to take the place of Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that as soon as we go into consideration of this bill, either to-morrow or the next day, that this item relative to the Mississippi Choctaws, Senate amendment 139, one of the most important here, be taken up first for consideration and debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that when general debate is closed on the bill the first amendment that shall be considered shall be the amendment relating to the Mississippi Choctaws. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I do not propose to let the opportunity pass to say that this is not an amendment entitled to the consideration which it is likely to receive. It was put in the bill on the floor of the Senate and never has been considered either in the committees of the House or Senate. It proposes to undo the work of 20 years of our State. It proposes to overturn work of Federal courts, Federal commissions, and departmental actions that have been settled long ago. We do not propose to have outsiders overturn 20 years of hard work at an expenditure of millions of dollars that has been made to complete the rolls. It is amazing that such an amendment as this should be considered anywhere in anything like a serious vein. These people have refused for almost a hundred years to join their people in the West. They long ago ate up their patrimony and are now, through a lot of snitching attorneys, trying to eat up the Indians of the West.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma oppose the amendment of the Senate?

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, undoubtedly; every line of it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Then the gentleman from Oklahoma hopes that the conferees will secure an agreement eliminating the amendment?

Mr. FERRIS. I do, certainly; and it is their duty to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, in deference to my colleague [Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma], who desires to have this considered first, I have no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, as I understand the procedure, when we take up this bill under the five-minute rule, each amendment will be considered in its order, just as if we were considering the bill as an original proposition. I do not think any exception should be made to any one of them, thus postponing the consideration of the other provisions. I recognize fully that it is an important amendment, but there are other important amendments in this bill. Why should we make such an exceptional rule as to take this one up out of its order?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think this will take more time than any other amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. And it was for that reason that I make the request. The other amendments will not take so much time. There are a great many Members who are interested in this particular amendment, and we would like to debate it at a time when the Members are present. The gentleman knows very well that with a baseball game going on in the city of Washington, in the later hours of the afternoon, the membership present may be somewhat sparse.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is possible that we might meet to consider this bill on Friday at 11 o'clock, and that by 12 o'clock, when most of the Members would be present, the other amendments would be all disposed of, and that then we could consider this particular amendment.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, there has been a great deal of misinformation about this question, more I think than I ever saw about any question in my life. Members ought to have an opportunity to hear what is going to be said on both sides of this controversy before they vote, because it is a vital proposition which may in the end involve this Government in a claim perhaps of millions of dollars. It has already been settled by the courts and by the Federal Government itself, and for that reason I think we ought to have the fullest possible membership here when the question is discussed. I hope my friend from Wisconsin will not object to having it considered first, because I understand the reason the gentleman from Mississippi wants it considered first is that we will then have a better audience.

Mr. STAFFORD. There will be no similar requests made as to any other amendment?

Mr. CARTER. I think not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I shall not object.

Mr. FINLEY. About how much time will this Choctaw amendment require for discussion?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know how many will desire to speak on the other side. I really think not over two hours of discussion will be needed. That would be my idea, offhand.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say this, that some of us have very important legislation of a general character here that we would like to wind up certainly next week, and if the consideration of this amendment at that time would interfere with that, I would not want to give my consent.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman refer to the Moon omnibus post-office bill?

Mr. FINLEY. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. In my opinion it will not be possible to get that up until maybe the week following. We have at present under consideration the Adamson dam bill, which has the right of way, and under present procedure we are not likely to reach a vote on that bill until next Friday or Saturday.

Mr. FINLEY. I am familiar with that bill.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, before this request is put I would like to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] if he also is of opinion as expressed by his colleague [Mr. FERRIS] that that amendment ought to be eliminated from the bill?

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman means the entire amendment?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. In response to that I will say this, that by the Atoka agreement and the supplementary agreement of July 1, 1902, a division of these funds was promised to the Choctaw and Chickasaw people, to begin not later than March 4, 1907. These agreements were made for the purpose of getting the Choctaws and Chickasaws to surrender their tribal rights——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, let me suggest that if the gentleman is going to discuss this amendment——

Mr. CARTER. Oh, I am just about through, if the gentleman will permit. And, I think, in view of the difference in time consumed by the gentleman and myself, he should certainly feel the responsibility upon himself of listening to me for just a few minutes, for I have listened to him, with very much pleasure, for a great many hours.

Mr. MONDELL. I was not criticizing my friend for taking the time, but realizing the importance of the matter it occurred to me that it would be better to have it discussed at one time.

Mr. CARTER. That is very true, but I want to answer the gentleman from South Dakota, who has asked me a question, and to give my reasons. This pledge having been made, I certainly would think the Government ought to stand by its pledge to the Indians and divide those funds. Therefore, I would be in favor of the amendment for a division of the funds, but I would not be in favor of an amendment which prohibited a division of those funds—the Williams amendment—inserted on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I thought that was the position of the gentleman, and I was rather surprised that his colleague from Oklahoma would go so far as to say that he was opposed to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that when general debate is closed and the bill is taken up for consideration under the five-minute rule, the amendment relating to the Mississippi Choctaws, amendment 139, be first considered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, a moment ago the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] asked me in reference to a certain Senate amendment. The gentleman, who is aware more fully of the history of that amendment than I, knows there are two parts to that amendment, one put in by the Senate committee and one on the floor of the Senate. It is the one adopted by the Senate known as the Williams amendment to which I am opposed, and I had no reference at all to the wisdom, the justness, and correctness of the other amendment at all.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I thought the gentleman so understood.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman it is only one amendment, and I was speaking of that amendment, and I understood the gentleman to say that he was opposed to it.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman is right about it being one amendment. I am not opposed to what the committee did in granting a payment of their own money, but what the Senate did in trying to tack on those Mississippi Choctaws who still live apart from their tribes, have always refused to come, and still refuse to come.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman from South Dakota use some of his time?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will yield further to interrogatories of the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. I will be very brief and ask the gentleman a few more questions in regard to item 155, what is known as the Wapato project on the Yakima Indian Reservation, which is referred to. So far as the project has been constructed, I understand it has been constructed out of appropriations reimbursable and constructed by the Indian Bureau. Is that true?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. And what the gentlemen of the joint committee recommended, as I understand, is the expenditure through the Reclamation Service of approximately half a million dollars for the purpose of upplementing the water supply for the irrigation project that is already there.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is exactly the proposition. In other words, we do not propose to appropriate any money for the construction of any reservoir or building of any reclamation work, bu. simply to pay the Reclamation Service for the water that we think those Indians are entitled to and that has been taken from them and is now being distributed on lands that have been acquired by white settlers under reclamation projects conducted under the Reclamation Service.

Mr. MONDELL. It is proposed to purchase from the Reclamation Service, for the benefit of this land, perpetual water rights in excess of the rights they already have sufficient for the complete irrigation of their lands?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes. I will say to the gentleman we take into consideration that there would be some credit given of the return flow. We already have a drainage ditch there that cost $250,000, and there is considerable water that returns to the Yakima River that we think will be used by the Reclamation Service, and we are entitled to some credit for it, and while Mr. Newell stated that it would take something more than $600,000 to pay all the service, even with this water, we concluded that, taking everything into consideration, $500,000 was a fair amount; that the Reclamation Service, without loss, could furnish the water necessary to provide these Indians with water.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, the plan which seems to be apparent in the Senate amendment seems to me very much more. The project that the joint commission recommended, then, is a project for the increase of the water supply for the Indians, to be paid for out of the Indian funds; that is, to be paid for out of appropriations which are reimbursable?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. From the proceeds received from the sales of the surplus lands.

Mr. MONDELL. And that is to be paid out of the Indian funds, if those funds ever come in for the benefit of the Indians, and no provision would be made for individual repayment?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Not at all.

Mr. MONDELL. Either on behalf of the Indians or on behalf of the grantees of the Indians?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. That is correct.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, the Senate proposition seems to be a very much more ambitious enterprise.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Let me say to the gentleman what I omitted to say, that the joint commission as a part of its recommendation suggested that the Indians be permitted to sell one-half of their allotment, the money to be withheld and to be expended for their benefit, which would enable the Indians to be supplied with implements and teams and improve the other half of their allotment, for which we propose to furnish water sufficient to irrigate it. Now, this proposition involves the irrigation and the reclamation of the other 40 acres and provides that the individual Indians shall pay the cost of the reclamation, and they have gone so far as to propose a lien upon the individual allotment, which, in my judgment, is clearly unconstitutional, because the act expressly provides that the land shall be exempted from any lien for a period of 25 years and Congress certainly can not make any lien in direct contradiction to it considered in the allotment act originally.

Mr. MONDELL. But the gentleman says that a reimbursement by the Indians and their grantees is contemplated in the Senate provision. Well, it would seem that it is, and yet there is a question about that, because while at one point the paragraph states that the entire cost shall be reimbursed, there is another provision to the effect that the cost of the water right shall be $4 per acre-foot, and so forth. Those seem to conflict. Now, I do not want to interrogate the gentleman at length or take up the time of the committee in regard to these matters if the gentleman can assure us that the House conferees can stand against the Senate amendment in its present form.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I can say, speaking only for myself, that the House conferees on several occasions have not only stood against this provision but have succeeded in eliminating it from the bill; and last year, in order that we might have information and ascertain what the facts were and do justice, if injustice had been done, to the Indians, this very joint commission was appointed, and it has made a report; and I think the gentlemen on the other side of the House——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. A unanimous report.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Are in favor of the proposition on this bill as a substitute for the Senate amendment that conforms to the recommendation of the joint commission. Now, I do not know that my coconferees feel that way about it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman's statement is correct.

Mr. MONDELL. The Senate amendment not only seems to be very questionable as to its propriety from the standpoint of the character of the project, but the details under which the project is proposed to be carried out is, it seems to me, not a wise one, not a workable one, so that, expressing the hope the Senate amendment will go out and that something more clearly along the line of the report of the joint commission be substituted in its stead, I do not care to take up the time of the committee further.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman desire to use any time?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I can use 10 minutes over here at present.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. All right. The gentleman may use the 10 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] 10 minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, in 1912, in the Sixty-second Congress, I introduced H. R. 19557, and thereafter H. R. 22352. At the beginning of this Congress, on April 7, 1913, I introduced bill H. R. 52, which had for its object and purpose the creation of a national park out of what is known as the Peter Lassen Mountain, or Lassen Peak, in Shasta, Lassen, Tehama, and Plumas Counties, in northern California. On the 30th of May, 1914, it was evidenced that an active volcano was then in the process of eruption. Some days ago I inserted some matters in the RECORD on that subject, and now, to confirm that statement, I desire to read the following dispatch from Red Bluff, Cal., dated June 30, 1914, and published in the Washington Post:

MOUNT LASSEN AGAIN ACTIVE—CALIFORNIA VOLCANIC PEAK EXPLODES AGAIN FOR THE THIRTEENTH TIME.

RED BLUFF, CAL., June 30.

Lassen Peak exploded to-day in its thirteenth eruption since May 30, with a dense column of black smoke that shot up thousands of feet and drifted slowly northward. A few minutes later a smaller column of black smoke fringed with whitish steam ascended more gradually and is still rising.

The eruption has lasted longer and has the appearance of being more violent than any that preceded it.

After taking the angle of elevation with a transit the county surveyor estimated the height of the first column at 3,000 feet. At the end of an hour it had dwindled to 500 feet, and the flutings of white in its sides indicated that it was mostly steam. This dense black of the first outburst was due to a heavy freight of volcanic sand.

Counting the eruption of Sunday night, reported to-day from Mineral, this last is the thirteenth decisive outbreak of Lassen Peak since it first awoke a month ago to-day.

In 1884 Prof. Diller made a thorough geological survey of this territory. He is again and now personally upon the ground, under the direction of the Geological Survey, and has made a report to the survey, giving a history of these outbreaks, showing that it is the only active volcano in continental United States; in fact, upon any mainland. And in connection with my remarks upon this subject, I desire to insert in the RECORD a statement in regard to this matter from the Geological Survey.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. The following is the statement from the Geological Survey:

[From United States Geological Survey.]

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY REPORTS ON LASSEN ERUPTION.

In a report just forwarded to Washington from the field, Geologist J. S. Diller suggests a connection between the Lassen Peak eruption and the San Francisco 1915 exposition.

Mr. Diller was ordered to visit the scene of volcanic eruption, and his detailed statement was made public by the United States Geological Survey yesterday. The geologist points out that old Vulcan may be preparing an American Vesuvius for the Panama-Pacific Exposition. The Pacific Ocean is girdled by volcanoes, and live ones are common in the Central American countries, to which Panama belongs. Mr. Diller reasons thus:

"So it is up to Vulcan to prepare a near-by exhibit for the occasion, and he evidently sees his duty and is rejuvenating the energy of Lassen Peak as a kind of volcanic moving picture.

"Mount Rainier and Mount Shasta, the beautiful cones so much in evidence to the traveler on the Pacific coast north of San Francisco, are now finding an up-to-date rival in Lassen Peak, which is plainly in view from the railroad for many miles in the Sacramento Valley, between Redding and Red Bluff. Lassen Peak is the southern end of the Cascade Range, and it stands between the Sierre Nevada on the southeast and the Klamath Mountains on the northwest. Its lavas erupted in past ages reach the Sacramento Valley on the one side and on the other form a part of the vast volcanic field, one of the greatest in the world, that stretches far across California, Oregon, Washington, and Idaho to the Yellowstone National Park.

"Of all portions of the Cascade Range, Lassen Peak still retains the largest remnant of its once vigorous volcanic energy. Morgan and Suppan Hot Springs and Bumpass Hell, on the south, as well as Hot Spring Valley and the boiling mud lake Tartarus, on the southeast, have long attracted the attention not only of Californians, but to some extent of the tourists, to whom the region is growing more accessible every year. If to these already-established attractions be added a frequent occurrence of the recent volcanic plays of Lassen Peak, the region will take high rank among nature's wonderlands.

"But what is the nature of this new activity of Lassen? Is it really volcanic? Will it soon dwindle and become wholly quiescent, or, on the other hand, is it the precursor of a more profound eruption, like that of Krakatoa? The excellent photographs that have been taken of the outburst, especially those by G. F. Milford and the series by B. F. Loomis, of Viola, taken from a point 6 miles northwest of Lassen Peak, leave little doubt in the mind of anyone familiar with volcanic phenomena that the outburst is essentially volcanic. These photographs are strikingly similar to those taken by Johnston-Lavis showing the progress of an eruption in the Lipari Islands, whose volcanic character is well known.

"The eruptions of Lassen Peak began May 30, at 5.30 p. m., with an outburst of steam which, according to Forest Supervisor W. J. Rushing, continued about 10 minutes. It formed a crater in the snow-covered summit of Lassen about 25 by 40 feet in extent and covered the encircling snow for a distance of 300 feet with a mantle of dark, wet dust. Harvey Abbey, a forest ranger, visited the scene and reported the facts.

"On the following day at 8 a. m. another eruption occurred, and on June 8, a week later, the third and much larger outbreak took place. It lasted 30 minutes, and the rolling column of dense black smoke rose to the height of 2,500 feet. Stones were hurled from the crater, and the Forest Service outlook house, a quarter of a mile away on the tiptop of Lassen Peak, was broken by some of them. Blocks and smaller fragments accumulated about the crater to a depth of several feet. The dust and sulphurous gases carried southward by the wind were observed at Mineral, the forestry station, and the dust was noted 5 miles beyond. Forest rangers who were in the neighborhood of the summit during the eruption heard the rushing steam and the falling rocks but report no rumbling or subterranean noises, earth shocks, electrical phenomena, or great heat beyond that of steam. The dust was practically cold when it fell Considerable volumes of water were ejected, probably wholly in the form of steam. The water condensing from this steam washed a gully in the snow to the adjacent lakelet which occupies what prior to this latest eruption had long been regarded as the youngest crater of the Lassen volcano. The new crater is not quite over the throat of the old but is a few hundred feet to the northwestward.

"In all there have been 11 eruptions up to the date of this report, June 21. The most violent was at 9 a. m., June 14, when several overventuresome persons were injured by falling or rolling stones. The eruption was visible from the Sacramento Valley, nearly 40 miles away, and created profound interest. The last eruption to date was Friday, June 19, and of relatively small energy. Mr. Rushing reports that eruptions are generally if not always preceded by a complete cessation of escaping steam."

Mr. Diller has been familiar with Lassen Peak for over 30 years, and his present observations are those of a geologist who had made a special study of this volcano on several previous visits. His statement continues:

"With successive eruptions the new crater is enlarging. June 20, when Mr. B. F. Loomis and I visited it, it was 400 feet long and 100 feet wide, with a depth of not over 100 feet. It appears to follow a fissure running a little north of east and south of west. The escaping steam from the southwest end of the fissure is visible in the excellent photograph obtained by Mr. Loomis.

"The other hot holes about Lassen Peak, as far as I can learn, have not increased their activity, unless it is Bumpass Hell, which is always fuming, but nothing like an eruption has been reported.

"No definite molten products have been found in connection with the recent eruptions of Lassen Peak. The ejected dust, as far as can be judged from an examination with a small pocket lens, is disintegrated or pulverized dacite, perhaps in part decomposed. The quartz, and apparently also the glassy feldspar, are bright, but the hornblende, augite, and mica are, of course, not so abundant in the dacite and are less evident. An examination with a petrographic microscope confirms the conclusion that the dust is the product of the pulverizing action of the explosive gases on the rocks through which they are escaping and not the result of the explosive expansion of gases in a liquid lava.

"That heat has recently risen in the core of Lassen Peak is evident from the fact that whereas it was once cold now it is hot and steaming. When E. E. Hayden and I were on the mountain in July, 1883, and slid down the 2,000-foot snow bank into Hat Creek on our way to Yellow Butte, there was no sign of heat in the summit of Lassen Peak. The rocky summit of the peak, struck by many thunderbolts during storms and superficially fused here and there by the lightning to fulgerite, is still as it was then, and the little lake is there, as in 1883, but the heat and the crater are new. Mr. Rushing tells me that these new features appeared with the first eruption. But the fact that the other hot places about the mountain are not yet perceptibly hotter indicates that the rise of temperature is local and does not, at least as yet, affect the mountain mass. Time alone can tell what Lassen is going to do. The volcano may subside to its former quiescence. But we must not forget that it was only the top of the old Vesuvius that was blown off to make Monte Somma and the Vesuvius of to-day. Krakatoa blew up from the very base with tremendous effect. There seems no good reason at present to fear a Krakatoan outbreak at Lassen Peak, but the part of wisdom dictates a close watch.

"Eruptions, as a rule, break out suddenly. Sightseers will generally find the viewpoint from which Loomis's photographs were taken close enough if the mountain is active; but if all is quiet and the seeker after knowledge must see the crater for himself, he should be sure to ascend on the windward side and approach with caution."

On July 1 there was another extensive eruption. I insert a later telegram from Red Bluff, Cal., of July 1, which was printed in the Evening Star of to-day, which is as follows:

CALIFORNIA'S VOLCANO IS AGAIN IN ERUPTION—GREAT COLUMN OF DENSE BLACK SMOKE STREAMS MILE HIGH IN THE AIR.

After less than 24 hours of quietness, Lassen Peak burst forth early to-day in a stupendous eruption—the fourteenth in the series that began May 30.

No flames were seen, but the vast plume of blackened steam from the crater waved a mile high in the sky and volcanic ash fell at Macomber Flats, 13 miles distant.

COLUMN OF DENSE SMOKE.

For a little less than half an hour the inverted cone of soaring gases maintained sharply defined the well-known volcanic outline. First, from the mouth of the crater itself stood a vertical shaft of jet-black ash. As the shaft rose it mushroomed outward, keeping at its heart the black core of ash. So great was the force of the eruption that the height of the cloud seemed to equal the distance from the mouth of the crater to the plateau at the base of the peak proper. It was almost as if one mountain had been stood atop of the other.

TWO ERUPTIONS AT ONCE.

At this distance there was the appearance of what seemed a thin sheet of gas hissing from a crevice or a fissure on the north slope, distinct from the main crater. Two eruptions seemed to be going on at the same time.

The true volcanic nature of the eruption, as determined by J. S. Diller, of the United States Geological Survey, was further emphasized to-day by the strong stench of sulphur perceptible at Volta and at Viola, 22 miles down the wind to the north.

The following items from the Sacramento Bee, of June 27, 1914, are most interesting:

LASSEN THROWS OUT ORE CONTAINING QUICKSILVER—ASSAYER PRONOUNCES SOUVENIRS FROM VOLCANO AS CINNABAR ORE; FOUND NEAR NEW CRATER.

REDDING, SHASTA COUNTY, June 27.

The eruption of Mount Lassen may lead to the discovery of a quicksilver mine. That ore containing some value in quicksilver was cast up by the volcano and discovered by Charles Piftschek and Antone Herzleib, of this city.

Constable Frank Rieger, of Hat Creek, 20 miles from the crater, visited the mountain. He is a brother-in-law of Charles Piftschek. Rieger, a farmer, picked up three pieces of rock 100 feet from the crater and sent them to Piftschek as souvenirs.

ASSAYER PASSES ON THEM.

Piftschek is a well-posted mining man. He showed the specimens to his mining partner, Anton Herzleib. The latter, who has had considerable experience in quicksilver mining, declared he believed the pieces contained quicksilver. A few simple tests convinced Herzleib to his own satisfaction. He submitted the rock to A. McAfee, the assayer. McAfee pronounced the specimens cinnabar ore, but he has not yet analyzed them to fix the value. "Unquestionably cinnabar ore," says Assayer McAfee.

In this connection it is to be remembered that the greatest quicksilver mine in the State, the New Almaden, is located in basaltic formation of volcanic origin.

TELLS PEAK DISTURBANCES RECALLED—MUD AND ROCKS THROWN OUT IN 1908.

PLACERVILLE, EL DORADO COUNTY, June 27.

A disturbance on Tells Peak, in this county, during the summer of 1908, discovered by a surveying party, in charge of Herman D. Jerrett, is recalled by the activity of Mount Lassen.

Tells Peak, in the Sierra Range, in the eastern part of El Dorado County, west of Lake Tahoe, reaches an elevation of 9,125 feet. Along the side of the mountain, at a height of 6,300 feet, the surveying party found a cavity 4 or 5 feet in diameter, from which a geyser had lately occurred.

MUD AND STONES THROWN OUT.

Directly in the front of the cavity, for a distance of 100 feet, the hot water, mud, and stones had been thrown with great violence, bruising bark on the trees, cutting off large branches and destroying vegetation on the ground where the water had fallen. The scars on the trees were still fresh.

Jerrett states there are no cones or other evidence of volcanic activity on Tells Peak itself, but the country thereabout abounds with lava relics of disturbances in an earlier age. Northeast of this peak, at a distance of about 5 miles, are found great lava beds.

LASSEN'S ERUPTIONS CHRONOLOGICALLY.

REDDING, SHASTA COUNTY, June 27.

W. J. Rushing, forest supervisor, stationed at Mineral, at the base of Mount Lassen, makes the following tabulated report of the recent eruptions of Mount Lassen:

Date.	Hour.	Character.	Duration.	Size of crater.
May 30	5 p. m.....	Heavy.....	10 minutes.	25 by 40 feet.
June 1	8 a. m.....	Heavier.....	15 minutes.	275 by 60 feet.
June 2	9.30 a. m..	Very heavy.....	30 minutes.	60 feet deep.
June 8	4.30 p. m..	Heavier.....	40 minutes.
June 9	10.30 a. m.	Heavy; cloud darker.....	30 minutes.
June 12	3.45 p. m..	Heavy; cloud very dark.....	50 minutes.	400 by 100 feet.
June 13	6 a. m.....	Heavy; ashes fell at Mineral....	30 minutes.
June 14	6 a. m.....	Unconfirmed; report from Red Bluff only.	.....
June 14	9.45 a. m..	Heaviest yet; smoke column 2,500 feet.	30 minutes.
June 14	6.45 p. m..	Medium.....	15 minutes.	450 by 125 feet.
June 19	8.15 p. m..	Medium; smoke 2,000 feet.....	15 minutes.	600 by 150 feet.

The following item from the Sacramento Bee of date June 17, 1914, shows many of the wonders of Mount Lassen and the surrounding country and the desire of the people of California to create a national park out of the territory adjacent to and surrounding Mount Lassen, viz:

[From the Sacramento (Cal.) Bee, June 17, 1914.]

MANY WONDERS IN PROPOSED PARK—PARTS OF NATURE'S PLAYGROUND WOULD BE IN COUNTIES OF SHASTA, TEHAMA, LASSEN, AND PLUMAS.

REDDING, SHASTA COUNTY, June 17.

The petition sent to Congressman RAKER last evening requesting him to introduce a bill in Congress establishing the Mount Lassen National Park describes the boundaries.

The proposed park lies in four counties—Shasta, Lassen, Plumas, and Tehama. Though the now famous volcano is wholly within Shasta County, the greater part of the park is in Plumas and Lassen, or to the eastward of the peak. That is a region rich in natural wonders.

The boundaries are thus described: Townships 30 in ranges 4, 5, 6, and 7 east, together with a 2-mile strip south of these townships; township 31 in the same ranges; townships 32, 33, and 34 in ranges 5 and 6 east. The volcano is in section 34, township 31 north, range 4 east.

LITTLE PRIVATE LAND.

The park as thus bounded includes very little privately owned land, and most of it never has been surveyed. Most of the park lies above the 6,000-foot contour and much of it above 7,000 feet.

Among the natural wonders in the park as laid out would be Mount Lassen, the only active volcano in the United States, 10,437 feet high; Cinder Cone, until the present outbreak of Mount Lassen called the most recent volcano in the country; Prospect Peak, so named for the beautiful views from its summit; North Peak, Southwest Peak, Devil's Half Acre, Bumpass's Hell Hole, Morgan Hot Springs, Manzanita Lake, Juniper Lake, Lake Tillman, Lake Bidwell, Snag Lake, Crumbo Lake, Glass Lake, and numerous other lakes and hot springs. The park would contain Warner Creek Canyon, two-thirds of a mile deep and 6 miles long, a tributary of the Feather River, and Los Molinos Canyon, of little less scenic beauty.

To M. E. Dittmar, Shasta County's representative in the exposition commission, belongs the credit of bringing the park to the attention of local boost bodies. He himself prepared the boundaries and addressed the request to Congressman RAKER.

The following is from the Redding Courier-Free Press, of date June 16, 1914:

MOUNT LASSEN NATIONAL PARK IN FOUR COUNTIES—NEW VOLCANO ONLY ONE OF MANY NATURAL WONDERS EMBRACED IN THE BOUNDARIES AS DESCRIBED IN PETITION SENT BY M. E. DITTMAR TO CONGRESSMAN RAKER TUESDAY NIGHT.

The petition sent to Congressman RAKER by M. E. Dittmar in behalf of Redding and Shasta Counties Tuesday night, requesting him to introduce a bill in Congress establishing the Mount Lassen National Park, describes the boundaries.

The park will lie in four counties—Shasta, Lassen, Plumas, and Tehama. Though the now famous volcano is wholly within Shasta County, the greater part of the proposed park is in Plumas and Lassen Counties in a region rich in natural wonders.

The boundaries are thus described: Township 30 in ranges 4, 5, 6, and 7 east, together with a 2-mile strip south of those townships; township 31 in the same ranges; townships 32, 33, and 34 in ranges 5 and 6 east. The volcano is in section 34, township 31 north, range 4 east.

The park as thus bounded includes very little privately owned land, and most of it has never been surveyed. Most of the park lies above the 6,000-foot contour and much of it above 7,000 feet.

Among the natural wonders in the park as laid out would be Mount Lassen, the only active volcano in the United States, 10,437 feet high; Cinder Cone, until the present outbreak of Mount Lassen called the most recent volcano in the country; Prospect Peak, so named for the beautiful views from its summit; North Peak and Southwest Peak; Devils Half Acre, Bumpass's Hell Hole, Morgan Hot Springs, Manzanita Lake, Juniper Lake, Lake Tillman, Lake Bidwell, Snag Lake, Crumbo Lake, Glass Lake, and numerous other lakes and hot springs. The park would contain Warner Creek Canyon, two-thirds of a mile deep and 6 miles long, a tributary of the Feather River, and Los Molinos Canyon, of little less scenic beauty. Then there are ice caves and giant springs without number.

Once a good road was built into the park and hotels established, there would be a great flow of tourist travel to a region that is but little less interesting than the Yosemite Valley and the Big Trees.

Now that the volcano has brought the Mount Lassen region into such world-wide note, Shasta County proposes to keep it to the front.

Bill H. R. 19557 was introduced February 6, 1912, Sixty-second Congress, second session.

Bill H. R. 22352 was introduced March 26, 1912, Sixty-second Congress, second session. On account of the many matters, the bill did not become a law, and was reintroduced in the Sixty-third Congress.

Bill H. R. 52 was introduced April 7, 1913, Sixty-third Congress, first session, and is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 52) to establish the Peter Lassen National Park in the Sierra Nevada Mountains in the State of California, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That all those certain tracts, pieces, or parcels of land lying and being situate in the State of California and within the boundaries particularly described as follows, to wit: Beginning at the northeast corner of section 3, township 31, range 6 east, Mount Diablo meridian, California; thence southerly to the southeast corner of said section; thence easterly to the northeast corner of the northwest quarter of section 11, said township; thence southerly to the southeast corner of the southwest quarter of section 14, said township; thence easterly to the northeast corner of the northwest quarter of section 24, said township; thence southerly to the southeast corner of the southwest quarter of section 25, said township; thence westerly to the southwest corner of section 26, said township; thence southerly to the southeast corner of section 34, said township; thence westerly along the sixth standard parallel north, allowing for the proper offsets, to the northeast corner of section 3, township 30 north, range 6 east; thence southerly to the southeast corner of section 27, said township; thence westerly to the southwest corner of the southeast quarter of section 28, said township; thence northerly to the northwest corner of the southeast quarter of said section; thence westerly to the southwest corner of the northwest quarter of said section; thence northerly to the northwest corner of said section; thence westerly to the southwest corner of the southeast quarter of section 20, said township; thence northerly to the northwest corner of the southeast quarter of said section; thence westerly to the range line between ranges 5 and 6 east; thence southerly along said range line to the southeast corner of township 30 north, range 5 east; thence westerly along the township line between townships 29 and 30 north to the southwest corner of section 33, township 30 north, range 5 east; thence northerly to the northwest corner of said section; thence westerly to the southwest corner of the southeast quarter of section 29, said township; thence northerly to the northwest corner of the southeast quarter of said section; thence westerly to the southwest corner of the northwest quarter of said section; thence northerly to the northwest corner of said section; thence westerly to the southwest corner of the southeast quarter of section 20, township 30 north, range 4 east; thence northerly to the northwest corner of the southeast quarter of section 8, said township; thence easterly to the northeast corner of the southwest quarter of section 9, said township; thence northerly to the township line between townships 30 and 31 north; thence easterly along the sixth standard parallel north, allowing for the proper offsets, to the southwest corner of section 33, township 31, north, range 4 east; thence northerly to the northwest corner of section 21, said township; thence easterly to the range line between ranges 4 and 5 east; thence northerly along said range line to the northwest corner of fractional section 18, township 31 north, range 5 east; thence easterly to the southwest corner of section 12, said township; thence northerly to the northwest corner of section 1, said township; thence easterly along the township line between townships 31 and 32 north to the northeast corner of section 3, township 31 north, range 6 east, the place of beginning, are hereby reserved and withdrawn from settlement, occupancy, disposal, or sale, under the laws of the United States, and dedicated and set apart as a public park or pleasuring ground for the benefit and enjoyment of the people, to be known and designated as the Peter Lassen National Park; and all persons who shall locate or settle upon or occupy the same, or any part thereof, except as hereinafter provided, shall be considered trespassers and be removed therefrom: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall affect any valid existing claim, location, or entry under the land laws of the United States or the rights of any such claimant, locator, or entryman to the full use and enjoyment of his land: Provided further, That rights of way for steam or electric railways, automobiles, or wagon roads may be acquired within said Peter Lassen National Park under filings or proceedings hereafter made or instituted under the laws applicable to the acquisition of such rights over or upon the national forest lands of the United States when the construction of such roads will not interfere with the objects of the national park, and that the United States Reclamation Service may enter upon and utilize for flowage or other purposes any area within said park which may be necessary for the development and maintenance of a Government reclamation project: And provided further, That no lands within the limits of said park hereby created belonging to or claimed by any railroad or other corporation now having or claiming the right of indemnity selection by virtue of any law or contract whatsoever shall be used as a basis for indemnity selection in any State or Territory whatsoever for any loss sustained by reason of the creation of said park.

SEC. 2. That said park shall be under the exclusive control of the Secretary of the Interior, whose duty it shall be, as soon as practicable, to make and publish such rules and regulations not inconsistent with the laws of the United States as he may deem necessary or proper for the care, protection, management, and improvement of the same. Such regulations shall provide for the preservation from injury or spoliation of all timber, mineral deposits, and natural curiosities or wonders within said park and their retention in their natural condition, as far as practicable, and for the preservation of the park in a state of nature, so far as is consistent with the purposes of this act. He shall provide against the wanton destruction of the fish and game found within said park and against their capture or destruction for purposes of merchandise or profit, and generally shall be authorized to take all such measures as shall be necessary to fully carry out the objects and purposes of this act. Said Secretary may, in his discretion, execute leases to parcels of ground not exceeding 10 acres in extent at any one place to any one person or persons or company for not to exceed 20 years, when such ground is necessary for the erection of buildings for the accommodation of visitors, and to parcels of ground not exceeding 1 acre in extent and for not to exceed 20 years to persons who have heretofore erected, or whom he may hereafter authorize to erect, summer homes or cottages. Such leases or privileges may be renewed or extended at the expiration of the terms thereof. No exclusive privilege, however, shall be granted within the park except upon the ground leased.

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior may also sell and permit the removal of such matured or dead or down timber as he may deem necessary or advisable for the protection or improvement of the park.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Interior may exact such charges as he deems proper for leases, privileges, and so forth, granted hereunder, and all funds derived therefrom or from any source whatsoever connected with the park shall be expended, under his direction, in the management, protection, and improvement of the park.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, there are a great many items before the committee in the way of amendments that have been made since the bill left the House, which properly should receive attention and consideration, but I propose to direct myself to only one or two at this time. The first amendment that, I think, should be specially considered is known as the Creek equalization amendment. This is not a new matter either to the Committee on Indian Affairs or to Congress. It is a matter that has been most persistently before the committees of the House and the Senate ever since I have been a Member of this body, and, I apprehend, for a good many years prior to that. It is not that the facts are complicated; it is not that the facts are difficult to understand; it is not the fact, so far as my judgment is concerned, that there is any merit in the claim; but its continuous appearance here is due to the one fact that some people want to get some money out of the United States Treasury, and there is nothing else in the claim. There were two or three enactments by Congress affecting the Creeks and their property, but the only ones that really need any particular attention in this connection begin with the first enactment of 1900, ratified in 1901 by the committee of the Creek Nation.

In order that the RECORD may show exactly the obligation, and the only obligation, which the United States Government assumed at that time in respect to the Creeks and their property, I want to read a portion of that act, which really was a treaty, as it was subsequently ratified and became a treaty.

Paragraph 3 of that act reads as follows:

All lands of said tribe, except as herein provided, shall be allotted among the citizens of the tribe by said commission so as to give each an equal share of the whole in value, as nearly as may be, in manner following: There shall be allotted to each citizen 160 acres of land—boundaries to conform to the Government survey—which may be selected by him so as to include improvements which belong to him. One hundred and sixty acres of land, valued at $6.50 per acre, shall constitute the standard value of an allotment, and shall be the measure for the equalization of values; and any allottee receiving lands of less than such standard value may, at any time, select other lands which at their appraised value are sufficient to make his allotment equal in value to the standard so fixed.

Then in the next paragraph we find the following:

If any citizen select lands, the appraised value of which for any reason is in excess of such standard value, the excess of value shall be charged against him in the future distribution of the funds of the tribe arising from all sources whatsoever, and he shall not receive any further distribution of property or funds of the tribe until all other citizens have received lands and money equal in value to his allotment. If any citizen select lands, the appraised value of which is in excess of such standard value, he may pay the overplus in money; but if he fail to do so, the same shall be charged against him in the future distribution of the funds of the tribe arising from all sources whatsoever, and he shall not receive any further distribution of property or funds until all other citizens shall have received lands and funds equal in value to his allotment; and if there be not sufficient funds of the tribe to make the allotments of all other citizens of the tribe equal in value to his, then the surplus shall be a lien upon the rents and profits of his allotment until paid.

Clearly and definitely the United States Government as trustee or guardian over these Indians and their property undertook, and undertook alone, to distribute their property among them, and as a standard set 160 acres at an appraised value of $6.50 an acre, and agreed that if any of the allottees received land greater in value than that he should pay back into the common fund belonging to the tribe a surplus value, and if any of the allottees had not received an allotment of the standard value of $1,040 he should have a right in the surplus that should be allotted to any favored allottee. That was the agreement of 1901. That was all the obligation assumed by the United States Government. There is not a word said about the Government guaranteeing to any allottee that his allotment would be of any particular value. There is not a word said that if any allottee received an allotment less in value than $1,040, that out of the United States Treasury there should be taken funds to compensate him; but there is, in fact, provided a specific method by which one who has not received $1,040 shall not be compensated merely by taking from a more favored allottee the surplus he has received above $1,040 and that shall be given to the less-favored allottee.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to ask the gentleman this question: As I understand the gentleman's statement and from the reading, the maximum price was $6.50 per acre. Was not the minimum price $1.25 per acre for the land?

Mr. MILLER. There is no minimum price stated. I do not think there was a maximum and a minimum mentioned, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It was fixed at $1,040, was it not?

Mr. MILLER. The allotment of 160 acres of the standard value of $6.50 made a standard allotment of $1,040.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And no land could be appraised at less than $1.25 an acre?

Mr. MILLER. I think that is true.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact, further, that a great many Indians lived back in the hills—they were full-blood Indians—and they got that $1.25; and the land ran up to $6.50, and the officers under the treaty and under this bill undertook to equalize the allotments by issuing certificates and due bills, stating at the head of it that the man, so-and-so, had received $1,040, and that the land was valued at so many dollars, and the balance due to the Indian was so much, and the land was halfway between the two prices; in other words, medium land?

Mr. MILLER. That is right.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. These Indians have those due bills to-day. Does not the gentleman think we ought to have some kind of legislation to equalize these allotments and make payments?

Mr. MILLER. I think so. I think we should have legislation to equalize these allottees, just as far as the funds of the tribe will go. But there is not the slightest obligation on the part of the United States Government to go into its own pocket and give any gratuity to any Creek allottee, no matter what he receives.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. As I understand, a great deal of this land is worth $6.50 an acre, but many of these lands were worth hundreds of dollars per acre?

Mr. MILLER. I was coming to that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I hope the gentleman will discuss that.

Mr. MILLER. I will discuss it at this point. While the standard value is fixed at $6.50, and the provision I have read will show that it can not be appraised at a higher value than that, yet as a matter of fact many of the lands were worth as much as $100 an acre, and therefore the allotments would be worth $16,000.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield, so that I can make an observation?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to make the observation that there are now six Democrats in their seats. If ever there was a farce it is now.

Mr. FOSTER. Probably they all heard that the gentleman was about to make a speech. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No; I am not going to make a speech.

Mr. FOSTER. They did not want to hear any more calamity howling.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I think I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] has the floor.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I think I will make the point of no quorum.

Mr. MILLER. I hope the gentleman will withhold it until I have finished my speech.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will withdraw it until the gentleman has finished his remarks.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, that was the agreement in 1901. Those familiar with the conditions in the Five Civilized Tribes no doubt have in mind the circumstances surrounding the enactment into law of the supplemental agreement of 1902. It is not necessary, therefore, to go into the consideration of the circumstances leading up to or surrounding the making of that law or the making of that treaty or the circumstances existing before that. However, referring to that supplemental agreement of 1902, I beg to invite the attention of the committee to the following language, applicable to the matter now under consideration. The section which I read a moment ago in the act of 1901 was amended by the supplemental agreement of 1902, so that the paragraph I quoted shall read as follows:

All lands belonging to the Creek Tribe of Indians in Indian Territory, except town sites and lands reserved for Creek schools and churches, railroads, and town cemeteries, in accordance with the provisions of the act of Congress approved March 1, 1901 (31 Stat. L., 861), shall be appraised at not to exceed $6.50 per acre, excluding only lawful improvements on lands in actual cultivation.

By paragraph 2 of section 3 the agreement ratified by said act of Congress approved March 1, 1901, is amended, and as so amended is reenacted to read as follows:

If any citizen select lands the appraised value of which is $6.50 per acre, he shall not receive any further distribution of property or funds of the tribe until all other citizens have received lands and moneys equal in value to his allotment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. MILLER. Can I have a little more time?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. How much time does the gentleman from Minnesota desire?

Mr. MILLER. I would like to have about 10 minutes more.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MILLER. In other words, Mr. Chairman, the preceding agreement was amended to this extent, that no land should be appraised at higher than $6.50 an acre no matter whether it was worth a thousand dollars an acre, and the committee is no doubt aware that many of those lands were situated adjacent to the city of Muskogee, the second largest city in Oklahoma. Many of the lands were platted in town sites, and those lands adjacent thereto became and were of high value. They were allotted.

Now, these allottees that had received allotments that were of the value of $16,000 or $18,000 or $20,000, the land having, however, an appraised value of less than $6.50 an acre, now come around and want the United States Government to pay them something. The colossal nerve of the proposition is so staggering that the human mind falls down in a faint before it. I have marveled, Mr. Chairman, time and time again, at the strength and fortitude of men who stand before our committee and really ask that this legislation be passed.

There is one thing further to be noted in this change made by the supplemental agreement of 1902. It is that a man who has received land in value greater than $1,040 does not have to pay one penny of it back. Under the original agreement of 1901, if a man received an allotment worth $16,000, but appraised at $1,040, he would have to pay some back if some less-favored allottee had received less than $1,040. But not so by this. We can well understand why the Creeks were eager and willing and anxious to ratify the supplemental agreement. We actually bought them by giving to them that consideration and concession. I think the chairman of our committee is well informed when he says that many of the less-favored allottees were the full-blood Indians who lived in the hills and who now own the less valuable lands. Those who lived in the lowlands were given a prior right under the agreement to take the land upon which they lived and had made improvements. We all know that the full bloods are inclined to live back in the country, up among the hills, and they certainly came out second best in this situation.

But, Mr. Chairman, the Creeks themselves asked that they keep in their own pockets the money that, under the agreement of 1901, they said should make up to the less-favored allottees for their deficiencies. Now, what right have they in conscience to come, after they have pocketed these untold millions of dollars, and ask that the United States Government give them an additional sum out of its own Treasury?

I stated at the outset that this proposition continued to recur at frequent intervals. It seems pretty difficult to knock it down and have it stay down. But if we make appropriate inquiry we can find why. These little slips that many of them received, which the distinguished chairman of this committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS], has just mentioned, were not retained by the Indian allottees at all. They were bought up for a few cents by speculators, and those speculators are the ones who will get any money that may be appropriated for this purpose.

But there is another group of individuals eager and anxious for the United States Treasury to be opened up again. There are numerous attorneys who have contracts with these people on a percentage basis, varying from 10 to 50 per cent, and it is a pretty big, fat fee they have in prospect. There are two classes of these attorneys. One set of them are contractors with the Creek Tribe. As a matter of fact, this claim is that of the Creek Nation, not of its individuals, against the United States. There are no obligations to individuals, and none could be spelled. If there is any obligation, it is to the nation. These attorneys have contracts with the Creek Nation for 10 per cent. This thing aggregates about $7,000,000, and $700,000 is a pretty good sum in these hard Democratic times.

They also have contracts with the individuals for another 10 per cent—$700,000 more. Many of these additional contracts with individuals run up as high as 50 per cent. If this bill should pass, I want to tell you that there would be amazing prosperity among some of the attorneys of the Southwest, including some here in Washington.

Now, there is one thing further, Mr. Chairman, that to my mind is conclusive in this matter. Even if these other features to which I have called attention are not conclusive to the minds of some gentlemen——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. I will be pleased to yield.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I see that before the Senate finally passed this amendment they cut out all reference to attorneys' fees, except they provide that the attorney for the nation shall attend to the business in bringing this suit, and so forth, and they prescribe how the suit shall be brought.

Mr. MILLER. Yes; but the chairman of the committee well knows that the bill is silent and must be silent as to the contracts of the attorneys with the individuals, and that is where the big money is.

The other feature to which I wish to call attention is this: There was plenty of land and there were plenty of dollars belonging to the Creek people, so that every member of the tribe could get an allotment to the standard value of $1,040, until 1905, when the Creek Nation, recognizing that it had this large surplus, passed a resolution which came to the Government of the United States, and as a result thereof this Congress enacted into law their request, which was that we should allot 2,920 newborn children, born subsequent to the agreement of 1901. So by the act of March, 1905, followed by another act of April, 1906, we, in response and obedience to their request, enrolled their newborn children to the number of 2,920. We gave them allotments as they requested. Now, it is by reason of this that there do not remain sufficient surplus lands to give them all a quantity of land which on its face value has been appraised at $1,040. They go further now, and they even ask that if any of these babies did not receive an allotment equal to $1,040, we pay them out of the Treasury of the United States enough to make up the difference, although it was because of the allotment to these babies that their surplus lands were exhausted. Why, this is conscienceless begging, piled step upon step, until it is higher than the Washington Monument. I have listened to a great many rotten schemes, based on Indian laws and treaties, argued before committees of this House, but in all sincerity I can say that to my mind I have never yet heard of one so absolutely without merit, so absolutely devoid of conscience, as this Creek equalization matter.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the United States Government assumed that it would distribute the property of these Indians among their membership as equitably as it could. You can never distribute land with absolute equality among thousands of people. One piece of land here is better than another piece of land there. A piece of land to-day may be worth $1,000 and to-morrow $10,000. A piece of land to-day may look as though it was worth 50 cents an acre, and oil may be discovered upon it to-morrow and its value enormously increased. We can not get absolutely mathematical justice in the distribution of land among the people who own it in common. All we can do is to exercise our best judgment and deal justly and honestly, and we have so acted in every respect as regards the Creeks and their lands. We have allotted them as equitably as we could. When they asked that their newborn children be allotted, we responded and gave them the allotment, a natural and proper thing to do. We have not in our Treasury one penny of their property that is not in their name. We have not in our possession one foot of their land that is not in their name. We will distribute that among them equitably and fairly. They have in their treasury to-day about $3,800,000. That surplus should be used to allot as equitably as possible those who have been the least favored among them; but I would not go into the United States Treasury for one cent, and I hope this House will stand pat on one thing, if we have to stay here until doomsday, and that is never to agree to this amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman is aware that a few years ago, I think in 1908, we passed a bill providing that $800 should be considered an equalization of land instead of $1,040, and it is proposed to take the money that is now in the United States Treasury to equalize these demands on a basis of $800. On the advice of the attorneys the gentleman has spoken of, the Indians rejected this offer on the part of the Government, and therefore the matter stands as it is to-day. As I have said to the gentleman, the Senate has wisely, I think, eliminated all reference to attorneys and provided that the case shall be carried out by the United States itself through the regular attorneys.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago I called attention to the fact that few Members were present on the other side of the House, and stated that when the gentleman from Minnesota had finished I would make the point of no quorum. But, Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as there are gentlemen on this side of the House who wish to speak, I shall not make the point, for I do not care to interfere with them if they want to talk.

But I want to call attention to the further fact that the distinguished Speaker has been here the most of the day and upon the floor, and the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], as usual, is here attending to business; but if you look upon the other side of the House you will not see a single White House favorite here. These gentlemen who are clamoring for Congress to stay in session in order that they may legislate are not here, and even my distinguished friend from Illinois, Dr. FOSTER, who made some facetious remarks, left the floor. I want to emphasize the fact that the Members who do stay here and attend to business are not the Executive favorites.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield half a minute to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LEVY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its secretaries, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 12914. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 13542. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 13297. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 13920. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 14234. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 14546. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 14738. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 15071. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 15504. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. R. 15692. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The message also announced that the Senate had still further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 15279) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. MARTIN, Mr. OVERMAN, and Mr. WARREN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 655. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to survey the lands of the abandoned Fort Assiniboine Military Reservation and open the same to settlement;

S. 2651. An act providing for the purchase and disposal of certain lands containing kaolin, kaolinite, fuller's earth, and other minerals within portions of Indian reservations heretofore opened to settlement and entry;

S. 3768. An act to restore Capt. Harold L. Jackson, retired, to the active list of the Army;

S. 543. An act to correct the military record of John T. Haines;

S. 2806. An act relative to the appointment, pay, and rank of chief warrant officers in the Revenue-Cutter Service;

S. 5501. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 5446. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 5278. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 5207. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 5978. An act to refund to the American Surety Co., of New York, an amount paid by it to the United States under protest and to avoid the levy of an execution under a judgment against it, which judgment was subsequently reversed by the Supreme Court of the United States;

S. 5731. An act for the relief of William Cronley;

S. 4441. An act to extend the provisions of the act of June 23, 1910 (36 Stats. L., p. 592), authorizing assignment of reclamation homestead entries, and of the act of August 9, 1912 (37 Stats. L., p. 265), authorizing the issuance of patents on reclamation homestead entries, to lands in the Flathead irrigation project, Montana;

S. 2466. An act for the relief of Elsie McDowell Bunting;

S. 5899. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 5843. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 5575. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors;

S. 1802. An act construing the provisions of section 8 of the act entitled "An act to improve the efficiency of the personnel of the Revenue-Cutter Service," approved April 16, 1908; and

S. 1653. An act providing against the abandonment of destitute, infirm, or aged parents.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 4938. An act providing for the issuance of patents to transferees of town lots purchased from the United States at public sale in certain cases; and

H. R. 16192. An act to authorize the issuance of patent to Rachel E. Dangerfield Boast for the southeast quarter of section 21 and the northeast quarter of section 28, township 1 south, range 57 west of the sixth principal meridian.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY].

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER], who spoke a moment ago, has opposed the provision for the "Creek equalization." It will be necessary to recite some of the history of this tribe to understand the purpose of this provision put in by the Senate.

In 1833 the Creeks bought the land in the present State of Oklahoma, paying a valuable consideration therefor, and secured a title in fee simple. In 1866 the Government forced these Indians to adopt the negro and divide their lands with them. In later years a treaty was made whereby the community ownership should be abolished and individual ownership should be taken. The gentleman from Minnesota seems to admit there is a legal claim against the Government, but none in equity. That would be true if the Government had always been equitable. But when the Government forced these Indians to accept the negro over their protest and give him an absolute equal division, the Government should not claim in equity an offset against the legal claim.

The facts were that the Government proceeded to allot these lands, based upon several grades, as a matter of preferment. Where the Indian by reason of the grade did not get enough land to make $1,040 worth of property, the Government gave him a due bill, reciting the amount of lands in value received and the amount yet due.

Now, it is true that later they allotted to the minor children who had been born after the agreement had been made. It is a doubtful question whether the Creeks asked for it. It is true they passed a resolution, but it was not approved by the governor of the tribe, and would be invalid if he had. But even if that be true, the question of equity in the whole transaction is on the side of the Indians.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Proceed.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman stated that it is true the Creek Council passed a resolution, but that it was not approved by the governor. I think the gentleman ought to state to the House, in order to be fair, that the failure of the governor to veto the resolution or approve it within five days made the resolution operative.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. That may be true under the Creek constitution, but that does not apply to a law governing the ownership of land. Moreover, at that time every such resolution to be valid must be approved by the President of the United States. It only applies to those things wherein it refers to the action of the tribe, because the constitution of the Creek Nation can not apply to matters of ownership where the governor necessarily reserves under the later treaty the right of administration.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has the gentleman heard that Gen. Porter, who was chief at the time the bill was passed modifying this act, had that bill in his possession and it was found in his desk after he died?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I have heard that that was true. Now, we are in this attitude: That it is admitted that the Indians have a legal claim, but it is charged that they have no equitable claim.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Will the gentleman state who admits that they have a legal claim?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I think the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] did.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I can not yield, for I have not time.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I will give the gentleman additional time.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. All right.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The counsel for these Indians before our committee have repeatedly said that there was no legal claim, but that it was an equitable claim.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. If that was true, it was before I became a member of the committee. However, I will take the gentleman's word for it. But let us see about this question of equity. What are you going to do with the proposition that the Government took advantage after the Civil War of declaring that these five tribes, because they joined the Confederacy, had forfeited their property and forced them to a division with their ex-slaves? How is your equity going to jibe with that? Moreover, I say that this Government occupies a very peculiar situation when it says that it is unwilling to go into the white man's court in a battle between the Indian and the white man to determine what the Indians' rights are.

I say that this Government ought not to dispute even the right of an Indian to have "his day in court," and the Government ought not to deny the right of an Indian either in equity or in law to try out that question. He claims this right, and he will continue to claim it, and we may as well settle it now, and it ought to be settled now in order to settle finally those affairs in the Creek Nation, when we understand there is more than $1,000,000 tied up in the hands of the tribe that can not be distributed until this question is settled, and then when it is settled, if anything is due by the Government, it will be paid.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that this great Government, attempting to do equity and justice to the nations of the earth, which in its generosity gave to China and to Mexico and proposes that we will not claim indemnity for the loss of our soldiers and of great property in Mexico, ought to comply with its legal obligations when it deals with its helpless wards, the American Indians.

I do not think it lies in the mouth of any Representative upon this floor to deny that right—first, the right to be heard in a court, to have their day in court, and, second, the right to their legal rights and their equitable rights—and this is all we are pleading for. Let this question be settled, so that a final settlement can be made with those Indians and that tribal government go out of existence. I, for one, am willing to go into the court and determine that question. I believe that when a hearing is had the Supreme Court of the United States will declare in favor of all of the adult Indians. I do not think it will declare in favor of the new born. They ought not to declare in favor of the freedmen; but in any case, whatever it may be, let there be a settlement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, with reference to attorneys referred to, I am willing to put in a provision here that will restrict the paying out of attorneys' fees. I am willing that the attorney of the Creek Nation, Judge R. C. Allen, shall handle that case alone, or I am willing that he may select an attorney of his choice. I care nothing for the attorneys that have worked up the case. As a matter of fact, their conduct on other Indian matters has been very reprehensible, both before Congress and the country; but, irrespective of that, these Indians are entitled to their rights; they are entitled to every legal right and equitable right, and they are entitled to their right to go into the courts of the country and have the matter determined, and I trust that Congress will not attempt to deny them those valuable rights possessed by every American citizen. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Oh, I hope the gentleman will not move to rise yet. It is early in the day. There are two gentlemen who desire to be heard on this side. I want to yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have 15 or 20 minutes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The agreement made in the House was that the balance of the day should be used in general debate.

Mr. FORDNEY. I would thank the gentleman if he would consent to give me 20 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my motion.

Mr. RAGSDALE. After the 20 minutes allowed the other side, is it the gentleman's purpose to move that the committee rise?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That would depend on what transpires in the meantime.

Mr. GARNER. There will be no other business conducted than general debate, I will say to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, did I understand the gentleman from South Dakota to say that when general debate is closed—is that the way he phrased it, or is the general debate to be finished to-day?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I will say that the understanding was that general debate should be limited to this day and that when general debate is concluded the committee shall rise. I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the Indian bill is an exceedingly important measure, and it now has upon it many important amendments, which I am glad to know are to be carefully considered by the Committee of the Whole. I did not, however, rise for the purpose of discussing this important bill, but rather to respond to a challenge which was hurled at me by my genial friend, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], a few days since.

In the course of some remarks I made on June 6 the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], interrupting me, referred to some alleged happenings in the district of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] during the preparation of the Underwood tariff bill. In response I said, among other things, that I had happened to notice that those interested in the iron and steel industry in the Birmingham district were insisting that the foreign producer can, under the Underwood bill, lay down steel in Mobile for less than they can make it, and that the foreign steel men are invading their markets. The gentleman from Alabama arose and expressed the hope that I would print in the RECORD the information I had with regard to the industries of his district, and he challenged me to show "where a ton of pig iron has been landed at the port of Mobile from any foreign country since the Payne law was repealed." I called the gentleman's attention to the fact that I had said nothing about pig iron. He then said he would challenge me to show "that there has been a steel rail or a pound of pipe or a pound of steel that competes with the products of the Birmingham district" imported.

Let me say right here that I am reliably informed that at the present time of 45 blast furnaces in the State of Alabama all but 18 of them are idle. In other words, 60 per cent of the blast furnaces of that southern industrial coal and iron State are idle at this time. That may be—it will be claimed that these idle furnaces are not the result or the effect of the passage of the Underwood tariff bill, but at least it happens at a time when the Underwood tariff bill is on the statute books.

The statement which I made in the running debate with the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], which the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] took as the basis of his challenge, was in recollection of a newspaper article which I had read to the effect that imports had been made, or threatened, at Mobile and elsewhere, which were disturbing the steel men of the Birmingham district. I do not happen to be able to put my hands on that particular paragraph, but in view of the formal challenge of the gentleman from Alabama that there had been no imports in competition with the production of the Birmingham district, I have taken the trouble to look the matter up, and I shall present a few facts with regard to the situation which had undoubtedly escaped the notice of the gentleman from Alabama with regard to the menace to the industries of his district under the tariff bill which bears his name. The gentleman from Alabama challenged me to show that any steel rails had been imported in competition with the products of the Birmingham district. I meet the gentleman's challenge with a clipping from the Galveston (Tex.) News, which is as follows:

ANTWERP RAILS AT GALVESTON.

A shipment of 506 tons of steel rails from Antwerp, Belgium, intended for the San Antonio Traction Co., is now on the way to Galveston on board the steamship Hornby Castle, due to arrive the early part of May. This will mark the arrival of the first cargo of imported rails received in Galveston in 13 years, the shipment being made possible by reason of the removal of duty. The first shipment will be followed by others, approximately 1,500 tons having been contracted for. The rails are 60 feet long and are grooved, running 1,843 pounds to the rail. (Galveston (Tex.) News of Apr. 2.)

Later advices are to the effect that the entire shipment of 1,500 tons has arrived. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is familiar with the industries of his district and the market which those industries supply, and he will not of course deny that Galveston is within the natural trade district of Birmingham, and that I have presented evidence of the importation of over 500 tons of steel from Antwerp in direct competition and into the local market of the Birmingham industries. I have no doubt I could find other illustrations of how Birmingham is losing its steel-rail business had I the time to investigate the matter further. The gentleman from Alabama laid particular stress upon his claim that no importations had been made of pig iron in competition with Birmingham products.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. LEVY. Does the gentleman not think the depression is caused by the Interstate Commerce Commission withholding its decision in the rate case?

Mr. MONDELL. I doubt if this condition has anything to do with rates. I think if the rates were increased from Birmingham to Galveston, it would make it still more difficult for Birmingham to compete with the products of Antwerp and Scotland.

Mr. LEVY. But it prevents the railroads, does it not, from purchasing at the present time—holding up this rate decision for over two years?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; perhaps so; but it does not change the fact that when people do buy they buy from foreigners under present conditions. I made no reference to pig iron in my statement; but, nevertheless, I am prepared to show that the gentleman from Alabama is as inaccurate in regard to pig iron as he is in regard to steel rails.

Along the Delaware River, in the vicinity of Philadelphia, are extensive cast-iron-pipe manufacturing industries. These cast-iron-pipe makers have heretofore bought southern pig iron to make into pipe; they are now buying their pig iron from Nova Scotia, as indicated by the following clipping fram the Daily Iron Trade, under date of April 6, as follows:

WABANA IRON HERE—DELAWARE RIVER PIPE MAKERS GET SHIPMENT FROM NEWFOUNDLAND.

[By wire.]

PHILADELPHIA, April 6.

The first cargo of Wabana, Newfoundland, pig iron, which has been expected for several weeks, arrived here to-day, involving about 3,500 tons, principally for Delaware River pipe makers.

This Wabana pig iron is made in Nova Scotia from iron mined in Newfoundland. This shipment was announced, as you will note, as the first shipment of this kind, but it was not the last. A cargo of about 1,000 tons arrived a few days later at Bridgeport, Conn., and a second cargo at Philadelphia, the size of which I have been unable to learn. I have, however, information with regard to a third cargo, which is certainly big enough to make the Birmingham pig-iron manufacturers sit up and take notice, and I desire to read a clipping from the Daily Iron Trade, under date of May 11, which is as follows:

WABANA IRON COMES—THIRD CARGO SINCE MOVEMENT BEGAN DOCKS AT PHILADELPHIA.

PHILADELPHIA, May 11.

The steamer Heathcote has sailed from Sydney, Nova Scotia, for Philadelphia, with a cargo of about 35,000 tons of Wabana pig iron, which is to be applied against recent sales made in this district, largely to cast-iron-pipe makers. This makes the third cargo of this iron to come to this country since the movement began. A cargo which recently came in at Bridgeport, Conn., was small and contained only a little more than 1,000 tons. The other two cargoes docked at Philadelphia.

Here is a single shipment of 35,000 tons of pig iron, depriving southern furnaces of a market for that amount, and yet the gentleman from the Birmingham district [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is so little informed as to what is going on that he does not know about these inroads on the industries of his district.

So much for Birmingham's immediate market. What is the situation with regard to the market on the Pacific coast, where Birmingham has a very considerable advantage over other American producers? The Seattle (Wash.) Times of April 2 contains a notice of the arrival at Seattle of a British vessel from Antwerp and Glasgow with 8,000 pieces of rod and bar iron. This is in a market which Birmingham ought to control.

Not only are Birmingham's natural markets being invaded by Antwerp and Nova Scotia, but the Iron Trade Review, under date of May 25, makes the following announcement of the importation of rails from India:

INDIAN RAILS WILL BE IMPORTED—VERY LOW MANUFACTURING COST.

NEW YORK, May 25.

Indian rails will invade the western coast of the United States for the first time within the next two weeks, when the initial cargo produced for buyers in this country by the Tata Iron & Steel Co., at Sakchi, will be received.

Official announcement of this fact was made before the American Iron and Steel Institute at New York last week by Charles P. Perin, of New York City, consulting engineer of the India company, who has just returned from a trip to the works. Mr. Perin stated that the reduction of the tariff on rails has helped considerably to enable his company to ship rails to this country, but he also outlined the astoundingly low manufacturing and operating costs of the Tata Co. The 7,000 native laborers of the company receive 7 and 8 cents wages a day. Coke can be manufactured at $1 a ton, and iron ore is laid down in the stock house at a remarkably low cost per unit.

Let us recall the fact that these importations are being made at a time when steel rails and pig iron have reached, I think, almost if not the lowest point in our history. If pig iron has ever been lower than it is now, it was for a very brief period some years ago, and still these importations are coming.

Birmingham has an advantage, it is true, over the balance of the United States in its readily accessible coal and iron ore and its cheap black labor, but even Birmingham will hardly be able to compete with the Bombay product. It is not strange that Belgium is able to export steel rails in competition with American rails, for the skilled rollers who made the rails delivered at San Antonio did not receive to exceed a dollar a day, and probably less, while the average American wage for work of that kind is from $3 to $4 per day. When one begins to compare these wages with the wages paid in India it is not difficult to understand how impossible it will be for American mills, even in Alabama, to compete without a reduction in wages.

The district of the gentleman from Alabama is in the midst of a cotton-producing country. It ought to produce the bulk of the cotton ties used in the United States; in fact, they are well equipped for that work, both at Birmingham and Atlanta; but with free cotton ties, we are informed by the staff correspondence of the Daily Iron Trade that British cotton-tie makers are manufacturing for our market and are very hopeful of getting a large share of the cotton-tie business. The Daily Iron Trade, published at Cleveland, Ohio, in an editorial under date of April 28, makes the following pertinent observations with regard to the present situation, comparing them to conditions under the Democratic administration of Grover Cleveland:

The Cleveland administration was swept out of office in 1896 by an angry American people, whose eyes were opened to the emptiness of high-sounding platitudes to fill empty stomachs.

William McKinley, foremost consistent advocate all his life of a "protective tariff for American industries," was placed in the presidential chair. The Dingley law was passed and prosperity again returned, but only after long months of weary waiting until the final effects of the Cleveland disaster were wiped out.

Until this day wages have remained at the high figure established under the Dingley law, later replaced by the Payne law, until to-day puddlers are receiving the minimum of $5.85 a ton. Steel billets are quoted at $20 to $21, and Bessemer pig iron is selling at $14.90, Pittsburgh.

How, then, with the present high rate of wages paid and the present comparatively higher prices of steel products, is it possible for American manufacturers to compete with foreign makers in the various markets of the world?

It is not only impossible but it is becoming daily more certain that it will be difficult for American manufacturers to retain their hold upon their own domestic trade. A sample reason for this difficulty is found in that item telling of British mills rolling cotton ties to-day for use in American cotton fields.

Alabama and Tennessee pig iron, formerly used by cast-iron-pipe concerns at Philadelphia, is being displaced by Canadian pig iron of equal quality and of lower price.

Belgian girder rails are being imported at Galveston for use in Texan street railways.

Belgian bars and British pig iron are being unloaded at Seattle and San Francisco at a far lower price, as now figured back to Pittsburgh, than 90 cents, mill, Pittsburgh, for the bars.

In the meantime Canada, who once prayed reciprocity with us, has shut out our hardly earned tin-plate trade with a tight tariff wall, with the result that Welsh tin-plate makers will again rejoice over their return of prosperity through Canadian influence.

Is it any wonder that Mr. Redfield no longer talks about foreign imports failing to "flood the country," but instead is audibly praying on the stump during his present tour of the West that the Interstate Commerce Commission will grant the railroads a rate advance, so that any little help like this may aid the country's business and the Wilson-Bryan administration be saved from disaster next November?

You might imagine from the easy optimism of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] that whatever might be happening in the balance of the country, the Birmingham district and its industries are all right. It is possible that the gentleman from Alabama has gotten the two Birminghams confused. If he was thinking of or talking about Birmingham, England, he might very truthfully assert a condition of great prosperity. But it is a prosperity, to a certain extent at least, at the cost of the prosperity of Mr. UNDERWOOD'S Birmingham and other iron and steel centers, as indicated by the following clipping from the London Iron Monger of April 4:

BIRMINGHAM'S TRADE BOOM.

Evidence of the growth of trade between this country and the United States as a result of the reduction of tariff is afforded in the statistics of declared exports from Birmingham district, issued on April 2. The total value of all shipments from Birmingham, Redditch, and Kidderminster during the first quarter of the year was £295,096, an increase of 40 per cent on the shipments for the corresponding quarter of last year. The number of invoices declared at the Birmingham consulate showed an increase of 20 per cent over the number declared last year, while the increases from Redditch and Kidderminster were 10 per cent and 15 per cent, respectively. That shows that in each town a number of additional firms have opened up accounts with the United States.

This statement of the state of Birmingham, England, iron trade indicates a marked contrast between conditions there and the iron and steel trade of the United States. Not only are foreigners securing a foothold in our markets, but they are preparing to hold them by adopting methods and making prices which will insure them an increasing trade in competition with our mills and furnaces. While Birmingham, England, increases her shipments to the United States, our exports are decreasing. While Birmingham, England, is giving steady employment to her people, American mills and furnaces are largely idle. Only recently the National Tube Co. closed its mills and furnaces at McKeesport, Pa., at Lorain, Ohio, and at Benwood, W. Va., throwing 2,500 men out of employment. There is not a line of American iron or steel industry that is not feeling the adverse effect of the Underwood tariff bill. Idle men and idle mills are the rule everywhere. As a sample of the conditions in the country I am assured that a recent very careful estimate of the number of steel and iron workers in Youngstown, Ohio, out of employment placed the number at 5,000. In the meantime the prosperity which was promised under the Underwood tariff bill seems to have developed, not within the boundary of the United States, but at Bombay, at Antwerp, and Birmingham, England, and in Nova Scotia, where the Dominion Steel Co. is lighting new furnaces to help fill American orders.

I have met the challenge of the gentleman from Alabama; I have shown him how the trade of his district is being curtailed, its markets invaded. I should like to know what the gentleman from Alabama has to say about it. [Applause.]

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] left the time in my charge, and I now yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY].

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will withhold that for 20 minutes, as the gentleman from Michigan desires to leave the city to-morrow——

Mr. FORDNEY. I will thank the gentleman if he will withhold his point.

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to about all of this calamity howling that I want to hear.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, it is hardly fair, in view of the fact that it was understood we would proceed this afternoon on general debate on this bill, for the gentleman to raise that objection, and I hope he can see his way clear to withdraw it. We certainly have the privilege of speaking on any subject pertaining to the Nation, and this point of order might have been made an hour ago, and I hope the gentleman will at least allow the gentleman to proceed with his remarks, as he is going to leave the city. After the gentleman shall have concluded his remarks, we will then have no objection to the committee rising.

Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my point.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I will confine my remarks to the subject of an industry which has been materially affected by recent legislation.

President Wilson is quoted in the papers as having said that if it is shown by the report of the present investigating committee that the domestic sugar industry can not succeed without protection, it is a hothouse industry and must go.

The President either singles out the domestic sugar industry to be discriminated against, or else the same reasoning must apply to all American industries; that is, if they can not survive without tariff protection, they are hothouse industries and must go.

The President contends that conditions in America are artificial and not natural. Did he ever stop to think that wages and the standard of living for our laborers are abnormally high? As laborers in our domestic sugar industry and other American manufacturing establishments receive an average of about two and one-half times the wages paid to the same class of labor in Europe, from the President's course of reasoning it would appear that hothouse wages exist in this country—wages made possible by tariff protection from foreign cheap labor and no other cause. What makes the sugar industry, as the President calls it, a hothouse industry? Have we less farming land suitable for raising beets? Is our land less productive? The industry needs protection on account of the cost of labor, which is equally true of other American institutions. American laboring men are accustomed to a high standard of living. They would not tolerate conditions of labor existing in some foreign countries with whom we must compete. Hothouse wages have brought about hothouse industries and hothouse habits for our workingmen. I favor hothouse wages and the protective tariff policy which has made hothouse wages possible.

There is no sound argument to justify the Democratic policy in regard to the domestic sugar industry.

This Government requires the money the tariff on sugar produces. No revenue is collected with less burden on the people than the import duty on sugar.

The price of sugar to the consumers in the United States is lower than in any country in continental Europe.

The raising of sugar beets benefits the soil, and is most profitable to the farmer.

No monopoly exists in the manufacturing of domestic sugar. On the other hand, the so-called Sugar Trust is engaged in refining imported raws.

In short, the cause for the attack on the domestic sugar industry by the administration is inconceivable.

The great sugar-refining companies, the so-called Sugar Trust, for many years have been spending large sums of money in distributing literature to create a sentiment among our people for free trade on sugar, and failed to accomplish the results they desired until the Democratic Party came into power March 4, 1913. It was the golden opportunity for the Sugar Trust, and the Democratic Party was easily led on in the matter of tariff legislation. Their case was presented to Congress through one Frank C. Lowry, their hireling. The administration yielded to this lobbyist and accepted his falsified figures and statistics.

Abolishing the duty on sugar will permit the sugar refineries to more cheaply import foreign raws, but this was not the fundamental reason for their activities. The remarkable growth of the domestic industry they considered a menace to their welfare, and it was their greatest desire to curb or eliminate the strong and increasing competition caused by the domestic beet and cane sugar industry. The war between the great refineries and the domestic producers of beet and cane sugar has been fiercely waged since the inception of the beet-sugar industry, but the growth of the domestic beet-sugar industry between the years of 1895 and 1912 has been phenomenal, jumping up from an annual production of a few thousand tons to 625,000 tons in the year of 1912. This, together with the domestic cane sugar produced in the South, furnishes the American people with about 25 per cent of the sugar they consume annually. It can readily be understood that the great refining companies saw in the domestic industry a most formidable foe—one that, unless it could be conquered, would bring unquestionable destruction in the end to the great monopoly engaged in the refining of foreign imported raw sugar.

Our domestic sugar has entered the markets in every State in the Union and in all cases—without a single exception—has sold at from 20 cents to 40 cents a hundred pounds below the price obtained by the Sugar Trust for their sugar produced from foreign imported raws; and if the market for sugar is closely followed, it will be observed that during the six or seven months, from October to May, when the domestic sugar is on the market, the wholesale price, and also the price to the consumer, is lower than during the remainder of the year, when the Sugar Trusts have no competition. Yet Mr. Lowry tells us that the consumers will receive the entire benefit of a tariff reduction on sugar. I can not conceive that the Sugar Trust, with competition eliminated, will not sell its product at the highest price it can demand.

The following shows the net decline or advance in the price of raw and refined sugar, week by week, from February 19 to June 25, 1914. It is an indication of unwillingness on the part of sugar refiners to let consumers have the benefit of the tariff reduction on sugar:

Net decline in raws 16 cents per 100 pounds. [1] No change.
Net advance in refined 29.4 cents per 100 pounds.

To further explain the above table, I call attention to the following:

Price of refined sugar on Feb. 11, 1914	$3.92
Price of raw sugar on Feb. 11, 1914	3.48
Refiners' difference	.44
Price of refined sugar on June 25, 1914	4.214
Price of raw sugar on June 25, 1914	3.32
Refiners' difference	.894

The refiners have increased their margin from $0.44 on February 11, 1914, to $0.894 on June 25, 1914, which increase amounts to $0.454. The refiners' margin has been increased 103.2 per cent.

This great change in the refiners' margin is proof that the refiners sell their sugar at the highest price they can obtain. In February domestic sugar was on the market, and competition forced the refiners to accept a small profit. I do not believe any well-informed man will contend that the domestic industry will be able to exist under free trade, and with all domestic competition wiped out the refiners can and will increase their profits and absorb the tariff reduction. The benefit to the consumers, if there is any benefit at all, will certainly be insignificant. The crippling of the domestic sugar industry is a gross mistake. The tariff reduction on sugar can not be justified.

While the seaboard refiners and their free-sugar allies among the Democrats claim that the Underwood bill has resulted in cheaper sugar, they conceal the essential facts from the people.

By cheaper sugar they expect the public to believe that the sugar found on the breakfast table of the American people is cheaper since the Underwood bill passed than it was before.

As a matter of fact, the cheaper sugar has been confined exclusively to raw sugar grown by the American farmers and to granulated sugar turned out by the beet-sugar factories and better equipped sugarhouses in Louisiana in competition with the trust.

This is strikingly shown by the movement of the sugar market during the last month that the old rates were in effect and the first month following the operation of the sugar schedule of the Underwood bill—February and March, 1914. During this period there was a net decline of 0.47 cent in raw sugar on the New York market, while granulated, the lowest grade of refined sugar, declined only 0.147 cent, the excess in the decline of raws over granulated being 0.323 cent, suffered by the American farmers. Since March, however, after the domestic crop had gone off the market, the refiners advanced their price on granulated sugar 0.441 cent, and now the price of granulated sugar is 0.224 cent higher than in February, before the tariff reduction became effective.

But this was not the worst feature. The campaign for free sugar was conducted by the refiners under the pretense that they would cheapen the higher grades of table sugars to the masses of the people, and that the grades known as dominoes and cut-loaf sugars, the grades of table sugars used for sweetening tea and coffee, would be cheaper by 2 cents a pound following the removal of the duty.

The trade reports show that while the refiners beat down the prices of raw sugar on the eve of the tariff changes, entirely "absorbing" the reduction, as they put it, and also reduced the price of granulated in order to injure the beet people and those planters who were competing with them in that grade, they made absolutely no reduction in the price of crystal dominoes or cut-loaf sugar. These are the fancy grades in which the beet factories and the Louisiana planters do not compete. The trust, through selling them at exorbitant prices, has been able to pile up millions of dollars of profit annually.

The market quotations of Willett & Gray show that crystal dominoes were quoted without a break from January 8 to April 30 at 6.75 cents to 7.25 cents a pound, according to packing. Cut-loaf sugar was quoted at 5.05 cents during the same period without a break. The depression has been in raw sugar and the low grades, and the only losses have been sustained by the American farmer and the Federal Treasury.

The trust has maintained its fancy prices for fancy grades unimpaired by the tariff. This is clearly shown by the following table:

1914	Raw.	Granulated.	Crystal dominoes (cases).	Cut loaf.

The loss to the Federal Treasury has been officially shown by two letters from the Department of Commerce under date of April 10 and May 18, respectively. These letters state that during the month of March, the first month the new sugar rates were in operation, the Government sustained a loss of $2,479,458.62, while during the second month, April, the Government sustained a further loss of $1,951,198.91, a total of $4,430,657.53 lost to the United States Treasury and absorbed entirely by the sugar refiners.

It will thus be seen that the refiners, through the operation of the new tariff, have within the space of two months recovered at the expense of the Federal Treasury $4,500,000, or a little more than the entire sum that the Federal Government forced them to disgorge by reason of their crooked weighing and other methods of petty thieving. These odious practices, it will be remembered, caused the Attorney General of the United States to denounce the refiners as guilty of "a long-continued system of defrauding the Government of an unparalleled depravity."

While the golden stream of import duties has thus been diverted from the Public Treasury into the coffers of the Sugar Trust, the loss to private enterprise has been no less severe.

The culture of beets, which has been the marvel of American industry and development during the past decade, has been halted. Twelve beet factories have been abandoned. The destruction in the cane-growing State of Louisiana has been appalling. Mr. Charles Godchaux, one of the leading bankers and planters of that State, in a recent telegram which was read upon the floor of the Senate, gave a few illustrations of the tariff disaster which has overtaken his people. He said:

The Miles Planting Co. abandoned their properties in Ascension and St. James Parishes, containing over 15,000 acres, fully equipped with three large factories and railroads. They have sold off their live stock and are now offering the factories at wrecking value. Part of the lands have been leased for rice, corn, and other crops, but a large portion are idle and the labor has moved away. The loss to the above company, composed of the daughter and son of Gen. Miles, is not less than half a million.

In Terrebonne Parish the Argyle property is now under seizure. The owner will sell at fifty to seventy-five thousand, while three years ago he purchased one-quarter interest from his brother for one hundred thousand. This shows a loss of over three hundred thousand.

The Bayou Sale property of Mr. Wahl and others, consisting of about 2,000 acres, has been entirely abandoned, due to the fact that they were unable to secure the money to operate. The seed cane saved to plant in January has not been touched, and the loss on this place is at least a hundred thousand.

The losses to sugar district since Underwood tariff was talked of or became effective amount to not less than $10,000,000 and will be that much more at the end of another year, when 90 per cent of the properties will be abandoned and expensive factories sold for junk. I could cite dozens more abandoned places if desired.

This is the practical side of the sugar question. But, like all great questions, it also has a sentimental side.

Let us turn to the record of the Baltimore convention in the opening days if we would understand why the American sugar growers feel so deeply on this question. In a telegram sent from Baltimore to the New Orleans Picayune before the balloting began, and published on the first page of its issue of June 26, we find the following:

The Texas delegation made common cause with the Louisianians to-day in the effort to get in the platform some expression which would act as a protection of sugar in the future.

It was those men from the sugar-growing States of the South who stood like adamant for Mr. Wilson against the assaults of most of the other Southern States in the battle for the nomination. The representatives from the other Southern States who followed Hon. OLLIE JAMES in the Senate and Mr. HARDWICK in the House in destroying the sugar industry of southern Louisiana and Texas were simply revenging themselves because the representatives of those sugar States held out for Mr. Wilson and insured his nomination at Baltimore.

This is clearly shown by the record. Take the vote of the solid South after the 41 ballots, on the last ballot taken Tuesday, the day before all of the Southern States broke to Wilson and attempted to out-Herod Herod in their devotion to the nominee. It is typical of the balloting that had been going on from the beginning and reads like poetic justice when we recall what the nominee and the solid South did to the domestic sugar industry later on when they came to revise the tariff.

Here is the forty-second ballot:

	Wilson.	Clark.	Underwood.	Foss.	Bryan.	Absent.
Alabama			24
Arkansas		18
Florida	2		10
Georgia			28
Kentucky		26
Louisiana	12	7		1
Maryland	5	10	½			½

North Carolina	20		4
South Carolina	18
Texas	40
Virginia	9½	12	2		½

The sugar people know that they insured the selection of the Democratic nominees at Baltimore and feel that they were afterwards destroyed in the house of their friends for having done so.

While this prenomination assistance rendered by the sugar men would seem to have been sufficient to gain for them the assistance of the new administration, certain other events occurred during the campaign that followed which caused the sugar industry to feel that it had nothing to fear from Mr. Wilson.

These have been enumerated by Mr. Henry N. Pharr, of Olivier, La., as follows:

1. The Underwood free-sugar bill of 1912 met a cold reception at the hands of the Democratic members of the Senate Finance Committee, who recommended instead a one-third cut in existing rates.
2. The assurance given at that time by Senator JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS, of Mississippi, that "even though a Democratic President and a Democratic Senate and a Democratic House should come into power, there is not the slightest anticipation in the mind of any intelligent man that sugar would be placed on the free list."
3. What we regarded as positive assurance from Mr. Wilson in his preconvention compaign that there need be no apprehension on the part of the Louisiana sugar planters in the event of his nomination.
4. The open secret that the subcommittee which drafted the Democratic platform absolutely refused to entertain a free-sugar plank submitted by the refining interests.
5. The declaration in that platform in favor of "legislation that will not injure or destroy legitimate industry."
6. Mr. Wilson's positive refusal during his campaign to declare himself in favor of free sugar when interrogated by the collector of the port of New Orleans, as shown in attached copies of telegrams.
7. Mr. Wilson's statement at Pittsburgh, Pa., on October 17, that "The Democratic Party does not propose free trade or anything approaching free trade"; and, finally,
8. The assurance by President-elect Wilson that honest business had nothing to fear from his administration.

The telegraphic correspondence referred to by Mr. Pharr was as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, LA., October 5, 1912.

Hon. WOODROW WILSON,
Democratic Nominee for President of the United States
(Care of Hon. William Jennings Bryan, Lincoln, Nebr.):

The last Democratic House passed the Underwood free-sugar bill. The Democratic platform for 1912 approved the legislation of the Democratic House at its last session. The Democratic campaign book for 1912 advances extended arguments in favor of free sugar. Notwithstanding these facts, sugar men in Louisiana are being assured that you will not advocate the Underwood free-sugar bill, if elected President, but will be guided by the fourth paragraph of the Democratic platform on the tariff question, which promises downward revision that will not injure or destroy legitimate industry. The Republican campaign opens in Louisiana on the 10th instant. We do not wish to misrepresent your position. May I ask if you are in favor of the Underwood free-sugar bill or not? If not, what duty on sugar will you advocate if elected President? We will publish your answer in full with this telegram.

C. S. HEBERT,
Chairman Republican State Central Committee.

President Wilson's answer was as follows:

PHILLIPSBURG, KANS., October 6, 1912.

C. S. HEBERT,
Chairman Republican State Central Committee,
New Orleans, La.:

Your lettergram October 5 received. My position on the question mentioned was stated in my speech of acceptance.

WOODROW WILSON.

In the light of this correspondence, the letter of acceptance will be studied in vain for the slightest intimation of the cruel destruction that awaited the Louisiana sugar industry when Mr. Wilson and his friends came to revise the tariff.

Last year 647,606 acres were planted with sugar beets in the United States. This season 513,201 acres have been planted. This is a decrease of 134,305 acres, due to the closing down of 12 beet-sugar factories in different parts of the United States.

The contracts between the factories and the beet growers in the State of Michigan have been so changed as to reduce the price per ton paid for beets to the farmers an average of 50 cents. As the average yield of beets in Michigan is about 10 tons per acre, this means an average reduction in the farmer's income of $5 per acre. A farmer growing 15 tons per acre, of course, will lose $7.50 per acre on his beet crop this year as compared with last year.

The question may be asked, why the domestic beet and cane sugar industry can not thrive, or even exist, without tariff protection against foreign competition. A few of the facts in the case show most clearly a reason that can not be disputed. It has been shown that the beet-sugar factories in the United States in 1910 paid from $6 to $6.50 per ton for beets delivered at the factory, and in the State of Michigan the factories that year paid $6.91 per ton for beets delivered at the factories (see Hardwick hearings, p. 711), while it was developed at the Hardwick hearings that the farmers in France received an average price for their beets from 1902 to 1911, inclusive, of $4.05 per ton of 2,000 pounds; and in Germany, for the same period of time, the farmers received $4.45 per ton; and it was further developed by the investigations of that committee that the French and German beets averaged about 2½ per cent more sugar in the beets than is obtained from beets in the United States. And, again, the purity is greater in German and French beets than in the United States and yields about 30 pounds of sugar per ton of beets more than is extracted from beets in this country showing the same test or percentage of saccharine, which is caused by the superior purity of sugar in the beets. And, again, the wages of the men, women, and children in the beet fields in France and Germany were shown to be about 40 per cent of the wages paid to the same class of labor in the beet fields in the United States.

It was shown by that investigation that the cost of production of granulated sugar from beets in the United States was $3.55 per 100 pounds, while the cost of production of brown sugar from cane in the Southern States was $3.75 per 100 pounds. The cost of refining this brown sugar ranges from 40 to 50 cents per 100 pounds and makes a total cost for refined sugar produced in the Southern States of 4¼ cents per pound, while, on the other hand, Cuban raw sugar, 96°—which is a light-bown sugar—if sold f. o. b. Habana for about 2 cents per pound. The freight on this sugar to New York is 10 cents per 100 pounds, and the refining cost about 40 cents per 100 pounds, so that under free sugar the refining companies, known as the Sugar Trust, can, under free trade, produce refined granulated sugar from foreign imported raws at a cost of 2½ cents per pound. It can therefore be plainly seen that the refining companies, who have so long and earnestly clamored for free trade on foreign imported sugar, can under free trade put sugar on the market at a price far below the price at which it can be produced by the domestic sugar manufacturers and thus crush out the domestic beet and cane sugar industry.

There is more than $100,000,000 invested in our beet-sugar factories and about twice that sum in the factories and cane fields of the South. There is conclusive evidence that this industry can not survive under free trade, and, according to the President's statements, it is a hothouse industry and must go.

The reduction of duty as provided for in the Underwood tariff law, sanctioned and approved of by the administration, on Cuban sugar is a fraction over one-third of a cent per pound. This change or reduction of duty was made effective March 1, 1914. Its effect so far has been to close the following beet-sugar factories:

In Ohio, the Continental Sugar Co., with a slicing capacity of 500 tons per day, and the Altowa Sugar Co., with a capacity of 600 tons per day.

In Nevada, the Nevada Sugar Co., slicing 500 tons.

In Arizona, the Southwestern Sugar Co., 650 tons capacity.

In Wisconsin, the Rock County Sugar Co., 700 tons capacity.

In Iowa, the Iowa Sugar Co., 500 tons capacity.

In California, the Alameda Sugar Co., 800 tons capacity; the Sacramento Valley Sugar Co., 700 tons capacity.

In Colorado, the Holly Sugar Co., 600 tons capacity; the Las Animas Sugar Co., 700 tons capacity; the American Beet Sugar Co., 400 tons capacity.

In Michigan, the Western Sugar Refining Co., 600 tons capacity.

Twelve factories in all out of a total of 74 in the United States, or about 16 per cent of our beet-sugar factories, have already been driven out of business.

In the State of Louisiana since the 1st day of January, 1914, the new tariff law has, as before stated, caused 42 factories and plantations to discontinue. Following is the list:

The Bell Helene Planting Co.
The Valverda Planting & Manufacturing Co.
The Uncle Sam Plantation & Manufacturing Co.
The Miles Planting & Manufacturing Co.
The Sera and Magnolia plantations.
A plantation at Plaquemine of 10,000 acres.
The Sweet Home plantation.
The La Place sugar plantation.
The Vanfry Planting Co.
The Ivanhoe plantation.
The Alice B. plantation.
The Crawford and Richland plantations.
The Home Place.
The Glen Coe plantation.
The McManor plantation.
The Front Lawn plantation.
The L & Kay plantation.
The Sherley Planting Co.
The Cora Planting & Manufacturing Co.
The Celeste Planting Co.
The McCall, Bros. Planting & Manufacturing Co.
The Miles Co.
The Ascension Planting Co.
The Augusta plantation.
The W. W Ventress plantation.
The Leeman Co. (Ltd.).
The Milly plantation.
The Southside Planting Co.
The Oliver plantation.
The Mary plantation.
The Magnolia plantation.
The Braitwaite plantation (property of the United Railway & Trading Co.).
The Catran plantation.
Jos. Weber & Co.
The Star plantation (owned by the Klotz Manufacturing Co.).
The Cecelia Sugar Co. (Ltd.).
The Davis Planting & Manufacturing Co.
The St. Clair plantation.
The Myrtle Grove plantation.
The Fairfield plantation.
The Upper Elmer plantation.

This shows that the Underwood tariff law has been a Waterloo for our domestic sugar industry. It can not be denied. Evidently it is all for the purpose of giving the sugar refining companies, or the so-called Sugar Trusts, a wider field and more exclusive control of our markets for our sugar, and the poor unfortunate consumer will pay the penalty to these companies.

To date out of the 74 beet-sugar factories in the United States, scattered throughout 17 States of the Union, 12, or 16 per cent of the total, have been closed. The embarrassment caused by the Underwood tariff law to the sugar industry in Louisiana has forced 4 sugar plantations and companies into the hands of receivers, 20 others have discontinued operations, and 18 have been sold at sheriffs' sales, making a total of 42 sugar plantations and factories in the State of Louisiana alone that have been forced to go out of business since January 1, 1914. To no other cause can the failures be attributed than the Democratic free-trade tariff law. The destruction to this one great industry alone within six months from the time of putting into effect the administration's tariff policy must be appalling to fair-minded people. Any attempt to mislead the people into believing that any cause other than the tariff is to blame is an insult to their intelligence.

The President and his party are free traders and have put their free-trade policies into effect. No one can deny it. It has failed to bring better conditions to the people of this country, which they claimed it would. They are now putting forth all manner of excuses for their failure. Last winter when such large numbers of unemployed men in the large cities were applying for shelter and food it was a Democratic contention that the excessive cold weather was responsible for the suffering. The cold-weather argument can not now be used. The conditions are growing worse instead of better, and the administration realizing this gives voice to the carping cry that this is purely a psychological condition.

The Democratic administration has its foot on the throat of business; how long will they attempt to conceal the real cause of business depression?

Secretary Redfield not many months ago boasted of the magnificent balance of trade of the United States for the calendar year of 1913—nearly $700,000,000. A favorable balance of trade is a great asset to a country. Mr. Redfield knew it and Members of Congress know it. In April our imports exceeded our exports by $11,300,000, and in May our imports again exceeded our exports, the excess amounting to approximately $2,000,000. With free trade on sugar this country's imports will increase some $40,000,000 annually. These increased imports will come no matter what we think. It will not be psychological. The imports will come in and gold will go out to pay for the same.

Our Democratic friends have always claimed that our domestic sugar industry, especially beet sugar, is a hothouse industry, and, in fact, it has been claimed there is not sufficient soil adapted for the successful growing of beets in the United States to warrant the establishment of enough beet-sugar factories to produce a quantity of sugar equal to our consumption.

When Mr. Wilson was the Secretary of Agriculture, he made a report that his department had made thorough tests of soils in the United States and determined that there is 274,000,000 acres of land in the United States as well adapted to the growing of beets as the soil on which sugar beets are now grown in the State of Michigan, and that if a crop, such as was produced in the State of Michigan for 1911, was harvested from this 274,000,000 acres of land, that one crop of sugar would exceed in quantity all the sugar used by all the people of the world since the birth of our Savior. A crop of beets from 13,000,000 acres of land in the United States would furnish an annual supply of sugar to all the people of the world. In other words, would produce a quantity of sugar equal to the world's annual production.

Is it not a matter of significance to find the representatives of the refining industries before the Hardwick sugar investigating committee and the Committee on Ways and Means, when the tariff bill was up for consideration, advocating free sugar, and later find the paid representative of the refining institutions, Frank C. Lowry, writing a part of the Democratic Campaign Textbook for the year of 1912, the celebrated so-called "Farmers' Sugar Bowl," setting forth gross misrepresentations as to the benefit to be derived by the consumers under free trade on sugar; and also to find that two of the Spreckels family engaged in the refining of sugar, one at San Francisco and the other at New York, supporting the Democratic Party in the campaign of 1912 not only by personal efforts, but, it is reported, by contributing large sums of money for the campaign of 1912, while at the same time a suit was pending, brought by the Government in the Federal court for the southern district of New York, against the Federal Sugar Refining Co., of which one of the Spreckels is president, for a claim of $119,080.98 principal, representing unpaid duties on importations of raw sugar entered at the port of New York by the defendants, and that suit is still pending and unprosecuted? This suit was begun against the Federal Sugar Co. under a Republican administration. It was one of several suits brought against the importers of foreign raw sugar, and some of the officials of one of the refining companies, I believe, are now serving terms in the penitentiary for fraudulent underweighing and undervaluations or other frauds in connection with the importation of foreign raw sugars, for which the Arbuckles and the American Sugar Refining Cos. have paid upward of $3,000,000 in fines. All these suits, if I am correctly informed, have been prosecuted to a completion, with the single exception of the suit against the Federal Sugar Refining Co. above referred to.

We are now sending abroad about $100,000,000 annually to purchase foreign sugar to be refined by the great Sugar Trust to supply us with our consumption of sugar in addition to that produced by our domestic beet and cane factories. This money goes abroad and employs labor in foreign lands, whereas if kept at home it would furnish a very large amount of employment to laborers in the United States.

Our laborers in the United States employed in the great refineries receive in wages not to exceed 40 cents for each 100 pounds of raw sugar refined, while if that sugar was produced in the beet and cane factories of this country labor would receive eight times that sum, or, in other words, eight laborers would be employed in the sugar industry of this country if we produced at home all the sugar we consume for every one laborer employed by the Sugar Trust engaged in refining imported raws. However, that is a system or policy to which our Democratic friends seem unalterably opposed. They propose to completely destroy the domestic industry and transfer the labor abroad.

During six months of the year, when there is no domestic beet sugar on the market, imported raw sugar is refined as follows:

The Federal Sugar Refining Co. produces 6.3 per cent of our consumption.

The Warner Sugar Refining Co. produces about 2.5 per cent of our consumption.

While the American Sugar Refining Co. and the Arbuckle Bros. Sugar Refining Co. produce the remaining, or 91.2 per cent. The American Sugar Refining Co. has its head office at 117 Wall Street and the other refining companies have their offices in two buildings on Front Street, New York, less than one and one-half blocks away from the American Sugar Refining Co. Is it not possible for these companies to get their heads together in fixing the price of refined sugar during one-half of the year, when there is no domestic sugar on the market? As before stated, it will be observed that during that time the price of sugar to the consumer is higher than during the six months of the year when the domestic sugar is on the market.

Our insular possessions furnish us with the following quantities of sugar:

	Tons.
The Hawaiian Islands	500,000
Porto Rico	300,000
The Philippines	200,000

Our domestic production, as before given, is 950,000 tons, and the balance of our consumption, or 1,750,000 tons, is furnished by Cuba, making a total of 3,700,000, or about 81 pounds per capita as the annual consumption in the United States.

A dollar in America will purchase more refined granulated sugar in the United States than in any country in the world.

The English Board of Trade, in a report on the comparative labor conditions in England and the United States, taking $1 paid to labor in England as a basis for comparisons, showed that the same class of labor in the same kind of employment in the United States receives $2.40; and what the Englishman is able to purchase in England for $1 can be purchased by the American laboring man here for $1.38, as shown by that report, thus leaving the American laboring man a surplus of $1.02 out of every $2.40 earned.

Again, Willett & Gray's Statistical Trade Journal quotes the net cash wholesale price for refined granulated sugar at Liverpool on June 4 at $3.80 per 100 pounds, while at the same time they quote the net wholesale cash price for refined granulated sugar in New York at $4.116 per 100 pounds. Therefore, if the consumer could purchase at the wholesale price, the English laborer could purchase with his dollar 26.2 pounds of refined granulated sugar, while the American laborer, at the American wholesale price, could purchase with his $2.40 58.2 pounds of refined granulated sugar. In other words, the American laboring man can purchase for a given unit of labor more than two and a quarter times as much sugar as the Englishman.

In the per capita consumption of sugar of the nations of the world the United States stands fifth.

New Zealand consumes 130 pounds per capita; Australia consumes 129 pounds per capita; United Kingdom consumes 91 pounds per capita; Denmark consumes 84 pounds per capita; United States consumes 81 pounds per capita.

It is of interest to know that in 1830 our consumption of sugar was but 10.2 pounds per capita and in 1870 it was 32 pounds and the wholesale price was 13½ cents per pound, while for the year of 1913 the wholesale price for domestic beet sugar was $3.82 per 100 pounds. About one-third of the per capita consumption of sugar in the United States is used by manufacturers of candies, preserves, and other foods.

The campaign for free sugar has been so diligently carried on by the importers of raw sugar that a feeling has been created that the import duty on sugar is a great burden on the consumer. Certainly this belief is unwarranted. The following is a list of import duties, excises, and internal-revenue taxes that must be paid in the principal European countries on sugar for home consumption. The United Kingdom has the lowest rate.

	Per 100 pounds.
The United Kingdom	$0.40 to $0.45
Switzerland	.79
The United States:
Cuban sugar	1.00
Maximum	1.26
Denmark	1.22
Germany	2.03
Belgium	2.23
Norway	2.43
France	$2.89
Sweden	3.64
Austria-Hungary	4.02
Bulgaria	4.69
Netherlands	4.92
Greece	5.06
Servia	5.31
Finland	6.48
Roumania	6.56
Russia	7.00
Portugal	7.26
Spain	8.56
Italy	8.67

The average for all Europe is $4.43 per 100 pounds. If the United States would impose an internal-revenue tax on sugar consumed in this country of $4.43 per 100 pounds, that tax would bring a revenue to the Government of $370,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, I listened with considerable interest to some gentlemen on Saturday from the Democratic side of the House who gave a glowing report of the increased production in certain industries in the State of Indiana. I am in business. I am employing men in the lumber industry. I have never yet seen a time since 1896 when that industry was in such a chaotic condition as at present. And what is true of the lumber industry of this country from the Atlantic to the Pacific is true practically of every industry in the land. I am sorry this condition exists. And I hope that I am not and that the Republican Party is not responsible for that condition. I want to say to my Democratic friends that with your opinions on the question of a tariff duty to be collected on foreign imports I differ. I believe in a protective tariff and you do not. One or the other of us is wrong in judgment. I want to give you credit for being candid and honest in your opinion, but I believe you are misguided in judgment.

I have repeatedly stated, and I wish to again state, that there is not a country under God's sun in which a dollar today will buy as many pounds of granulated sugar as it will buy in the United States, England not excepted. England has a duty on sugar ranging from 40 to 45 cents per 100 pounds. Her rate of duty is 45 cents per 100 pounds on sugar of 98° or above, and lower rates of duty on lower grades. On 96° it is 40 cents.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman stated that sugar is cheaper than ever before in this country. Is not that carrying out the promises of the Democratic platform to reduce the cost of living?

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman misunderstood me. I did not say sugar was cheaper than at any other time in this country. I say that a dollar will buy more granulated sugar in the United States than it will buy in any other country in the world.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And is not the cost of living reduced to that extent?

Mr. FORDNEY. Whatever it has been reduced in price the cost of living has been reduced accordingly. Now, let me say I attended Keith's Theater one night not long ago in this city, and a funny man gave an illustration and attacked the House of Representatives for legislation that had been passed. He referred to the Democratic promise to reduce the cost of living and showed how much sugar has been reduced to the consumer—20 cents a hundred pounds—and upon investigation I found the gentleman was about correct. He went further and said that the price of sugar to the consumer had been reduced 20 cents a hundred pounds, or 2 mills a pound, rather. He said a mill is a tenth of a cent, and a person in using sugar in coffee uses a quarter of an ounce of sugar in a cup of coffee, and in order to enable the poor devil to save a nickel he must drink 1,600 cups of coffee.

Now, you have reduced that much the cost of living.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will.

Mr. SLOAN. Was not the statement which the gentleman has made relative to how much a dollar would buy in this country true also before the duty was reduced as well as it is now?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes, sir; that is true. England, having a less duty on her imported sugar than we have, could furnish refined sugar to her consumers at a less price than we do, for England imports all her sugar. I have here a letter written by our American consul at Liverpool, England, dated June 18, which I received day before yesterday. He writes that sugar is selling retail at Liverpool, England, for 5 cents a pound. In my home town, in the State of Michigan, anyone can purchase 22 pounds of granulated sugar for $1, 4½ cents a pound. I have another letter here from Lyon, France, stating that sugar, on the 18th day of June, this year, was selling for 7½ to 8 cents a pound granulated sugar, and to-day I received a letter from our American consul at Paris, France, saying that sugar was selling there on the 18th day of June for 6 cents a pound. Sugar is cheaper here than in any country in the world; yet, gentlemen, it is not possible to produce domestic sugars, either from cane or beets, to compete with the refining companies that import foreign raw sugars under free trade. Under free trade the domestic manufacturer must go out of business. There is no question about that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The gentleman has reference to the price of sugar in Germany and France. He is discussing the question of price in its relation to the tariff or the tariff in its relation to price, as the case may be. Of course, the gentleman does not wish to be understood that there is no tariff on German or French sugar.

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, no. What I was trying to illustrate is that sugar is cheaper in this country than in any country in the world.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The tax upon it—really all the tax put together—on the German and French sugar is really higher?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, yes; in Germany it is $2.03 a hundred pounds, and in France about the same. But that tax is an export and internal-revenue tax combined. The point I was making was that, although we are a highly protected country, sugar is cheaper here than anywhere else in the world.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Is it not a fact that the price of sugar has not been appreciably lower since the passage of the Underwood bill? There has been no appreciable lowering of the price to the consumer, and the difference in the tariff has been almost wholly retained by the importer and the refiner?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes. I will say, and I have the quotations here——

Mr. MONDELL. In other words, the factories have been closed and the industry has been put on the bum and the Government has lost revenue without our people getting any appreciable benefit?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; that is perfectly true. There was some little reduction to the consumer for a brief period, but not a reduction equal to the reduction of the duty in the Underwood tariff law.

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to ask the gentleman one other question.

Mr. FORDNEY. Very well.

Mr. MONDELL. The reduction in the wholesale price has not been sufficient to affect the retail price in most of the retail markets at all. Is not that true?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes. In my own home town I can buy no more sugar for a dollar at retail than I could before the present tariff law went into effect——

Mr. MONDELL. And the price is the same to the consumer as before, since the reduction of duty?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; but first let me answer that point. Then I will yield to you.

Mr. ADAIR. I just wanted some information.

Mr. FORDNEY. Here is the price of crystal domino and cube and powdered sugar from the date of January 8, before the reduced duty under the Underwood tariff law took effect. If you will remember, the duty on sugar in this new tariff law did not take effect until March 1 of this year. Granulated sugar is the grade of sugar that is made by the beet-sugar manufacturers, and no other grade, with the single exception of one sugar factory in California, owned by a refining company. Here are the quotations from January 8 to April 30: January 8, $3.92 per hundred pounds. This is the wholesale price at New York, on board cars, less a discount of 2 per cent in 30 days. Three dollars and ninety-two cents runs along until the 5th of March, then sugar dropped to $3.82, then to $3.77, and then down to $3.73. That is refined sugar, at wholesale, dropping from $3.92 to $3.73, or a difference of 19 cents a hundred. The reduction of duty was one-third of a cent a pound, or 34.8 cents per hundred pounds. The price, wholesale, went down 19 cents. Crystal domino is a kind of sugar produced by the refining companies, but not produced by beet-sugar or domestic manufacturers. Crystal domino sold on the 8th of January at $6.75, and the price has not changed a fraction of a penny from that day to this. And cut loaf is another kind of sugar produced by the trust, but not by the domestic producers. That sold at $5.05 a hundred pounds, and the price has been unchanged from January down to date.

Now, what is the cause of the reduction in the price of granulated sugar? It is the competition of domestic producers. Although granulated sugar from beets is made in only 17 of our States, last year it was sold in every State in the Union. In fact, the State of Michigan shipped granulated sugar last fall right into the city of New York and sold right under the eyes of the great refining companies there.

Now, what is the difference? Let me quote this one item, and then I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR]. When domestic sugar was on the market—and, mind you, granulated sugar made from beets is only on the market about five months in the year—the refining companies sold in New York at 44 cents per 100 pounds above what they paid for raw sugar, duty paid. What is the price to-day, when there is no competition from domestic industry? Eighty-nine and nine-tenths cents per 100 pounds above what they are paying for raw sugar. Just the minute there is no domestic competition, just that minute the consumers of this country pay the penalty, gentlemen; and the only way to furnish cheap sugar to the consumers of this country is by the encouragement of this domestic industry as a thorn in the side of the great sugar trusts. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Now, let me call your attention to another important point.

Mr. ADAIR. Before you leave that point I would like to ask you a question.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. ADAIR. I agree with much that the gentleman is saying. But the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has referred to the closing down of the beet-sugar factories.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. ADAIR. This tariff did not go into effect until March 1?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. ADAIR. The beet-sugar factories did not make any sugar between March 1 and the present time. Is it not true that the beet-sugar factories make their sugar only in the fall, when the crop is matured, and then they only run three or four months, and then, as the gentleman says, that sugar goes on the market?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. ADAIR. How, then, can the gentleman from Michigan agree with the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] in saying it has closed all the factories in this country, when there is no competition now?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, I will tell my friend. The factories of this country began contracting for the raising of beets with the farmers in December, 1912, for the manufacture of the sugar that was to be put on the market last fall and this spring. The duty was continued under the tariff bill until the 1st of March in order to let the domestic industry get off their hands their crop they had raised the year before, and they were finishing their crop about March 1, 1914.

Now, gentlemen, here is a picture that I have had enlarged of some beet-sugar factories in the West.

We have 74 beet-sugar factories in the United States, scattered over 17 States. Twelve of those factories have closed since the 1st day of January last and are not contracting for beets for this coming fall crop.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. There is a beet-sugar factory at Janesville, Rock County, in my district.

Mr. FORDNEY. I think I have a picture of it here.

Mr. COOPER. It represents an investment of over $400,000. That factory has been closed.

Mr. ADAIR. I have a sugar-beet factory in my district representing an investment of more than twice $400,000. If I am not mistaken, it is a part of the same concern that is doing business in the gentleman's own State. The factory in my own State is still in operation, and more acreage has been planted this year than was planted last year, and the condition is prosperous.

Mr. FORDNEY. Whether they have more acres or not, I do not know; but let me answer you.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan 15 minutes more.

Mr. FORDNEY. I thank the gentleman. In the State of Michigan we have 16 factories. Fifteen of them will run this coming year. Some are more favorably located than others. In other words, in some localities they have a larger yield of beets per acre and a larger percentage of sugar in the beets than in other localities. It may be true that some of these factories that have gone out of commission are least favorably situated in that respect. It is not so in the State of Michigan.

Mr. ADAIR. In Michigan?

Mr. FORDNEY. In Michigan; yes. Now, further, it is possible that the Michigan Sugar Co. may have made a profit. They have the most modern method of caring for their by-products. Whether they have made a profit has not been shown yet. That may be shown by this investigation that is going on now. I have tried to get the result of that investigation, but have not succeeded. But there are 12 factories that have gone out of business. Before you is an enlarged photograph, which is a sample of the factories that have gone out of business since the first of the year; 12 out of 74, or 16 per cent of all the beet-sugar factories in this country. Do you believe that, with an average of $1,000,000 invested in each one of these factories, the stockholders would let them go out of business if they could make money? If so, get into the business and try it and you will find out.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield just there?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will; yes.

Mr. ADAIR. It was stated by the representatives of the sugar factories when this matter was before this House that even at a reduction to $1 per hundred they could continue in the business and make money at it.

Mr. FORDNEY. They thought they could. Now, if the gentleman will get me more time, I should like to argue this out with him.

Mr. ADAIR. One of your own factories, in your own State, made as high as 60 per cent profit.

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, my dear friend, there is no such statement on record that I have ever heard of, except from your lips.

Mr. ADAIR. I have heard of it.

Mr. FORDNEY. And I sat five months taking testimony on a special committee investigating sugar, and nothing of the kind was ever shown.

Mr. ADAIR. I have the statement from a gentleman in the business who is a stockholder in the concern.

Mr. FORDNEY. Point him out to me, and I will show you a white blackbird or a man trying to create psychological prosperity, one of the two. The beet-sugar manufacturers have not made any money of late. Some have made money in sugar beets, but not under existing conditions.

Mr. ADAIR. That was an unusual year, and nothing was set aside for depreciation.

Mr. FORDNEY. That might be true in some particular year, as to some particular factory, when the crop was an extraordinary one and the percentage of sugar in the beets very high. It does not cost any more to extract 17 or 18 per cent of sugar from the beets than it does to extract 12 per cent, but it makes a very great difference to the manufacturer what amount of sugar is in those beets. Now, let me call your attention to this: Mr. Wilson said in his campaign that he would injure no legitimate industry.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. FORDNEY. Let me finish this statement.

The President stated that he would injure no legitimate industry. I judge that he meant by his remarks that through his political action he would injure no legitimate industry. I want to ask the question: Does he consider this a legitimate industry although it is a hothouse industry? If so, then the 12 factories that have been closed by his signing of the Underwood tariff law, 12 factories representing an investment of about $12,000,000 which have been closed certainly is an injury to a legitimate industry.

There is a sample, gentlemen. The factory alone is not the only benefit that comes to the masses of the people from the sugar produced in our factories. The land on which beets are raised produces more abundantly of other succeeding crops.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Is the gentleman familiar with the fact that a beet-sugar factory has been promoted and built and is now running in Toledo, Ohio, with a capital of $2,000,000, all of which was supposed to be invested in it, and that the factory was started after the Underwood bill had been introduced into this House?

Mr. FORDNEY. I believe that is true; but the factory had gone so far before the enactment of the Underwood tariff bill that it could not stop.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Oh, no.

Mr. FORDNEY. I know that those men who built that factory could not build it and get it into operation since the adoption of the Underwood bill last October. It had been built before October 3, 1913, and was ready for the crop last fall.

Mr. ANSBERRY. When was it begun?

Mr FORDNEY. I do not know; but I know some gentlemen appeared before the committee when we were investigating the Sugar Trusts a year ago last December or January and stated they were going to build a factory in Ohio.

Mr. ANSBERRY. As a matter of fact, they did not begin the building, the actual construction, until after the Underwood bill was introduced. I know that as a matter of personal knowledge.

Mr. FORDNEY. Does the gentleman mean to say that that factory has been built since last October and ground out last October's beets?

Mr. ANSBERRY. I do not know. I know they started the factory after it was an absolute certainty that the duty on sugar would be reduced, and materially reduced.

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, yes; and you know that all the fools are not dead yet.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Am I to understand the gentleman from Michigan to say that these men who put $2,000,000 into a beet-sugar factory are fools?

Mr. FORDNEY. They were; or else they were sadly mistaken. The gentleman would not, if he understood the situation, nor would any sensible man who has sense enough to accumulate property, put money into such an investment knowing the facts. Perhaps they placed too much faith in Democratic election promises.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Let us have facts.

Mr. FORDNEY. No sane man could be induced to put his money into a beet-sugar factory, nor into a cane-sugar factory, in Louisiana, where I have a list of 42 plantations and factories that have gone out of business since the 1st of January, 1914.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I am trying to talk about something I know about. This sugar-beet business I know something about, and the gentleman from Michigan knows a good deal about it. But the fact remains that that factory was started in Toledo, Ohio, within 30 miles of Fremont, where you say the factory is closed, and for a far different reason than the gentleman states.

Mr. FORDNEY. What was the reason that it closed?

Mr. ANSBERRY. Because they could not get the farmers to raise sugar beets in that good corn country.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; at a reduced price.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Oh, no.

Mr. FORDNEY. I want to say to the gentleman that the price of sugar beets is 50 cents a ton below last year's prices, and there are any number of farmers who will not raise them because that means $5 to $7.50 an acre less for a crop than they have been receiving.

Mr. ANSBERRY. The gentleman is mistaken; they could not get the farmers to raise the beets unless they paid them 50 cents a ton more than they paid two years ago, and that is the reason that the Fremont factory has closed.

Mr. FORDNEY. If that is the reason, and that factory at Toledo has been built and they are paying 50 cents more a ton for beets than was paid two years ago, you watch that concern go into bankruptcy inside of 12 months.

Mr. ANSBERRY. The reason that the factory at Toledo can expend $2,000,000 in this investment and make sugar is because they do not intend to run only 90 days in a year.

Mr. FORDNEY. That is all any of them run.

Mr. ANSBERRY. There is no manufacturing business that can make a return for the year and run only 90 days in the year unless they are hothoused by a tariff or bounty.

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, wait a minute.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Furthermore—and here is the statement—the Toledo factory is going to grind up sugar beets and make sugar, and they are also going to grind something they get from Cuba, so that they will be in the business of making sugar not 90 days but for more than 6 months in each year.

Mr. FORDNEY. What they have done and what they are going to do are two different things. Just wait and see the outcome.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I can see that.

Mr. FORDNEY. I will tell the gentleman that there is no money in the business at the present rate of duty, and when sugar goes upon the free list they must all go out of business. There is no question about that, and I will tell you why.

Mr. ANSBERRY. But the gentleman is going into the field of speculation.

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, I decline to yield further.

Mr. ANSBERRY. The gentleman objected to my doing that.

Mr. FORDNEY. Cuban sugar can be purchased for 2 cents a pound. The freight on Cuban sugar is 10 cents per 100 pounds to New York, and the cost of refining is three-eighths of a cent to four-tenths of a cent. That is 2¼ cents a pound for refined sugar laid down in New York City under free trade. The beet-sugar manufacturers in this country pay that sum for the sugar in the beets at the factory, no matter in what State the factory is located. That is the testimony before the Hardwick sugar investigating committee. How can we expend a cent a pound in extraction and manufacture of sugar, making it cost 3½ cents, when Cuban sugar to-day under free trade can be produced for 2½ cents per pound? It is impossible.

There is one point about this matter to which I desire to call attention, without being sarcastic, and I do not accuse anyone of dishonesty. Either under the Roosevelt administration or the Taft administration prosecutions were begun against the refining companies of New York for fraud in underweighing and undervaluations of sugar. The American Sugar Refining Co. and the Arbuckle Bros. paid more than $3,000,000 in settlement of those suits. The Federal Sugar Co. also was indicted, and suit is pending to-day against that company, of which Mr. Spreckles is the president. Frank C. Lowry is the sales agent of that factory. He took a very prominent part in the investigations before the Hardwick committee, and he testified a short time ago before a Senate committee that he wrote the "Farmers' sugar bowl," in the Democratic Textbook. I called upon the Attorney General the other day and found that suit is still pending against the Federal Sugar Refining Co, and they were strong supporters of the present administration. Now, you can draw your own inference from that. I think it rather peculiar that all of the rest of the suits have been concluded, and that the one against the Federal Sugar Co. is not prosecuted as yet—and it is such a great friend to the administration. Frank C. Lowry appeared before the sugar investigating committee and made all sorts of statements. He was testifying under oath, but that made no difference. He argued his point, right or wrong. That is the only concern indicted for fraud in the batch of frauds that has not yet been tried in the courts. The others have been tried and convicted and have paid their fines, and some of the officers have been sent to prison.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is true, is it not, that the Federal Sugar Refining Co. denies all guilt, and that the others, by compromise, virtually pleaded guilty?

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, no. All of them denied their guilt in the first place, but when the goods were found on them they pleaded guilty.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But in the case of the Federal Co.——

Mr. FORDNEY. It has not yet pleaded guilty.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And it has denied absolutely that it was guilty.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; as did all of the others, until they were brought face to face with the facts, and were brought before the bar of justice.

Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas. Whom did those who were convicted support in the last campaign?

Mr. FORDNEY. I do not know. I will say this, that Mr. Spreckles was a strong supporter of the Democratic administration, because he looked to your party for free trade and got it, and you will not deny it.

Mr. ADAIR. It was stated when this bill was passed that it would put out of business the cane growers in Louisiana?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. ADAIR. And the reason why a rate was given them for three years was in order that they might go into some other line of business?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; and in the agricultural bill the House appropriated $50,000 and in the Senate that sum was raised to $100,000 to pay experts to go down to Louisiana and educate those people in some other agricultural lines.

Mr. ADAIR. It was understood and admitted that the sugar-cane people would have to go out of business.

Mr. FORDNEY. Then the gentleman agrees with me that the Democratic Party intended to put them out of business down there?

Mr. ADAIR. I do agree with the gentleman that they will go out of the sugar business, and they ought to have gone out of it years ago, because it is not right to compel a hundred million of people to pay 2 cents a pound more for their sugar than they ought to pay.

Mr. FORDNEY. Let me answer that, please. Right at that point it was brought out before the Hardwick sugar investigating committee in 1911 that as soon as the domestic sugar crop was off the market sugar went to 7½ cents a pound by the trusts in New York, upon the false statement that foreign raw sugars were selling at $6.40 a hundred pounds, duty paid, in New York; and I went to the Bureau of Statistics in the Department of Commerce and Labor and there obtained a statement showing all the importations of sugar from every country in the world into every port of entry in this country, and for 16 months prior to that time and during that time not a single pound of European raw sugar had come onto the markets at all. The highest price sugar brought in this country during the summer of 1911 was 7½ cents a pound f. o. b. New York, and 2.74 was the highest price paid for any raw sugar by any refiner in this country during that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KETTNER].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield me three or four minutes in order to ask the gentleman from Michigan a question?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield the gentleman from Tennessee four minutes.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. The gentleman from Michigan desires five minues, and, if the gentleman will permit me, I will yield the gentleman from Michigan five minutes more.

Mr. FORDNEY. I thank the gentleman, and I will try not to take up more time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman this: The gentleman made a charge some time ago, an insinuation at least, touching the settlement of these cases for alleged frauds in customs duties?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Now, the Arbuckles and the American Sugar Refining Co. settled their part of it long before this administration came in.

Mr. FORDNEY. Partly so; those suits are not dismissed yet; but they at that time gave that much in part settlement. It may be they are dismissed now.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Now, under that administration all these indictments were brought about the same time, and the Federal Co. made no part of any settlement——

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. As a matter of fact, under that administration, and now the Federal Co. explicitly denies it was ever guilty of any fraud in any way. I would like to ask the gentleman if that is not true?

Mr. FORDNEY. That is true; yes, sir; that is my understanding, and that was Mr. Lowry's statement before our committee, that they denied the fact they committed any fraud whatever, but the grand jury, after hearing the case, returned an indictment against them.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That is, they did against the other companies.

Mr. FORDNEY. And also against the Federal Sugar Co. Of course I may be wrong, and when brought to trial they may be acquitted, and I do not want to accuse them wrongfully; but I said it is a significant fact that this case has not yet been prosecuted, when it had been instituted more than two years ago.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Why were they not prosecuted under the other administration? They were indicted at the same time.

Mr. FORDNEY. The Taft administration went out about the time these cases were to be prosecuted. I will be fair. The Attorney General recently wrote me stating the reason why these cases had not been tried heretofore, within the past year, was because it was understood it would take from 30 to 60 days to try this case, and there were more important cases that could be gotten out of the way within a much less time, and therefore they have been passed over. But be that as it may, gentlemen, I say if it is fair to one it is fair to the other. Have I answered the gentleman's question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. To a certain extent. The thing to which I objected, if the gentleman will permit, is that the gentleman should have suggested that this administration has failed in its duty in prosecuting because of the fact that this particular company supported this particular administration. Now, the other people—the Arbuckles and the American Sugar Refining Cos.—supported the prior administration.

Mr. FORDNEY. I think it was shown that they gave checks to both parties.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, that was long, long ago.

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. In 1912; and, by the way, the gentleman also remembers that the Democratic Party gave the check back which was given to them.

Mr. FORDNEY. I believe that is right; yes—but that was long, long ago.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then why does the gentleman make the suggestion as to this administration not prosecuting these particular men?

Mr. FORDNEY. I will tell the gentleman why.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. When the administration that went out of power last March a year ago had the same opportunity to prosecute them that they had to prosecute the other two.

Mr. FORDNEY. They were getting along as fast as time and conditions would permit, and they were making good time, because they collected from those two companies and a few others over $4,300,000, but this one company has not yet been brought into court.

But the point I want to make—and I do not want to be unfair about it—is that Mr. Frank C. Lowry, the sales agent of the Federal Sugar Co., and Mr. Spreckels, its president, took a prominent part in appearing before our committee. Mr. Lowry wrote that provision in the campaign textbook, he testified, called the "Farmers' sugar bowl," and obtained a reduction, just what he was asking for, on sugar, and they get free trade on sugar on the 1st day of May, 1916. A suit is pending in court against those contributors to the campaign fund, and yet they are not prosecuted. There may not be anything wrong in that, but in my opinion it looks a little suspicious. Favoritism, perhaps.

The following are letters from American consuls at Lyons, France; Paris, France; London, England; and Liverpool, England, showing fair average retail prices of food products in those four foreign cities. For comparison I also have a list of prices of food products in Washington, which has been furnished me from reliable sources and to which I will refer:

Meats.	Per pound.
Lamb	$0.16

AMERICAN CONSULAR SERVICE,
Lyon, France, June 18, 1914.

Hon. JOSEPH W. FORDNEY, M. C.,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I am in receipt of your favor of the 9th instant and give you below the prices prevailing at present in this city for the various foodstuffs stated:

	Per pound.
Veal	$0.14 to $0.20
Beef	.17 to .25
Pork	.20 to .25
Horseflesh	.10 to .14
Butter	.28 to .40
Flour	.05 to .06
Sugar	.07½ to .08
Coffee	.50 to .70
Tea	.80 to 2.00
Bread	.04 to .04½
Potatoes:
Old	.01½ to .02
New	.04 to .04½

Tea is not used to any great extent, as wine is used at practically every meal. Bread and soups made with breadstuffs, such as macaroni, vermicelli, tapioca, etc., sausages and other meat preparations made with the less expensive cuts of meats, form the principal dishes in the homes of the workingmen and middle class.

Trusting that this information may be of service to you, I am, sir,

Very respectfully, yours,

F. VAN DYNE,
American Consul.

CONSULATE GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Paris, June 18, 1914.

Hon. JOSEPH W. FORDNEY, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of June 9, 1914, requesting me to furnish you with a statement as to the average retail price of certain food products in this city.

I take pleasure in giving you below a detailed list of the average prices at present prevailing for a large number of the most essential articles in daily use, but I would call your attention to the fact that in the case of meat the prices given are for the best cuts only, the inferior pieces being sold at from 20 per cent to 30 per cent cheaper.

The meat, bread, and butter prices are those quoted in one of the middle-class districts of the city, while the remaining figures are those contained in the latest price list of the well-known firm of Felix Potin.

Article.	Per kilogram.	Per pound.

Very respectfully, yours,

ELY E. PALMER,
American Vice Consul General in Charge.

AMERICAN CONSULAR SERVICE,
45 New Broad Street, London, E. C., June 29, 1914.

Hon. JOSEPH W. FORDNEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., U. S. A.

SIR: In response to your inquiry of the 9th instant, I have pleasure in inclosing a list of average retail prices of various kinds of common foods in this country.

The figures given are those generally prevailing, and will not be taken as indicative of the prices ruling in high-class residential neighborhoods.

Horseflesh is not used for human consumption in this country.

The prices for meats show the average for the different joints or cuts. For pork the price is approximate, as this food is not at present in season.

Respectfully,

RICHARD WESTACOTT,
Vice Consul General in Charge.

RETAIL PRICES.

Veal, 1s. to 1s. 2d. per pound (24 cents to 28 cents).
Beef, 9½d. to 1s. 2d. per pound (19 cents to 28 cents).
Pork, 10d. to 11d. per pound (20 cents to 22 cents).
Butter, 1s.. 1s. 1d., 1s. 2d. to 1s. 4d. per pound (24 cents, 26 cents, 28 cents to 32 cents).
Flour, 10½d. per 5 pounds, 7d. per 3½ pounds, 2s. per 14 pounds (24 cents, 14 cents, 49 cents).
Bread, 3d. per half quartern loaf (6 cents).
Sugar, 2d. and 3d. per pound (4 cents and 6 cents).
Tea, 1s. 4d., 1s. 6d., 1s. 8d. to 2s. 6d. and upward per pound (32 cents, 36 cents, 40 cents to 61 cents, etc).

LIVERPOOL, ENGLAND, June 18, 1914.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KETTNER].

Mr. KETTNER. Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand the Orange County Plain Dealer, a Republican paper, published in Orange County, Cal., in my district. There are six sugar factories in this county. I will send the paper up to the desk and ask the Clerk to read the editorials.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman permit one question? I will be brief.

Mr. KETTNER. With pleasure.

Mr. FORDNEY. It is a fact that there is not a pound of duty-paid sugar brought on the Pacific coast and has not been for years. There has not been a pound of free sugar brought on the Atlantic coast for years except from our insular possessions, and yet generally sugar prevails at higher prices on the Pacific coast than on the Atlantic coast.

Mr. KETTNER. Well, I believe sugar, if I remember rightly, is selling at 22 pounds for the dollar on the Pacific coast, and I believe that is what the gentleman from Michigan stated it was selling for in his home town.

Mr. FORDNEY. It is very recently that it has sold for that, because I bought it there for that price for several years.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read the article which the gentleman from California [Mr. KETTNER] sends to the Clerk's desk. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

The Clerk read as follows.

It is folly for good people here in California to look blue, wear crepe on their sleeves, and bemoan themselves because of adverse business conditions. The Plain Dealer would like to make believe, as a bit of permissible political jugglery, that Democratic administration has played havoc with all things mundane; but the facts all point t'other way. Our oil wells keep on gushing. We never before have had such a fruit crop or got so much money for it. Our grain crops are overfine. The Lord sent bountiful rains, and the soil has made bountiful answer. The sugar-beet crop will be the largest the State ever produced despite a somewhat lessened acreage. It will bring over $15,000,000 to the coffers of growers and refiners. To shout "hard times" in the face of such disproof is the sheerest folly. California bulges with plenty and to spare. We agree with the San Francisco Chronicle, June 15: "There are no hard times in this State. The interior is prospering, and the cities are prospering with it."

THE TARIFF AND BUSINESS.

The California orange crop for 1914 has been mainly disposed of at prices comparing favorably with sales of previous seasons. The tariff blight that was to wither the citrus industries of the State somehow or other failed to eventuate according to the political prospectus. Same way with sugar. In the first six months of the operation of the Underwood tariff, from October to March, the imports of cane sugar amounted to 1,650,000,000 pounds compared with 1,809,000,000 pounds in the corresponding six months of 1912–13, while of beet sugar the imports fell to 1,250,000 pounds in comparison with 182,000,000 pounds in the half-year period which ended March, 1913. Of course, these figures do not bear out the predictions of the opponents of tariff reduction, but they should serve to put an end to unnecessary alarm among California beet growers and beet-sugar refiners.

As illustrating the present conditions in the sugar market we quote the following informative item of news from the Philadelphia Record, June 4:

"Six thousand tons of sugar advanced $33,750 in value while lying in the hold of the Austrian steamship Esrom for one week while the vessel remained in the Delaware River, unable to get a wharf upon which to unload her cargo. Yesterday the owners of the sugar were jubilant over the delay, even though they had to pay the owners of the vessel $10,000 demurrage for using the steamer as a warehouse. Their profit on the delay was still more than $20,000."

There is no shortage in the cane-sugar crop to induce this sharp advance in prices. The largest yield of many years has been safely gathered in Cuba. A quick European demand is sending prices up. The eastern refineries can not get raw sugar fast enough to meet the call of purchasers for the refined product. Our sugar-beet growers may take heart. Blue ruin has been indefinitely postponed.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KETTNER. I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. MONDELL. In view of the fact that the Government has lost a very great deal in revenue on the importation of sugar, and the statement is made that sugar has not been reduced in price, who has benefited by the reduction of the tariff on sugar?

Mr. KETTNER. The consumer, as far as——

Mr. MONDELL. Can the gentleman point to any spot or place where the consumer has bought any sugar cheaper under the Underwood tariff bill than he did before?

Mr. KETTNER. All over the United States.

Mr. MONDELL. Where over the United States?

Mr. KETTNER. In California, as I personally know.

Mr. MONDELL. The claim of the article that has just been read is that sugar has not been reduced in price.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption? I know it is true. It is cheaper here in the city of Washington and has been by reason of the reduction. Of course, I am not responsible for that article.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not want to take the time of the gentleman from California, but I happen to be a man of family——

Mr. ANSBERRY. You are not the only one in the United States.

Mr. MONDELL. And I do not buy sugar cheaper under the Underwood tariff bill than I did before.

Mr. ANSBERRY. The gentleman is mistaken about it. He is hoodwinked by the man who sells him sugar.

Mr. KETTNER. I had the Clerk read that article, because I could readily see that conditions are different in different parts of the country. After listening to the colloquy between the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR], and having read this editorial, I knew that the main difference was in the production or the soil, or in the handling of the different crops in different sections of the country. I think that has more to do with it than the tariff.

Mr. FORDNEY. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say this in fairness to him: It was shown that in the arid-land region, where beets were raised by giving them water when they wanted it, and where they always had sunshine, as compared with the territory where they depended upon the elements, the percentage of sugar in the beets ranged about 2 per cent greater in the arid country than in the country where they depended on the elements. You have on the Pacific coast, with irrigation, a larger tonnage and a larger percentage of sugar in the beets, and a consequent advantage in that way, but you have a disadvantage in freight rates.

Mr. KETTNER. Does not the gentleman think the soil has more to do with the raising of beets in the different parts of the country than the tariff?

Mr. FORDNEY. Bless you, no. The difference in the advantage with irrigation and sunshine all the time is not enough to offset the duty—the protection and the duty. Oh, no; not one-tenth part.

Mr. KETTNER. The only conclusion I could come to after reading that article and hearing the debate is that the soil and climate conditions are of very great importance in the profitable production of sugar from sugar beets.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I want to know if the gentleman knows any manufacturing business in the State of California or elsewhere in the United States that only operates its plant 90 days in each year and still does a prosperous business? Do you know of any other manufacturing business, other than sugar, under similar conditions?

Mr. KETTNER. I do not.

Mr. ANSBERRY. No one else does.

Mr. FORDNEY. There are other industries.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Oh, what are they?

Mr. FORDNEY. Artificial-ice plants, for instance.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Oh, artificial-ice plants run all the year round.

Mr. KETTNER. Mr. Chairman, I wish to correct the answer just made to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY]. There are other industries in California where the factories run only three or four months in the year, such as the fruit canneries and olive factories.

Another article from the San Diego Tribune, which is a leading Republican paper, goes to show that conditions are not so bad as we are led to believe by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]:

CALIFORNIA'S FIELDS AND ORCHARDS ARE YIELDING A BOUNTEOUS HARVEST.

When this year's crops are harvested and marketed California will be nearly half a billion dollars richer than she was before she began plowing, pruning, spraying, feeding, and planting.

The exact estimate of "primary value" upon the leading products of the State is $474,000,000.

That is a lot of money, and it will all flow in the channels of local traffic: much of it will come from beyond our borders, and all of it will pass through our pockets before any portion of it gets away from the Commonwealth.

A good part of it will stay here in permanent improvements.

It is exhilarating to read the figures and to classify the varied output:

Our grain crop totals $31,000,000; our fruit crop, inclusive of canned, dried, green, citrus, and cantaloupes, aggregate $85,000,000, of which $35,000,000 is credited to the citrus product and $5,000,000 to cantaloupes, the bulk of which will come from the Imperial Valley; our dairies will produce $36,000,000; our poultry will be worth $2,000,000 and the eggs thereof will cost the consumer $15,000,000, which he will gladly pay, because the price will not be exorbitant this year, although it will yield a handsome profit to the owners of the industrious hens; our vegetables, including canned, beans, potatoes, sugar beets, onions, etc., will sell for $42,000,000, of which $11,000,000 must furnish a clear profit for the bean growers; hay and forage will be worth $50,000,000; oil, $50,000,000; wine and brandy, $30,000,000; gold, $20,000,000; other mineral products, $30,000,000; cotton, $4,500,000; hops, $4,000,000; nuts, $4,000,000; olives and oil, $3,000,000; and wool, $2,000,000.

And all this in despite of a Democratic tariff which contracts our eastern market.

It happens, however, that the foreign producer is somewhat short this year; neither has he had an opportunity to take his full advantage of Democratic generosity.

Next year it may be different, but this year it is a golden harvest for California.

There are only two flies in the ointment: The prune crop is not what it ought to be, and there will be an overproduction of hay.

But we could hardly expect everything to come our way, and if the price of prunes goes to famine in the cafeteria belt of Chicago, or if hay becomes a drug in the market, we must be content to stagger along under the load of prosperity that the demand for our other more bounteous crops impose on us.

Prunes have had their day—many of them—and others are to come; and the surplus hay will not be wasted.

Then, there is compensation in the barley crop which is so plenteous that the warehouses will not hold it; and it runs 60 pounds to the bushel as against the shipping requirement of 46 pounds; there is a world market for barley and there will be no danger of overstocking it.

Therefore let California begin to rejoice in this her year of jubilee.

And with the opening of the Panama Canal there will be many, many similar years.

We haven't begun to tap the resources of the richest region on the face of the earth.

California is certainly not a hospitable place for the pessimist and the knocker.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, out in Indiana, in my district, we have one of the largest sugar factories in the country, built at an expense of nearly $1,000,000. This sugar factory is operated by the St. Louis Holland Sugar Co. It is under the management of William H. Hubbard, an excellent gentleman, who has been connected with that concern for a great many years; a man in whom I have implicit confidence; a man whose honesty and integrity and truthfulness can not be questioned.

When the Underwood tariff bill was under consideration, a little over a year ago, I talked personally with Mr. Hubbard about the tariff on sugar. I was interested not only in that industry in my district but in every other industry there, and I did not propose to vote for the removal of any duty if I thought it would close a single factory or mill in my district or elsewhere.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there for one question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. ADAIR. With pleasure.

Mr. FORDNEY. The thought just came to me, and I thank the gentleman for yielding. I want to say to the gentleman from Ohio that there is not a single sugar industry in the world, whether in the United States or in any other country, that runs more than from 90 to 120 days.

Mr. ADAIR. The gentleman from Michigan is right. They run only from 90 to 120 days, but they have been making money.

Now, getting back to the gentleman of whom I have just spoken, he told me himself that the present rate of duty on sugar was ample and sufficient. He said he recognized that the people of this country were demanding and were expecting a reduction of the tariff all along the line, and the only thing he objected to was the three-year limit. He said to me that if the sugar manufacturers of this country—that is, the beet-sugar manufacturers—were given the present rate for 10 years, they could put the beet-sugar business on a solid basis and in a few years make all the sugar the country could consume.

I know the beet-sugar factories run only from 90 to 120 days, and they make money at that. In my district the farmers are still raising sugar beets, and they get as much money for them as they got a year ago. I do not think this reduction of duty will close a single beet-sugar factory in this country. I know the cane-sugar manufacturers of Louisiana will have to go out of business. It has been repeatedly stated that they can not manufacture sugar from cane as cheaply as sugar is manufactured out of beets, and they ought to go out of business. It is wrong to tax 95,000,000 people 2 cents a pound on every pound of sugar they buy, simply in order to keep in business a hothouse industry down in Louisiana. But the sugar-beet factories will continue to make sugar in this country, regardless of the present rate, and when sugar goes on the free list they will still manufacture sugar, and in time will manufacture all this country consumes.

My district is a corn-raising district, and the land there is valuable; but notwithstanding the reduction of the duty on sugar, sugar beets are still bringing the same price as they brought heretofore, and the beet-sugar manufacturing business will go on.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again there?

Mr. ADAIR. Yes.

Mr. FORDNEY. You said that the people should not be taxed 2 cents a pound on the sugar they consume. There has been no time since I can remember when they were taxed 2 cents a pound. That is merely Mr. Lowry's claim.

Mr. ADAIR. It was $1.90 a hundred. It was nearly 2 cents a pound. It amounted to about $125,000,000 each year the people were compelled to pay for sugar more than they ought to have paid. It was extortion, and it ought to have been wiped out years ago.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY] is recognized for one minute.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] that he has not yet answered the question I propounded and the question that was propounded by the gentleman from California [Mr. KETTNER]. I made the statement that there were no manufacturing businesses in the United States or elsewhere that were operated only 90 days in the year and were uniformly prosperous. The gentleman from Michigan mentioned artificial ice. The gentleman, if he knows anything about the manufacturing of artificial ice, knows that they run all the year round. It will not do for the gentleman to say that sugar mills run only 90 days in any other country. That is true; but in other countries where sugar is manufactured from beets the Government pays a bounty.

Mr. FORDNEY. Where?

Mr. ANSBERRY. In Russia.

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, they are not paying a bounty now.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Just a moment. Do not get excited. They paid a bounty until only recently, and perhaps do yet. And as an instance of the disastrous effects of import duty on the sugar industry I want to cite the case of the sugar consumer in France, where, despite the fact that they manufacture more beet sugar than they consume and annually export millions of pounds, the poor French consumer pays more for it than do we. I mention this because the sugar-beet interests have been besieging Congress time out of mind asking for a high protective tariff, and seeking to lull the opposition of the outraged American people by the old familiar cry, "Give us yet another 10 years of protection and we will produce all the sugar consumed in America." And they continued, "Then sugar will be cheaper." Doubtless the French public was beguiled in the selfsame fashion.

Now, it will not do for the sugar-beet people to tell us, "If you will only give us 10 years more we will raise enough sugar for the entire United States." They have been saying that a long time.

Mr. FORDNEY. But you did not give them 10 years.

Mr. ANSBERRY. They have been manufacturing beet sugar for more than 10 years.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; but under a reduction of duty every little while.

Mr. ANSBERRY. No reduction at all.

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman must be fair.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Practically none for 20 years.

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, if the gentleman will not be fair——
Mr. ANSBERRY. I have only a minute.
Mr. FORDNEY. I gave the gentleman a great deal of my time, and he ought to be fair.
Mr. ANSBERRY. I will yield to the gentleman. The gentleman was very courteous.
Mr. FORDNEY. Is it not true that Cuban reciprocity reduced the duty 20 per cent?
Mr. ANSBERRY. Yes.
Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman said there had been no reduction.
Mr. ANSBERRY. I say substantially none.
Mr. FORDNEY. If you take off 20 per cent of a man's head, can you say that it is substantially all on?
Mr. ANSBERRY. Nevertheless, in spite of that fact, the manufacture of beet sugar has not increased in this country in proportion to the amount of sugar consumed. Proportionately to that they are making just about what they did 10 years ago, about 14 per cent. Is not that true? The increased production barely kept pace with increased consumption.
Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman yield just a minute?
Mr. ANSBERRY. I have a little time left, and I will yield to the gentleman.
Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman said there was no other industry in the United States that ran as short a time as the beet-sugar industry that made as large profits. The canning industry does not run as long as the beet-sugar industry.
Mr. ANSBERRY. What canning industry?
Mr. FORDNEY. Ask the gentleman from California.
Mr. ANSBERRY. No; I will ask the gentleman from Michigan. What canning industry?
Mr. FORDNEY. Peaches and fruit of every description, peas, beans, and salmon. Salmon canning lasts only about three months in the year, and is one of the greatest industries in the country.
Mr. ANSBERRY. These canning plants can one vegetable part of the year and another vegetable another part of the year, so that they run practically six months, and they require a very small plant investment as compared with the sugar business, and they are not asking to be given the privilege of taxing the people of the United States that they may continue in business. And so, I repeat, the sugar-beet industry, if it be a hothouse industry—that is to say, an industry dependent upon a special privilege given by the Government to permit it to exist—has not even the poor, threadbare, shelf-worn excuse that it is an infant industry. It is too old to be an infant, and if it is ever to desert its perambulator, it should do so now, taking advantage of the cane which the existing duty represents until it becomes accustomed to walk alone. I sympathize with the Louisiana sugar planter, but he likewise has made but little headway, only producing, as he produced a decade ago, 9 per cent of our sugar consumption. Of the few possessions I own are a few hundred acres of land on the edge of the sugar belt. My attitude and vote has temporarily depreciated its value, but I am comforted by the thought that I cast my vote in the interest of my district and the overburdened consumers of our country.
Mr. FORDNEY. Evidently the gentleman does not know how much money is invested in that industry.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY].
Mr. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, many persons who have not fully investigated the subject entertain the opinion that the transactions on the New York and New Orleans cotton exchanges in cotton for future delivery are almost entirely for speculation and of no service to legitimate interests.
This belief is very erroneous, for, as a matter of fact, the facilities for the buying and selling of "cotton futures" on these two exchanges are absolutely essential to the successful prosecution of the business of the cotton merchants and manufacturers as conducted at the present time.
Cotton merchants throughout the country are constantly compelled to sell cotton of specified grades with the stipulation that the delivery of some or all of it will not be made until some time in the future. By buying "cotton futures" at the time of their sale of actual cotton for forward delivery the cotton dealers can protect themselves from loss should an advance in price occur before the time for them to ship the cotton. As the cotton is purchased to meet their sales, they dispose of their purchases of "futures," and if the price of spot cotton has advanced they will be reimbursed by the profit on their transaction in "futures." Should "futures" decline after their purchase, the loss will be made up by the greater profit they will make by the decline in spot cotton since their sale of it.
A large percentage of the cotton merchants—particularly those in the interior markets of the South—buy cotton daily when the receipts are liberal, though they may have no orders for it from their correspondents. They are constantly buying in anticipation of orders, and their buying supports the market and enables farmers to sell their cotton readily and at much better prices than they could obtain if the merchants would not buy without actual orders in hand for the cotton offered.
As the merchants buy spot cotton in anticipation of orders for it, they at once sell "cotton futures" in New York or New Orleans to the extent of their purchases. This is called "hedging," and protects them from loss should spot cotton decline before they dispose of their purchases, as their loss on it would be compensated for by their profit on the sales of "futures" against it.
Cotton is sold for cash in southern cities and towns, and merchants often have to obtain advances from the banks before they can draw against their shipments. It greatly facilitates the securing of such advances when "cotton futures" have been sold against the cotton on which the loans are desired, because the spot cotton is thus protected from a decline in the market.
The system of dealing in "cotton futures" gives manufacturers of small means equal advantages with those possessing large capital in selling their product far into the future. Without the aid of the "futures" system it is very evident that the manufacturers of small or moderate capital would be at a very serious disadvantage.
The dealing in "cotton futures" on the New York and New Orleans Cotton Exchanges, which the Lever cotton-futures bill would curtail and eventually abolish, is undoubtedly of great advantage to the cotton growers in preventing the great depression in price which formerly prevailed when the bulk of the crop was being marketed. Many cotton merchants of experience can without hesitancy recall many instances when an active demand for "cotton futures" has caused an advance in "spot cotton" or checked and prevented a decline.
The adoption of the Lever bill, I feel certain, will curtail the business of the cotton exchanges in this country, and the price of cotton, which is one of the chief products of the South, will eventually be dictated by the markets of Europe, and especially by Liverpool. The cotton dealers and spinners of Europe would always be in favor of low prices and just as low as they could be forced. With no resistance on the part of the producer and his friends, the contest would be one-sided and unequal, and hence the price-making power would be surrendered to foreign interests and the farmer would be compelled to dispose of his cotton at the low prices fixed by the spinners of Liverpool, Bremen, and Havre.
Should our cotton exchanges be curtailed, then all the information as to the price of cotton in all the markets of the world and all the information as to conditions which go to make up the price and the price outlook would be no longer disseminated. The buyer and the manufacturer would know what the Liverpool Exchange and other foreign exchanges were doing, but the producer and the merchant, especially in small towns, would be unable to ascertain the prices. Thus the farmer would be at the mercy of the purchaser, and all the American cotton trade would be at the mercy of the foreign cotton manufacturers, who would be intent upon buying cotton as cheaply as possible.
Mr. Chairman, at this point I would like to express my high opinion of the members of the New York Cotton Exchange. For their business integrity there is no higher class of men in the United States. Many of them are from Southern States, but they are true and loyal citizens. They handle millions and millions of dollars of business without the scratch of a pen, and never is there any doubt or question as to their word.
Of course, the so-called "cotton-futures" bill is absolutely unconstitutional and will be so declared. It is class legislation, and trying to tax out of existence contract for futures which have been declared legal by the Supreme Court of the United States and the courts of the last resort in every State in this Union. It is just as lawful for a man to sell for future delivery as it is for him to sell for immediate delivery, and both are valid contracts under the law.
Mr. Chairman, boards of trade are true evolutions of that doctrine of equality which has dominated the world—the equality and liberty of man. The poor man with small capital who goes into the great chambers of commerce and the boards of trade with all the information exposed to his view to protect himself from being gouged and destroyed needs only the light of the reason which God has given him. It is putting him on equality with the rich.

The so-called Lever cotton-futures bill, if enacted into law, will strike down all the trading which can be done at an equal advantage and stimulate the trading where the small man will be at the mercy of the big man. All over the world—in England, in Germany, in Austria, in France, in Holland, in India, in Egypt, everywhere—this system of forward-delivery sales, which is an evolution to meet the wants of modern trade, obtains and is practiced.

When a bill which would have practically prohibited buying and selling of "cotton futures" was under consideration in the United States Senate on July 21 and 22, 1892, the Hon. Edward Douglass White, then a Senator from the State of Louisiana and now Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, delivered a speech in opposition to the measure. I ask unanimous consent to insert as a portion of my remarks the speech delivered by him, in which he speaks of the perfect legality of contracts for cotton for future delivery and the unconstitutionality of Federal laws to prohibit such contracts, and which is an ex cathedra opinion that the so-called cotton-futures bill is absolutely illegal.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks by inserting in the RECORD the speech referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The speech referred to is as follows:

"SPEECH OF HON. EDWARD D. WHITE, OF LOUISIANA, IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, THURSDAY, JULY 21, AND FRIDAY, JULY 22, 1892.

"The Senate having under consideration the bill (H. R. 7845) defining 'options' and 'futures,' imposing special taxes on dealers therein, and requiring such dealers and persons engaged in selling certain products to obtain license, and for other purposes—

"Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the votes which have been hitherto had in the Senate to take up this bill and the general line on which the argument has proceeded seem to indicate that there is probably a majority sentiment on the floor in favor of the bill. I should hesitate very much with this knowledge to make any very elaborate discussion as to the constitutionality of the bill, or as to the wisdom of the legislation which it propounds, if I were not profoundly conscious that, in my judgment, there has been before the American Congress for many years no more pernicious, no more vicious, no more flagrantly unconstitutional legislation, no legislation more tending to undermine and destroy the very foundations of our Government, and none more calculated to do untold and untellable harm to the people of this great country. The interests which this proposed legislation affect are enormous. The products the price or sale of which the bill attempts to regulate run up into vast proportions. I excerpt a statement from the testimony of Mr. Bacon, the president of the Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce, in which he says:

"The cotton crop of the country, which is handled in a similar way, is estimated at $303,000,000 for the current year. For last year it was estimated at $270,000,000. The meat product of the country is estimated at from $600,000,000 to $750,000,000 annually. These, added to the cereal products, make an aggregate of $2,600,000,000 in value, a large proportion of which is disposed of during a small portion of the year, which is required for consumption during the whole year.

"These figures, of course, convey but little idea to the mind without comparison. When we consider that the silver product of the country, which has been the subject of such extensive legislation for the past 15 years, is only about $50,000,000 in value, we will see that the amount is relatively more than 50 times as much.

"The value of the annual agricultural productions of the country is nearly equal to the aggregate of the national debt at the close of the war, the amount of which we have only reduced about one-half. It is only by comparison of these figures that one can reach an approximate idea of the magnitude of the interests involved in this question.

"The theory of the Senator who presents the bill and who urges it with so much zeal on this floor is that if the bill passes, to all the great body of the consumers of this country, representing 78 per cent of the population, there is to be an enhancement in the cost of these vast products. If, then, the arguments of the proponents of the bill be true, upon nearly $3,000,000,000 of products the effect of this legislation will be to increase the price to all the consumers of the country.

"My judgment is, on the other hand, that if the bill passes the necessary effect will be to reduce the price obtained by the producers of the country in a considerable degree upon this great sum.

"With these great issues involved in this bill, issues which go home to every hearthstone in this land, issues which reach out their fingers into the pockets of every man, be he rich or poor, I think I shall be justified in an attempt to discuss its provisions deliberately, in order to point out what I conceive to be the flagrant constitutional defects which are involved in it, and the gross financial and business heresies which it contains.

"Mr. President, let me analyze the bill. What does the first section provide? It has been gone over very frequently, but I shall go over it again in order to make clear what I shall endeavor to say.

"The first section forbids options, which in the argot of the commercial gamblers are known as 'puts' and 'calls.' Now, what is a 'put' and 'call,' or an option, as defined in this bill? It is a contract by which a man gives to another a sum of money for the privilege of calling upon that man to deliver property, or for the privilege of delivering to him. It is a purely unilateral contract, by which a man gives a sum of money for the privilege of delivering or receiving property.

"So far as this contract is concerned, or this so-called contract, I have no word of defense to raise, because it is a contract which engenders no obligation per se. The courts of this land, at least the courts in my State, have declared that it is a contract without consideration, which can not be enforced; that it involves within its bosom an element of chance which makes it purely aleatory, and therefore takes it out of the domain of all those great contracts around which the law throws the shelter of its protection and the instrumentalities for its enforcement.

"That for the purposes of this act the word 'options' shall be understood to mean any contract or agreement whereby a party thereto, or any party for whom or in whose behalf such contract or agreement is made, acquires the right or privilege, but is not thereby obligated, to deliver to another or others, at a future time or within a designated period, any of the articles mentioned in section 3 of this act.

"What does the second section provide? The second section defines futures. What does it define futures to be? It defines any contract to be a future where the one selling at the time of sale is not the actual owner of the property, however real may be his intention to deliver at the time stipulated, and however great may be his means of fulfillment. What else does it provide? After defining this contract it then goes on to say that neither the Government of the United States, nor any municipality, nor any State, nor any farmer, in so far as he may have made a crop or have a crop in process of being made, shall be brought within the grasp of the provision. The amendment which has been adopted on the motion of the Senator from Minnesota also takes all retail dealers out of the reach of the second section.

"Section 2 provides:

"SEC. 2. That for the purposes of this act the word 'futures' shall be understood to mean any contract or agreement whereby a party contracts or agrees to sell and deliver to another or others at a future time, or within a designated period, any of the articles mentioned in section 3 of this act, when at the time of making such contract or agreement the party so contracting or agreeing to sell and make such delivery, or the party for whom he acts as agent, broker, or employee in making such contract or agreement, is not the owner of the article or articles so contracted or agreed to be sold and delivered, or has not theretofore acquired by purchase, and is not then entitled to the right to the future possession of such article or articles under and by virtue of a contract or agreement for the sale and future delivery thereof previously made by the owner thereof: Provided, however, That no provision or requirement of this act shall apply to any contract or agreement for the future delivery of any of said articles made for and in behalf of the United States, or of any State, Territory, county, or municipality, with the duly authorized officers or agents thereof, nor to any contract or agreement made by any farmer or planter for the sale and delivery at a future time, or within a designated period, of any of said articles belonging to said farmer or planter at the time of making such contract or agreement, and which have been grown or produced, or at said time are in actual course of growth or production, on land owned or occupied by such farmer or planter; nor to any contract or agreement made with any farmer or planter to furnish and deliver to such farmer or planter at a future time, or within a designated period, any of said articles which are required as food, forage, or seed by such farmer or planter, his tenants, or employees.

"The third section enumerates the articles which come under this provision. This section, when I come to comment upon it hereafter, I shall show, in my judgment, represents the greatest enormity in the bill.

"SEC. 3. That the articles to which the foregoing sections relate are raw or unmanufactured cotton, hops, wheat, corn, oats, rye, barley, pork, lard, and bacon.

"That is the enumeration. The fourth section imposes taxes and licenses. It imposes a license of $1,000 and a tax of 5 cents on every pound of raw or unmanufactured cotton, hops, pork, lard, or bacon, and 20 cents per bushel upon every bushel of wheat, and so forth. Section 4 is as follows:

"SEC. 4. That special taxes are imposed as follows: Every dealer in 'options' or 'futures' as hereinbefore defined in this act, shall pay annually the sum of $1,000 as a license fee for conducting such business, and shall also pay the further sum of 5 cents per pound for each and every pound of raw or unmanufactured cotton, hops, pork, lard, bacon, or other edible product of swine, and the sum of 20 cents per bushel for each and every bushel of any of the other articles mentioned in section 3 of this act, the right or privilege of delivering which to another or others at a future time, or within a designated period, may be acquired by such dealer in his own behalf or in behalf of another or others under any 'options' contract or agreement as defined by section 1 of this act, or under any 'futures' contract or agreement as defined in section 1 of this act, or under any transfer or assignment of any such 'options' or 'futures' contract or agreement; which said amount or amounts shall be paid to the collector of internal revenue as hereinbefore provided, and by him accounted for as required in respect to other special taxes collected by him. Every person, association, copartnership, or corporation who shall in their own behalf, or as agent, broker, or employee of another or others, deal in 'options' or make any 'options' contract or agreement as hereinbefore defined, or make any transfer or assignment of any such 'futures' contract or agreement, shall be deemed a dealer in 'options'; and every person, association, copartnership, or corporation who shall in their own behalf, or as agent, broker, or employee of another or others, deal in 'futures' or make any 'futures' contract or agreement as hereinbefore defined, or make any transfer or assignment of any such 'futures' contract or agreement, shall be deemed a dealer in 'futures.'

"The fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth, and tenth sections provide for the enforcement of these provisions. I shall not stop to read them, but I will incorporate them in my remarks. You can find nowhere in any revenue legislation provisions more inquisitorial, more far-reaching, and more destructive of the liberty of the individual citizen.

"SEC. 5. That every person, association, copartnership, or corporation engaged in, or proposing to engage in, the business of dealer in 'options' or of dealer in 'futures' as hereinbefore defined shall, before commencing such business or making any such 'options' or 'futures' contract or agreement, or any transfer or assignment of any such contract or agreement, make application in writing to the collector of internal revenue for the district in which he or any of them proposes to engage in such business or make such contract or agreement, or make a transfer or an assignment of any such contract or agreement, setting forth the name of such person, association, copartnership, or corporation, place of residence of the applicant, the business to be engaged in, where such business is to be carried on, and, in case of an association, copartnership, or corporation, the names and places of residence of the several persons constituting such association, copartnership, or corporation, and shall thereupon pay to such collector, as a license fee for conducting such business, the sum, aforesaid, of $1,000, and shall also execute and deliver to such collector a bond in the penal sum of $40,000, with two or more sureties satisfactory to said collector, conditioned that the obligor therein shall pay, or cause to be paid, the tax or taxes as herein provided, and for the full and faithful compliance, by such obligor, with all the requirements of this act; and thereupon the collector shall issue to such applicant a certificate, in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe, that such applicant is authorized, for the period of one year from the date of such certificate and within such district, to be dealer in 'options' and 'futures' and to make, within such district, 'options' and 'futures' contracts or agreements, as hereinbefore defined, and transfers and assignments of such contracts and agreements, and for the period specified in such certificate the party to whom it is issued may conduct and transact the business of dealer as aforesaid. Such certificate may be renewed annually upon compliance with the provisions of this act: Provided, however, That so long as any tax provided in this act shall remain due and unpaid, the person, association, copartnership, or corporation from which such tax shall be due shall not, during the time such tax remains due and unpaid, conduct or transact the business of a dealer in 'options,' or conduct or transact the business of a dealer in 'futures,' and every person, association, copartnership, or corporation making, transferring, or assigning any such 'options' or 'futures' contract or agreement while any tax herein provided shall remain due from such party shall be subject to the fines and penalties hereinafter provided.

"SEC. 6. That it shall be the duty of the collector of internal revenue to keep in his office a book in which shall be registered a copy of each and every application made to him under the foregoing sections, and a statement in connection therewith as to whether a certificate has been issued thereon, and for what period, which book or register shall be a public record and be subject to the inspection of any and all persons.

"SEC. 7. That every 'options' or 'futures' contract or agreement, as hereinbefore defined, and all transfers or assignments thereof, shall be in writing and signed in duplicate by the parties thereto, and every such 'options' contract shall state in explicit terms the time when the right or privilege of delivering the article or articles therein named shall expire; and every such 'futures' contract shall state in explicit terms the day upon which or the last day of the period within which the article or articles therein contracted or agreed to be sold shall be delivered; and any such contract or agreement not including such statement, and not so made and signed, shall, as between the parties thereto and their respective assigns, be absolutely void.

"SEC. 8. That it shall be the duty of every person, association, copartnership, or corporation conducting or transacting the business of a dealer in 'options' or 'futures,' as defined by this act, and they are hereby required to keep a book in which shall be recorded, on the day of its execution, the date of each and every 'options' or 'futures' contract or agreement made or entered into, or which may be transferred or assigned, by such person, association, copartnership, or corporation in their own behalf, or in behalf of another or others, and setting forth the name and place of business of the person, association, copartnership, or corporation in whose behalf, as vendor, such contract or agreement shall have been made, the name and place of business of the party or parties, as vendee, with whom such contract or agreement shall have been made, the kind and amount of the article or articles which are the subject of, embraced in, or covered by each such contract or agreement, the time when the right or privilege of delivering such article or articles as are the subject of, embraced in, or covered by any 'options' contract or agreement shall expire, and the time when or the designated period within which delivery shall be made of the article or articles which are the subject of, embraced in, or covered by any 'futures' contract or agreement; and on making a transfer or assignment of any 'options' or 'futures' contract or agreement, shall, in addition to the facts or items above mentioned, also record in such book the names and places of residence or business of the assignor and assignee and the date of such transfer or assignment; and such book shall at all times be subject to inspection by the collector, deputy collector, and inspector of internal revenue, or any duly authorized agent of the Internal-Revenue Department, who may make memoranda or transcripts therefrom.

"SEC. 9. That it shall be the duty of every person, association, copartnership, or corporation, and they are hereby required, on the Tuesday of the week next succeeding the date of the certificate issued to them, as hereinbefore provided, and on the Tuesday of each and every week thereafter, to make to the collector of internal revenue for the district in which any 'options' or 'futures' contract or agreement shall have been made, transferred, or assigned, by such person, association, copartnership, or corporation, full and complete return and report, under oath and in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe, of any and all such contracts or agreements made or entered into or transferred or assigned by such person, association, copartnership, or corporation during the preceding week, together with a statement of the articles embraced in or covered by each such contract or agreement, and the amounts, respectively, of each such article, and the name or names of the party or parties with whom each such contract or agreement, and any transfer or assignment of any such contract or agreement, shall have been made, and at the same time the party whose duty it shall be to make such return or report shall pay to such collector, upon and for each such contract or agreement which such party shall have so made as vendor, and upon and for each and every transfer or assignment of any such contract or agreement which such party shall have made, as transferrer or assignor, the amount of tax as specified in section 4 of this act, of 5 cents per pound on each and every pound of cotton, hops, and of pork, lard, bacon, or other edible product of swine, of 20 cents per bushel on each and every bushel of any of the other articles mentioned in section 3 of this act which are the subject of, embraced in, or covered by such contracts or agreements, or any of them, for which sums said collector shall give his receipts to the party so paying. And such collector shall, upon the making of such return or report, enter in a book to be kept for that purpose the date of each such 'options' or 'futures' contract or agreement, or transfer or assignment thereof, included in such return or report, the name, residence, and place of business of each party thereto, and whether they appear as vendor or vendee, the kind and amount of each article which is the subject of, embraced in, or covered by such contracts or agreements, the amount of tax charged and collected thereon, and the date upon which such 'options' or 'futures' contract or agreement shall by its express terms expire or mature; which book or register shall be a public record, subject to the inspection of any and all persons. That the person, association, copartnership, or corporation making or entering into any 'options' or 'futures' contract or agreement, as defined in this act, or making any transfer or assignment of any such contract or agreement, either in their own behalf or in behalf of another or others, shall, upon filing with the collector of internal revenue the return or report aforesaid, in addition to the taxes hereinbefore provided, pay to such collector the sum of $2 as a registry fee for each and every such 'options' or 'futures' contract or agreement so made, transferred, or assigned and included in such return or report, and it shall be the duty of the collector of internal revenue, on the first secular day of each calendar month, to make a report to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, setting forth the number of 'options' and 'futures' contracts and agreements, as shown by such book, which had not expired or matured on the last day of the preceding month, the kind and the amount of the articles which are the subject of, embraced in, or covered by such contracts or agreements, and the amount of taxes levied thereon; and a copy of such report shall be kept in the office of the collector of internal revenue and be subject to the inspection of any and all persons.

"SEC. 10. That every person, association, copartnership, or corporation, who shall in their own behalf or in behalf of any other person, association, copartnership, or corporation, make or enter into, as vendor, any 'options' or 'futures' contract or agreement as defined by this act, or make any transfer or assignment of any such contract or agreement, without having a certificate of authority from the collector of internal revenue, as hereinbefore provided, and covering the time at which such contract or agreement, or such transfer or assignment shall be made, or who shall fail or refuse to keep any book or make any record, return, or report hereinbefore required, or in lieu of any record, return, or report hereinbefore required shall make a false, fraudulent, or partial record, return, or report, or shall make or enter into any 'options' or 'futures' contract or agreement, or make any transfer or assignment of such, in form or manner other than as prescribed by this act, or shall fail or refuse to pay any of the taxes required by this act to be paid, or shall in any other respect violate any of the provisions of this act, shall, besides being liable for the amount of the tax or taxes prescribed in this act, for each and every such offense pay a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $20,000, or be imprisoned not less than 6 months nor more than 10 years, or be subject to both such fine and imprisonment.

"SEC. 11. That neither the payment of the taxes hereinbefore provided nor the certificate issued by the collector of internal revenue under this act shall be held to exempt any person, association, copartnership, or corporation from any penalty or punishment now or hereafter provided by the laws of any State or Territory for making, transferring, or assigning contracts or agreements such as are hereinbefore defined as 'options' or 'futures' contracts or agreements, or in any manner to authorize the making, transferring, or assigning of such contracts or agreements within any State, Territory, or locality contrary to the laws of such State, Territory, or locality; nor shall the payment of the taxes imposed by this act be held to prohibit any State, Territory, or municipality from placing a tax or duty on the same trade, transaction, or business for State, Territorial, municipal, or other purposes.

"The twelfth section, which the Senator from Minnesota has moved this morning to strike out, imposed a license upon every man doing the business which the proposed statute itself declared to be lawful. In other words, it brought every citizen making a contract for future delivery not embraced in the provisions of the proposed statute under the reach and grasp of the officers of the Government. The twelfth section is as follows:

"SEC. 12. That every person, association, copartnership, or corporation who shall make any contract or agreement for the sale of any of the articles mentioned in section 3 of this act and requiring the delivery of such article subsequent to the date on which such contract or agreement is made, and who, at the time of making thereof, is the owner and entitled to the possession of the article or articles which are the subject of, embraced in, or covered by such contract or agreement, or has theretofore acquired by purchase, and, at the time of making such contract or agreement, is entitled to the right to the future possession of such article or articles under and by virtue of a contract or agreement for the sale and future delivery thereof previously made by the owner thereof, shall, before making any such contract or agreement, or any transfer or assignment of any such contract or agreement, apply in writing to the collector of internal revenue for the district in which such person, association, copartnership, or corporation shall reside or have a place of business, setting forth the same facts as mentioned and required in the application referred to and provided for in section 5 of this act, and shall thereupon pay to such collector the sum of $2 as a license fee for making, transferring, or assigning, or for conducting the business of making, transferring, and assigning such contracts or agreements, and thereupon the collector shall issue to such applicant a certificate, in such form as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe, that such applicant is authorized, for the period of one year from the date of such certificate, to make, transfer, and assign contracts or agreements for the sale and subsequent delivery of any of the articles mentioned in section 3 of this act, of which such licensee at the time of making any such contract or agreement is the owner, or is then entitled to the future possession of under and by virtue of a contract or agreement for the sale and future delivery of such article or articles previously made by the owner thereof. And any person, association, copartnership, or corporation who shall make, transfer, or assign any such contract or agreement without having paid the license fee herein required, and without having a certificate from the collector of internal revenue authorizing the making, transferring, and assigning of such contracts and agreements, shall be subject to and be required to pay a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000. Such certificate may be renewed annually on compliance with the provisions of this section. And such licensee shall keep a book in which shall be entered the date of, the names and places of residence or business of the parties to, the kind and amount of the articles the subject of, embraced in, or covered by any contracts or agreements for sale and future delivery which may be made, transferred, or assigned by such licensee under authority of the certificate provided for in this section, and the time at which delivery thereof is to be made; and in case of the transfer or assignment of contracts or agreements for sale and future delivery of any of said articles previously made by the owner thereof, or made by a party who has theretofore acquired by purchase and at the time of making such transfer or assignment is entitled to the right of the future possession of such article or articles under and by virtue of a contract or agreement for the sale and future delivery thereof, previously made by the owner thereof, the names and places of business or residence of transferer and transferee or of the assignor and assignee; which book shall at all times be subject to inspection by the collector or deputy collector of internal revenue, or by any duly authorized agent of the Internal-Revenue Department. Such licensee shall also make on Tuesday of each and every week, to the collector of internal revenue by whom the certificate herein provided for may have been issued, a weekly report of all such contracts or agreements or transfers or assignments thereof that shall have been made by such licensee during the previous week, which report shall contain all the facts and items hereinbefore required to be entered in the book to be kept by such licensee; and such report shall be entered by said collector in a book to be kept by him in his office for that purpose. And any such licensee who shall fail or refuse to keep the book and enter therein the fact and items as by this section required, or shall fail or refuse to submit such book to the inspection of the collector, deputy collector, or duly authorized agent of the Internal-Revenue Department, or who shall fail or refuse to make report to the collector of internal revenue as by this section required, shall for each and every such failure or refusal be required to pay to such collector a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $5,000. And it shall be the duty of the collector of internal revenue to keep in his office a book in which shall be registered a copy of each and every application made to him under this section, and a statement in connection therewith as to whether a certificate has been issued and for what period, which book or register shall be a public record, and be subject to the inspection of any and all persons.

"The thirteenth section provides inquisitorial means of visitation and search and examination of books. It provides that the internal-revenue collector shall have the power, whenever he suspects that a business man is violating this statute, to demand an examination of his business and an inspection of his books for the purpose of satisfying himself that the law is being carried out.

"I call the attention of Senators to the fact that the thirteenth section is as broad as any man's right to sell any property for future delivery, whether or not that property is brought within the grasp of futures and options as defined in the bill.

"Now, the distinguished Senator this morning does what? On a motion made to strike out the twelfth and thirteenth sections he says he will agree that the twelfth section shall be stricken out, but he objects to the thirteenth section being stricken out. He strikes out the only possible reason for the powers of search and visitation found in the thirteenth section. He strikes out the license provided in the twelfth section, by which alone the thirteenth section could be justified, and he keeps vested in the officers of the Government the arbitrary powers created by the thirteenth section, and which the bill itself admits are to be exercised against a man pursuing an avocation which the bill itself recognizes as legal and thus should be removed from inquisition.

"The following sections of the bill are full of other penalties. Let us stop for a moment and ask ourselves the question, what the bill does?

"Mr. President, there can not be any question that the contract which the bill strikes at in its second section is a lawful contract. That is removed beyond the domain of controversy. The question whether contracts for future delivery are valid contracts has been before every court in this land. It has been to the Supreme Court of the United States; it has been to the courts of last resort of almost every State in this Union, and it has been crystallized in a body of jurisprudence now passed beyond question that it is absolutely as lawful for a man to sell for future delivery as it is to sell for present delivery; that there is no earthly difference between the two; that they are both valid contracts protected by the law, enforced by the courts, provided only what? Provided only that either of the parties to the contract has an honest intention to deliver.

"The purpose, then, of this bill is to strike down contracts which can be validly entered into, protected by the judgments of the courts of last resort of all this Union. I challenge any Senator upon this floor to produce a single modern authority which does not recognize that the right to make these contracts under the dominion and jurisdiction of the State courts is as absolutely sacred and as well protected by the ægis of the State law as his right to hold his home, or any other right that he has within the dominion of the State.

"This, then, is a proposition that the Federal Government—and, Mr. President, I hate to reargue this question with the eloquent and able, vigorous and incisive argument and denunciation of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Vest] on yesterday ringing in the ears—this, then, is a bill licensing the Federal Government to step over the State line and destroy any contract made within a State between citizens of the State which the Federal Government may choose to destroy. That is the power which this bill asserts. If it does not assert that power it does not assert any power.

"Is it denied that these are valid contracts? Is it denied that they are contracts made under the State law and under protection of the State courts? Is it denied that this bill strikes at contracts between citizens of the State and a res or a thing within that State? That being the case, I ask Senators, mindful of their great oath to support the Constitution of the United States, where within the four walls of that Constitution can they find a pretext for this great usurpation of authority? If the theory which this bill propounds is true, every vestige of State autonomy has been wiped off, and to-day, instead of having a government of limited and restrictive powers, each government moving by the force of constitutional gravity in its own orbit, we stand the most unlimited and arbitrary government on the face of God's earth.

"Now, how will Senators justify this measure? I put it to every Senator, does this power exist in the Federal Government? I challenge any Senator to say that he believes the power exists in the Federal Government to go into a State and destroy contracts made between citizens of the State protected by State laws, contracts outside of the domain of Federal jurisdiction. Can the Federal Government regulate marriage; can it regulate divorce; can it determine the title to property; can it pass upon the tenure by will; can it usurp all the functions reserved to the States as a necessary part of the existence of the State governments? If it can not do these things, by what mandate of authority can this proposed law be put upon the statute books.

"Ah, but I am told that this is a taxing law; that it is an exercise of the taxing power. It is a tax that does not tax. I call attention to this distinction. On the very face of the bill not even a pretext of taxation can be found. By the very terms of the bill no tax can result from its provisions. The only section in the bill which could possibly lead to the collection of a tax and give even a semblance of constitutionality to the bill was the twelfth section, which imposed the $2 license upon a lawful business; and the Senator from Minnesota proposes to take that out.

"Now, then, the question results and comes down to this, and we must meet it: Can the Federal Government by the abuse of the taxing power abrogate and destroy every limitation found in the Constitution and every reservation in favor of the States? That is the question. It can not be evaded.

"Ah, but it is said this is an exercise of the taxing power, and although it is an exercise of the taxing power which does not tax to produce revenue, we will declare in this bill that we propose to tax for revenue, although we do not propose to do so. If we do violate the Constitution in doing this, when it goes to the court of last resort it will not be able to decipher the false purpose of the bill and will therefore hold the bill not to be unconstitutional. Why will the court hold it not to be unconstitutional? Not because it is not unconstitutional, but because we have breathed into this law a living lie, because we have declared that our purpose is to tax for revenue, when every line and letter of the bill says the bill is not an exercise of the taxing power at all, but an attempt to destroy the very framework of the Constitution by going into the States and doing that which the Federal Government confessedly has no power to do.

"Mr. President, some question was raised yesterday as to the power of the court to reach this bill. That question does not concern me when I exercise my right to vote upon this floor. If it be true that under the Constitution there has been lodged in the Senate a power by a declaration of purpose to prevent unconstitutional enactments from being reached by the courts, then the necessary effect of the Constitution is to have made this Senate the court of last resort, and we stand here now called upon, with the great responsibility which rests upon us, not to say what a tribunal would say if the power had been lodged with it, but to say what this great tribunal should say in the face of this patent and glaring and flagrantly unconstitutional act.

"But I do not follow and agree with the admissions on this subject made by the distinguished Senator from Missouri yesterday. I do not agree to them because I believe the premise upon which they are founded is destructive of this Government. The glory and the ornament of our system which distinguishes it from every other Government on the face of the earth is that there is a great and mighty power hovering over the Constitution of the land to which has been delegated the awful responsibility of restraining all the coordinate departments of the Government within the walls of that great fabric which our fathers builded for our protection and our immunity forever.

"It is perfectly true that in two or three cases the Supreme Court of the United States have said that where on the face of a statute there was the exercise of taxation, as the statute on its face was a taxing statute, the court would not destroy the face of the statute by wiping out the taxing provision in the statute with the sponge of the motives which may have actuated the Members who passed it. Is that the case here? Where the face of the statute shows no tax, where the face of the statute itself eliminates all human possibility of the exercise of the taxing power for revenue, then I say the mission of jurisdiction is given to the courts of this land to brush that statute away for its flagrant and open violation of the Constitution. Is this not necessarily true?

"Now, let us reason out the consequences, if it be not true. If this be not true, then the beautiful system by which, as I said just now, all the departments of the Government move in a common orbit, vanishes out of the sideral universe of government, and passes into confusion and chaos. The precedents are against it. The power which the Supreme Court of the United States exercises in the review of statutes is like unto the power exercised by the supreme courts of all the States. The books are full of cases in the State courts drawing the distinction which I have made. In the Topeka case it is drawn in plain words by the Supreme Court of the United States. There a Government appropriated a sum of money, declaring it to be for a public purpose. The case went to the Supreme Court of the United States, and it said your motive and your purpose can not be inquired into. That is removed beyond the domain of controversy or question. But where you have called the statute one thing and in the very terms of the statutes indicate another thing, and that other thing is outside of the powers of Government, then it is not a statute at all, but it is a violation of authority and we strike it from the statute books.

"That, in my opinion, is what should be the fate of this measure. The only semblance of authority within the Constitution, as I have said, was the twelfth section, which put a license of $2 upon a business admittedly lawful, which the Senator from Minnesota proposes this morning to strike out. Climbing up this lofty tree under which he thinks all the great commerce of this country is to find shade and shelter, and under which I think death and destruction, like a upas, is to come, he saws himself down by cutting off the only possibility of constitutionality which was in the bill.

"What does the Senator from Minnesota say? I wish to call attention to it. Of course, everything I say is with the greatest respect and kindness to him. I suppose, when he made the argument which I shall quote in a few moments, he thought it would rally all the Senators on the other side of the Chamber and make them feel that they could not question the constitutionality of this bill without questioning the constitutionality of that system of taxation which they have espoused almost from the foundation of the Government, and which they espouse now to an extreme degree, how extreme I will not comment upon, because I do not propose to enter into that question. What does the distinguished Senator urge? He says:

"One thing is perfectly clear to me, that if this bill is unconstitutional for the reason that we have no right to use the taxing power, except for the purpose of raising revenue, then there has never been a Republican protective tariff but that has been in violation of the Constitution. A duty may be so high, placed with a view of protecting some production for the purpose of increasing or regulating its market value, and not absolutely prohibitory, yet so long as it was not laid for the purpose of raising revenue, it would still be obnoxious to this construction of the Constitution. But there are numerous cases where this duty is absolutely prohibitory, and so intended, and so made for the express purpose of suppressing the importation of articles that come in competition with those produced in this country.

"The purpose of this argument is this: This bill, which destroys all the rights of the States and acts internally upon the people of the State and on contracts protected by State laws, must be valid, and you must hold it so or you must declare that the whole policy of the Republican Party is and has been wrong.

"Mr. President, in my judgment that is absolutely and fundamentally a fallacy. It overlooks the clear distinction between the nature of the power lodged in the Federal Government for the purpose of imposts and the nature of the taxing power lodged in the Federal Government for the purpose of internal taxation. When the Federal Government deals with imposts the Constitution has vested in it the power which would be vested in any Government in that regard.

"No power as to imposts was reserved in the States by the Federal Constitution. All the lawful powers of government which could be exercised in that particular passed into the life and being of the Federal Government by the lodgment in that Government of the power to levy imposts—imposts deal externally, beyond our borders. Beyond those borders the power of the Federal Government was restricted and restrained by no limitation resulting from a reservation in the Constitution.

"Mr. President, in my judgment, if complaint is made of impost tax by the Federal Government levied not for the purpose of revenue, but for protection or prohibition, the complaint is not that the Federal Government violates the Constitution or the limitations of the Constitution, because as to that all authority is granted by the Constitution. When I say this, I mean no limitation by the Constitution by express provision of the Constitution. The complaint of undue or prohibitory external imposts is not that the Constitution has been violated.

"No; but that there has been a violation of the great fundamental and elementary principle of all government, which underlies all constitutions, which affect this Government and every government, and which would affect the most unlimited government in the world. These principles are that government is created with limitations flowing from the nature of its being, which teach that no government shall use its power for the benefit of the few to the detriment of the many. Therefore, all the arguments which have been made on the subject of the abuse of the impost power in the Federal Government are arguments addressing themselves not to the limit of delegation under the Constitution as to imposts, but to the want of power arising from the very nature of government itself.

"In other words, I contend that where power to destroy exists the use of a wrong instrumentality to do the destruction may be the abuse of an instrumentality but not an abuse of power, because the power to destroy is vested. But where the power to destroy does not exist, the use of an instrumentality to destroy that which there is no power to destroy is not alone an abuse of the instrumentality but an usurpation of power itself. Now, the usurpation of power by Congress not vested by the Constitution in Congress is unconstitutional. This being true, it follows that if the usurpation is clear on the face of the act, if the act itself shows the usurpation, the power exists in the Supreme Court of the United States to prevent the usurpation.

"The distinguished Senator made two quotations on this subject. Both of them draw this distinction in the broadest way. One quotation is from Judge Cooley, and the other is from Judge Story. Both of them call attention to the fact that when it concerns import tax the question is as to the fairness and the rightness, if I may use the word, and not as to the question of constitutional power:

"Indeed, in some cases where impost duties are laid, revenue is no part whatever of the motive for imposing a particular duty, but it is made so high that it is expected to preclude all importation, and therefore produce no revenue. A person objecting to the duty may complain that it violates the true principles of government, but he would hardly venture to attack it as being so distinctly beyond the constitutional power of Congress that in the courts it might be assailed as wanting in legal validity. He may question its policy, but he can not well question its constitutionality.

"Says Justice Story:

"It is often applied as a virtual prohibition upon the importation of particular articles for the encouragement and protection of domestic products and industry.

"These are the doctrines, Mr. President, which have been applied by this Government, standing with its face looking beyond our borders at the millions lying beyond. But when turned inward we behold the system of States with all the great rights reserved to them by the Constitution. We see them with their police power, and their legal autonomy, and their right of contract, and their right of property, and everything that has been preserved to us by the Constitution. These rights and their recognition and preservation have given us a hundred or more years of being, and without them war and tumult and misery and suffering would come. The rudiment of all these rights is found in the principle that every power not delegated under the Constitution to the Federal Government is reserved to the States. Yes; the distinguished Senator, in looking at this bill, puts on his marine glasses, and turning to the American people proposes to put upon the great sisterhood of States the shackles of the foreign jurisdiction. He does this, although his bill deals not with that which is foreign, but with all those great rights of local self-government which are ours, ours to-day and to-morrow and forever.

"I doubt very much whether this argument will reach the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, because in the course of his able speech he says:

"The Constitution, which at its adoption was supposed to have in view some reference, at least, to the 'general welfare' of the people, is now almost invariably invoked by constitutional pugilists to resist all reforms and all attempts directed against wrong and abuse.

"I can well imagine that the distinguished Senator must have been in the frame of mind which this language indicates, when his hand could have the strength to write or his mind the power to conceive that there exists in the Federal Government any power to go into your State, sir [pointing to the Senator from Missouri], or the State of Maine, or any other State in this Union and destroy by a surreptitious attempt to pervert the taxing power, the rights of the citizens of the States to contract among themselves.

"I know, therefore, that the frame of mind I am in and the frame of mind the distinguished Senator is in are so wide apart, that we move in such different conceptions of the respective relations of these Governments to each other, that I am afraid I will never be able to reach him by argument.

"Mr. President, I think we ought to be entitled to discuss this measure without sneer, without gibe, without reaching out the hand to stir up—I was going to say the smoldering ashes of past conflicts; but, thank God, even the ashes of that conflict have passed away; I know the American people have forgotten it, except for the lessons which it has taught us all, that within the walls of the Constitution and by adherence and respect for it, united in a common brotherhood lie alone our future hope of happiness and protection.

"The distinguished Senator says:

"It is seriously to be regretted that some of our 'constitutional friends' did not regard this sacred instrument with as much reverence and stand ready to guard it with the same pathetic solicitude in a time not very remote as they do at present.

"Thus the discussion of this antioption bill is to revive the feelings of the war, and sneer and gibe are cast at this side of the Chamber because there are those here who adhere now to those great principles of constitutional government which they think involve the very structure of the Constitution. The germs of the fierce Civil War through which we passed were sown at the birth of our institutions. Both sides in that awful conflict were true to the Constitution as they understood it.

"Mr. President, the men who took part in the war on the southern side were not like the Senator from Minnesota—careless of constitutional obligations. Whatever may be the conception as to the mistake of their opinions—and we all concede that the mighty arbitrament of war has decided they were wrong—no one in this day or any day hereafter, whatever may be the censure which he puts upon the judgment of the southern people, questions the sincerity of their convictions or their great purpose to adhere to the Constitution as they understood it. Their blood sealed their fidelity to their duty as they conceived it. I have seen somewhere a thought of the great war governor of Massachusetts, saying that whatever might be the judgment of history upon the wisdom of the southern people, history would hold that, mistaken as they were, they were heroes because of their devotion to their constitutional mistake.

"I believe now, sir that as time goes by the world will see their magnificent heroism more and more, and that the vision of the southern poet will be fulfilled:

"In seeds of laurel in the earth,
The blossom of their fame is blown;
And somewhere, waiting for its birth,
The shaft is in the stone.

"But, Mr. President, the view of the Constitution which the other side upholds is, I suggest, a reflection on that magnificent and gallant body of men who formed the Union hosts of this country. What did they fight for? What did they die for? For what was their blood poured out in priceless currents? If we believe the consequences of the argument of the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, it was poured out in order that we might have no Government, no States, no autonomy, and that our Constitution might be destroyed.

"I should rather not pass the judgment upon those gallant men which the argument of the Senator from Minnesota does. I should rather rely upon the judgment of the immortal Lincoln, who said at Gettysburg, in that speech which will carry his fame down to the uttermost end of time, 'They died in order that this Government might live.' Live how? Live, as the argument of the Senator from Minnesota would hold, without restriction and without restraint of any kind, with the States destroyed, with all rights gone, with a mighty despotism built up, and that despotism all the more flagrant and all the more outrageous because it would depend solely upon popular clamor or popular whim as to the existence or nonexistence of an evil.

"Mr. President, there can not be any doubt as to the unconstitutionality of this measure. The distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. Mitchell] yesterday asked upon this floor my very polished and eloquent friend, the Senator from Virginia [Mr. Daniel], whether he thought the courts would declare this bill unconstitutional. I should like to ask the Senator from Oregon a question, through the Chair, now, if he will permit me, and that question is this: Does the Senator from Oregon think this bill has for its object the lawful and legitimate exercise of the taxing power?

"Mr. MITCHELL. I am bound to take the bill for what it purports to be. I have seen no reason to inquire of those gentlemen who introduced the bill, or of the committee that reported it, whether there is anything about it that does not appear on the face of the bill; and I have no doubt the Supreme Court of the United States will hold the very same view if it should ever become a law and go before that tribunal for construction.

"Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator vote for a provision declaring that this bill has for its object the destruction and prevention within the States of the things contemplated as declared by the Senator from Minnesota?

"Mr. MITCHELL. No, sir.

"Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator's vote, "yea" or "nay," on this bill be controlled by the fact that it will accomplish that purpose?

"Mr. MITCHELL. At present, Mr. President, I do not exactly see that I am on the witness stand to be catechised.

"Mr. WHITE. I beg the Senator's pardon.

"Mr. President, I put these questions because when the Senator asked the question on yesterday, to me they indicated a depth of political degeneration—of course I do not say this with reference to the learned Senator of Oregon—but I mean of political degeneration of opinion abstractly which can be successfully defended nowhere.

"Who shall say that if this bill is not really a revenue bill and we declare it to be so we will not be concealing our purpose and expressing a fraudulent purpose?

"There has been some question raised about the case of Veazie against Fenno, as bearing upon this issue. It is said, Why, did you not impose a tax of 10 per cent upon State banks upon their circulation, and did not the Supreme Court declare that valid? That case is cited as authority now. It is always the way. It has been that way since the foundation of the Government. If ever a decision is made in any way looking toward the destruction of the lawful powers of the States, arguments have always come up to pervert, to extend, to vitiate, and to amplify in order that there may be authority for a stretch of power and thus take some further liberty from the people. Now, what was the Veazie against Fenno case?

"I know nothing which can throw more light upon a case than the brief of counsel. In the discussion of that case there was no statement by counsel that the question involved was the perversion of the taxing power. The attack made upon the statute was this: That this statute was unconstitutional because it taxed a State corporation.

"When that went to the court what did it say? The Constitution has lodged in Congress the power to regulate currency. In the exercise of that power Congress has authority to wipe out a State corporation by taxation. True the court, arguendo, said that it was either a tax or a prohibition. If a prohibition, the constitutional authority lying back of the statute was found—where? In the clause delegating to Congress the power to regulate the currency. If a tax, it was not illegal, because Congress had the power to use the taxing power to prohibit that which it had the right to prohibit under another provision of the Constitution.

"The case does not cover the question now here. It does not intimate the power to surreptitiously use the taxing power which is here presented. It is true the court, arguendo by the Chief Justice, made use of expressions which may be misconstrued and which are now used to support the contention that Congress has, by pretending to tax, the power to destroy every limitation found in the Constitution. This case does not so decide. It seems to me that ends this contention.

"This brings me to the oleomargarine bill. This was the situation at that time, and I call attention to it: The statute as originally introduced contained a prohibitive tax. Although there was an enormous pressure for its passage, some of the gentlemen who were called upon to support it and whose constitutional stomachs were not so weakened and enfeebled could not digest it. What did they do? They reduced the tax down within a revenue-producing capacity. That statute recognized the distinction which I made just now between the power of the Government to exercise internal and external taxes, the difference between imposts and internal taxation, since, although in that act they made the impost tax absolutely prohibitive, they reduced the internal to a revenue basis on its face in order to make it constitutional.

"This, then, was a case where motive might deprive the court of the power to examine into the constitutionality of the statute because on the face of the statute it was the exercise of a revenue power. I admit that.

"Mr. MITCHELL. Does the Senator think that a reduction of the tax in this case to such a figure that it would admittedly be the means of raising revenue, and under which parties engaged in these transactions would go on, would render this bill constitutional?

"Mr. WHITE. Does the Senator mean leaving in the $2 tax?

"Mr. MITCHELL. No, sir. The point is this: Suppose the tax were reduced to a revenue basis so that the tax would be paid, in which event it would clearly be a revenue bill according to the ideas of the Senator from Louisiana.

"Mr. WHITE. Oh, I must beg the Senator's pardon. The Senator must understand the distinction. I am speaking now of the power of the court on the face of the bill. The bill might, on its face, be a revenue bill, and might to me be constitutional. But in the exercise of my function here I would not vote for any bill if it raised a fraudulent revenue, provided I thought it was intended to prohibit.

"Mr. MITCHELL. I understood the Senator to say that because the tax was reduced so that it was for revenue on its face that enabled the court to declare that it was constitutional.

"Mr. WHITE. I say that would have enabled the court, and it enabled the President to not veto it, because, Mr. President, it is perfectly self-evident when a bill which is a revenue bill comes to me for consideration as to whether I will vote for it or not, it may be to me—if I may be allowed to use the word, a philosophical word—subjectively unconstitutional, not unconstitutional per se, and I may not vote for it as constitutional, because I know that although it is a revenue bill, there is a purpose of destruction and prohibition contained in it. But when it comes to the court, the court can only look at it objectively. The court must look at its provisions, and if on its face it is a revenue bill, if on its face it be for the purpose of raising revenue, the court will say that it can not consider the motive, but must decree its enforcement.

"Yet where on its very face it is not a revenue bill, then even objectively to a court it is unconstitutional, and the court, in my judgment, doing its great duty, will stamp upon it the brand of unconstitutionality. I think the distinction is very clearly drawn in the message of Mr. Cleveland in which he announced his signature to the oleomargarine bill:

> "It has been urged as an objection to this measure that while purporting to be legislation for revenue, its real purpose is to destroy, by use of the taxing power, one industry of our people for the protection and benefit of another.
> "If entitled to indulge in such a suspicion as a basis of official action in this case—

"Now, here are the two cases, one 'if entitled to indulge in such a suspicion,' and what?

> and if entirely satisfied that the consequences indicated would ensue, I should doubtless feel constrained to interpose Executive dissent.

"That is the illustration. That is the object lesson, for objectively when this statute came to him within its four walls there was a revenue created, and he, in the exercise of his Executive power and Executive prerogative, did not come down and go into the hearts of men and do that thing which God alone can do, search out the understandings of men and know their wicked purposes. He took the object as it came to him and passed upon it as such, but he was careful to say in this message that if that bill had not presented that aspect to him, he would have been constrained to exercise the Executive veto.

"I hold in my hand, which I will print as a part of my remarks, the revenue collected from the oleomargarine tax.

Statement showing total receipts from all oleomargarine sources for each fiscal year from November 1, 1886, the date the oleomargarine law took effect, to June 30, 1891, inclusive.

Oleomargarine.	Eight months ended June 30, 1887.	Fiscal year ended June 30, 1888.	Fiscal year ended June 30, 1889.	Fiscal year ended June 30, 1890.	Fiscal year ended June 30, 1891.	Aggregate receipts.
Oleomargarine, domestic and imported	$435,924.04	$653,355.10	$677,302.40	$619,205.72	$871,488.44	.....
Manufacturers of oleomargarine (special tax)	31,700.00	17,150.00	12,400.00	11,700.00	6,950.00	.....
Retail dealers in oleomargarine (special tax)	154,924.00	123,258.54	130,631.51	100,068.00	146,293.70	.....
Wholesale dealers in oleomargarine (special tax)	101,400.00	70,376.24	73,914.00	55,318.00	53,192.00	.....

"The aggregate receipts have been $4,346,000, and the revenue has been increasing day by day and year by year. Will anybody say that that statute is on all fours with this? Will anybody hold that a bill which has raised more than four millions of revenue, and where the revenue has been accumulating year by year, is like unto a bill which within its necessary intendment and on the very face of the statute not only is not intended to raise revenue but, on the contrary, can not under its terms raise a dollar of revenue?

"There are gentlemen upon this floor, my peers in everything, my peers in heart, and my superiors in head, who have said to me that they could not see the distinction between those two statutes.

"Mr. MITCHELL. Will the Senator allow me?

"Mr. WHITE. Certainly; with pleasure.

"Mr. MITCHELL. I understand the Senator concedes that that bill was constitutional.

"Mr. WHITE. As regards the President, when it came to him.

"Mr. MITCHELL. Just as well as when it was before the Senate.

"Mr. WHITE. I never conceded that; on the contrary, I disclaimed it.

"Mr. MITCHELL. But as it came to the President?

"Mr. WHITE. I say that it was constitutional, objectively, when it went to the President. It was unconstitutional, subjectively, as it was passed upon by the Senate. That is what I say, and my words can not be distorted. If the difference between object and subject do not present themselves to the Senator's mind, if the darkness of night and the light of day do not penetrate his mind, I must ask for some greater power of explanation than I have.

"Mr. MITCHELL. My perceptions may be somewhat obtuse, so far as that is concerned, but I wish to understand the Senator, if it does take a long time to get at precisely what he is driving at. I confess I am a little confused, although I am very much interested in his very able and interesting argument.

"The Senator concedes that the oleomargarine bill after it came from the President was a constitutional act; that act was constitutional because not only on its face but the very purpose of it, considered from every and any standpoint, was to raise revenue, as I understand the Senator.

"Suppose the tax provided for in the pending bill was reduced to 5 cents, instead of being at $2; suppose the tax were reduced to a sum where all would admit that revenue would be raised to a point where under the law parties would go on and make these contracts and pay the tax. Now, the Senator will admit, so far as that particular aspect of the case is concerned, it would be a proper exercise of the taxing power.

"Mr. WHITE. I beg the Senator's pardon——

"Mr. MITCHELL. One moment. So far as that particular aspect of the case is concerned, I suppose the Senator will concede that that would be a proper exercise of the taxing power; but whether the object to which it is applied is a proper one is perhaps a different question. The object to which the tax was applied in the oleomargarine act was a representation of butter, but in this case it is proposed to be applied to certain contracts.

"Now, I understand the Senator's first objection to this bill is that it contemplates invoking the taxing power when the real purpose is not to raise revenue, but to crush out certain things I understand that is the first objection of the Senator. But suppose that was avoided in the way I have suggested, then is the other and the only objection that the Senator has to this bill that it interferes with what he regards as valid contracts between parties in a State? Is that it?

"Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I have endeavored to make myself reasonably clear. What I say is this, that if a bill actually raises revenue and is presented to my mind, in the exercise of my duty, under my oath of office here, I have two questions to ask myself: Is this a bill raising revenue? That is the first question. If I determine that question in the affirmative, the lamp of my duty might lead my mind toward supporting that bill, but it could not carry me to that point unless another question were also answered, and that conveys the entire answer to the Senator's question. Is it an honest exercise of the taxing power, or is it a dishonest scheme to raise revenue and accomplish another purpose? If my mind in the exercise of my duty here found that either of these things existed, then, although it was a bill raising revenue, I would not vote for a dishonest bill raising revenue.

"Mr. MITCHELL. But suppose there is no objection, so far as that aspect is concerned, then I want to get the other objection.

"Mr. WHITE. If I were the Executive or a judge and the bill came to me, then, having passed out of this sphere and into another sphere where motives could not enter, I should say the sole question presented to me was, Does it raise revenue on its face? And if so, I would hold it constitutional.

"Mr. HIGGINS. Will the Senator yield to me for a question?

"Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

"Mr. HIGGINS. I should like to ask the Senator from Louisiana whether he considers that the power of the President to veto a bill which has passed the two Houses of Congress is confined, in his opinion, to its unconstitutionality, or whether he has not just as much power as the House of Representatives or the Senate to consider the motives which may be behind the bill?

"Mr. WHITE. I beg the Senator's pardon. I did not quite catch his last sentence.

"Mr. HIGGINS. I will again state my question. I ask whether the Senator considers that in vetoing a bill the President has no power to do it on any other ground than that it is unconstitutional in his opinion, or whether he has not the power to go behind the motive as much as a Member of either House of Congress?

"Mr. WHITE. I hope that when the mantle of the Presidency falls upon the distinguished Senator from Delaware he will decide that question for himself. I shall not enter into that discussion now.

"Mr. HIGGINS. The Senator has assumed that such a bill as the oleomargarine bill could be signed by the President, and was signed by President Cleveland, within his power and competency, on the ground that President Cleveland could not go behind the motive of the bill or to the motive of the bill?

"Mr. WHITE. The Senator from Delaware falls into an error. I have said nothing of the kind. I read the declaration of the President, and I said whether he was right or whether he was wrong—and only God himself is always right—in the exercise of his authority and of his power, under his mission and mandate under the Constitution, within those limitations that he thought he should exercise in the discharge of the duties of his great office he signed the bill for the reasons given by him, and I am not here in the discussion of the present subterfugeous and cheating system of taxation to be led astray into a discussion of the power of the President in the exercise of his veto.

"Mr. SANDERS. Mr. President——

"The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Montana?

"Mr. WHITE. I would rather not yield further, if the Senator will pardon me. I am heated, and I have got an extended argument to make. If the Senator will just allow me to proceed with my argument, I shall be obliged to him. I do not intend to be discourteous to him.

"The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Louisiana declines to yield.

"Mr. WASHBURN. Will the Senator allow me?

"Mr. WHITE. I will yield to the Senator in charge of the bill.

"Mr. WASHBURN. In the article of Judge Cooley in the Atlantic Monthly for April he takes the ground squarely and unqualifiedly that the taxing power of the Government could be invoked to destroy lotteries, not for the raising of revenue but for the absolute destruction of lotteries in the country, and he claims that that is the only way that it can be permanently accomplished. Now, let me ask if there is any distinction between the position taken in regard to lotteries and the suppression of a very much graver character of gambling than selling lottery tickets?

"Mr. WHITE. In the comment I made upon the excerpts from Judge Cooley, to which the distinguished Senator referred, I confined myself solely to the quotation made, and I read that quotation. That quotation refers to imposts, and therefore I discussed the particular question. I can not discuss here all the opinions of Judge Cooley in a magazine article, upon every conceivable question, but I may say to the distinguished Senator, in answer to the question which he puts me, that there has been no man in these United States more unalterably opposed to the extension of the Louisiana lottery than I. When my people were clamoring for its suppression and crowding upon me petition after petition to introduce a bill suppressing the Louisiana lottery by the exercise of the power of Federal taxation, I said to them, 'Great as is this evil, there is an evil yet greater, and that is the disruption and the destruction of all the great principles of our Government by calling upon the Federal Government to do an illegal and unconstitutional thing.'

"Mr. WASHBURN. The Senator has not answered the question which I proposed, which was whether there is any distinction, whether if we have the power to suppress the Louisiana lottery or any other lottery by invoking the taxing power, we have not the same power to invoke it to suppress gambling in food products?

"Mr. WHITE. I will discuss that question when I come to it. I have already said that I declined to introduce a bill taxing the Louisiana lottery by the Federal Government because I thought it violated the Federal Constitution. That is an answer to the Senator's question.

"Mr. President, I have reviewed the proposed statute from its constitutional point of view, but I wish to approach it from another point of view; and in looking at it in this way I entirely put by the constitutional question, I eliminate that entirely from what I have to say. I am supposing now that this proposed statute is within the walls of the Constitution. What then? Should we look only at constitutional questions? If the distinguished Senator were to introduce a bill to-morrow, taking the property of the Senator from Missouri and giving it to the Senator from Georgia, and it were within the Constitution to do so, would I vote for it because it was constitutional?

"There are great principles which underlie constitutions and which should control all legislation. There are great elementary conceptions of government, of English-speaking government, born coeval with our race, and which have made our race the dominating race of the world. We should follow them. Every elementary principle known to English-speaking legislation is violated in this bill in every line and every page of it.

"Let me see if that is true. What does the bill say? The bill defines options. The bill defines futures. Is the definition general in both cases? It is. Now, if the proposed statute stopped there and contained its penalties, then every human being and every contract for options and futures wherever our administration extended would be brought within the provisions of a general statute. Does this bill do that? No; it is discriminating from one end to the other; it is flagrantly and openly discriminating.

"After defining options and futures, then the bill goes on to say, not that all contracts of that kind within this broad land shall come within the reach of this general statute; no, but it picks out particular things and particular subjects matter to make them alone the subjects of the general law, which, if it has any foundation in public necessity or public right, should operate over a sway as broad as our jurisdiction.

"Now, to what is the bill applied? Let me read. I have it here, and I will stop a moment and read it. Just think of it! Here are these contracts, and here are these general definitions. What does it, the bill, say?

> "That the articles to which the foregoing sections relate are raw or unmanufactured cotton, hops, wheat, corn, oats, rye, barley, pork, lard, and bacon.

"And there it stops. Of all the vast objects of contract in this land it makes a general definition, and then singles these out alone to cover them by the provisions of the statute. Is there a Senator who does not admit that from the day of Magna Charta down the first and the elementary principle laid down by English-speaking people is that general laws should operate generally and that no discrimination should be exercised? The distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. George] helped to frame a constitution in his State recently. I venture to say that in the exercise of the power vested in the Legislature of the State of Mississippi this discriminating clause would be stricken with constitutional paralysis because it was not a general law.

"There is not a modern State constitution in this Union which has not put its anathema on discrimination. How then is this bill justified? I do not know. By what rule has it been written? What has been the prescience which has looked over all this land and picked out these particular objects to make them alone the subject matter of this discriminating law?

"Mr. President, be the clamor what it may, I know my people well, and I should not be afraid to go with my vote before them with this third section in my hand and invoke their ordinary sense of common American fair play and feel absolutely confident of their denunciation of this attempt to discriminate in favor of one product as against another product.

"How is this justified? I have heard some talk about agricultural products. My mail has been burdened every day for a month almost with some circular gotten up by some committee somewhere. The Senator says that this bill is in the interest of the farmers, that the farmers are scattered, that they are not organized and can not protect their rights, and therefore they must be looked after. My mail has been burdened with private letters, telegrams, circulars, newspapers, pamphlets in favor of the bill which has engendered in my mind a deep-seated alarm that there is a mighty conspiracy against the consumers of the country and in favor of certain favored persons, and I think I can demonstrate such to be the fact before I take my seat.

"Now, take food products. Does this bill embrace food products? Is cotton a food product? How does cotton get into a food-product bill? Where are butter and cheese and cattle and all the thousand other food products which are left out of this bill, which is called a food-product bill? You have in the bill things which are not food products, and you have not food products in, and yet it is said a great clamor comes up for this bill from the American people, because it is a bill to protect food products. If we are going to protect food products let us protect them; do not let us discriminate.

"Mr. WASHBURN. Cotton is an agricultural product.

"Mr. WHITE. I am coming to agriculture. The trouble is that this bill is so incongruous that I defy any Senator to take a single heading and classify under it the arbitrary selection of subjects which are brought within its provisions. I shall not forget agriculture. Here are agricultural products. Is butter in the bill? Is cheese in the bill? Is hemp in the bill? Are cattle in the bill? Are horses in the bill? Are mules in the the bill? Are sheep in the bill? Is wool in the bill? Only, Mr. President, in so far as the bill pulls the wool over our eyes on the agricultural question.

"Mr. WASHBURN. If the Senator will allow me, they are not in the bill for the reason that they are not bet on in the gambling resorts of this country. That is the reason they are not in the bill.

"Mr. WHITE. I am coming to that. That is a confession of the discrimination, of the favoritism by which the items have been arbitrarily selected. If the gambling spirit is what the Senator thinks, then this bill is going to close the exchanges to these products and open the bucket shops and gambling saloons all over the country to the products which he discriminates against. Then we must write in the title of this bill 'An act passed by the Congress of the United States to stimulate gambling in the agricultural products, and to encourage the opening of bucket shops by forbidding gambling in a few products and licensing as to all the others.'

"But, Mr. President, what a proposition, that these things are picked out for anathema and denunciation because they are dealt in on boards of trade! God of mercy, in this age of the world are we to shut our eyes to every teaching of the English-speaking race? Are we to confess that we are more ignorant than were our forefathers 200 years ago?

"Why, sir, what is the history of English commerce? What has enabled it to carry on its wings the light of civilization and religion and truth all over this world? What has done it, sir, but the organized energies of the great commercial bodies of the world, speaking through their chambers of commerce and their boards of trade? The very structure of our Government, almost the very fiber of this Government, was evolved in that country which preserved its liberties by the efforts of its great bodies of merchants assembled together for the purpose of trading. The very essence of trade is liberty itself; intercourse engenders the immortal spirit of liberty from the very fact that men gather together in the interest of commerce, which needs the wings of liberty and of peace to spread itself in enlightening and improving the world.

"Let us see what the argument of the Senator would lead us to. What are these boards of trade? They are merely the aggregation of merchants who meet in a room to collect the information necessary to enable every man to trade on an equal footing. The telegraph, the reports of all kinds, the bulletin board, everything open; so, if I may be pardoned in the use of such a slang expression, there is a fair and square deal, and the man who buys and the man who sells, all possessing the information which is garnered all over the whole world, deal on an equal footing.

"Mr. President, boards of trade are true evolutions of that doctrine of equality which has dominated the world, the equality and liberty of man. The poor man with small capital who goes into the great chambers of commerce and the boards of trade with all the information exposed to his view, needs to protect himself from being gouged and destroyed only the light of the reason which God has given him. It is putting him on an equality with the rich. The purpose of this bill, then, is to strike down all the trading which can be done at an equal advantage, and to stimulate the trading where the small man will be at the mercy of the big man. Its purpose, then, is to allow trading where all the protections which modern society and modern commerce have evolved will be destroyed.

"[At this point the honorable Senator yielded the floor.]

"Friday, July 22, 1892.

"Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, when I surrendered the floor yesterday I was discussing what I conceive to be the confusion and the discrimination in the terms of the bill as to the provisions creating or defining the acts which the bill prohibits, or virtually prohibits, so as to show that the objects embraced in those definitions were defined by no rule, followed no coherent or consistent line of thought, conflicted one with the other, and were utterly and entirely irreconcilable. If we view the bill as classifying the products as agricultural products, then a vast number of agricultural products were omitted. If we view the bill as a classification of food products, it omits many things which are food products.

"In answer to that argument the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Washburn] yesterday said that the line of thought along which the bill proceeded was to reach the things which were traded in on boards of trade. The argument which was had yesterday I think led up directly to the conclusion that if that were the line of thought which dominated the bill, then the necessary effect of the bill was to increase instead of decreasing gambling and speculation, because as this system of gambling and speculation has its origin in the inevitable tendency of the human character to take risks, particularly under the conditions of modern life, the exclusion of a few articles which were gambled in to-day, leaving the vast sum of human products out of the inhibitions of the bill, would simply deflect the channel of gambling from the bed into which it now flows into a wider and deeper and stronger and a more pernicious stream of gambling.

"I called attention, however, I think, yesterday to the fact that there was in my judgment a philosophically fundamental mistake in attempting to forbid speculative tendencies on boards of trade where that tendency could be executed with reasonable honesty and with reasonable precautions, and encourage and foster speculation where those restraints and restrictions and precautions did not exist.

"Last night my attention was called to a discussion of this question in a work on political economy, which seems to be so apposite, so entirely to embrace the subject matter of this discussion, that I will send to the desk and have read the paragraph to which I wish to call attention. Mr. Clerk, please begin at the top of page 100 and read to the mark at the end of page 101.

"Mr. STEWART. What is the work?

"Mr. WHITE. Denslow on the Principles of Economic Philosophy.

"Mr. STEWART. That is first rate. He is the ablest man who has written on that subject.

"The Chief Clerk read as follows:

"It is a singular fact that markets have been the subject of popular prejudice and moral objection, almost in proportion to the perfection with which they economize time, transportation, and effort, and equalize prices. The proper meaning of a market is not merely the place set apart in which buyers and sellers may meet with their goods, but all that territory, with its groups of buyers and sellers, consumers and producers, of which the residents are so brought into union and contact with each other by the mutual intelligence which arises through reciprocal commerce that one price is arrived at by all with facility and promptitude.

"A market rises into its highest efficiency and value when it concentrates into one focus so large a portion of the buyers and sellers of a certain commodity as to become, in conjunction with one or two other markets of the same kind, an authoritative standard of prices of the articles in which it deals, for all buyers and sellers through the world. By aid of the quick intelligence which the telegraph supplies and of the swift transportation which steam affords the whole world is thus converted into one market having one price, subject only to cost of transportation of the product between the point for which the price is quoted and all other points. Such markets are the Bourse of Paris for stocks and securities, the London Stock Exchange as well as the London Produce Exchange, the Liverpool and New York Cotton Exchanges, the New York Stock Exchange, Produce Exchange, and Real Estate Exchange and formerly the Gold Room and the Boards of Trade (grain and provision exchange) of Chicago, in conjunction with those of the other western cities and that of Liverpool.

"Concerning these exchanges Prof. Jevons says: 'The theoretical conception of a perfect market is more or less completely carried out in practice. It is the work of brokers in any extensive market to organize exchanges so that every purchase shall be made with the most thorough acquaintance with the conditions of the trade. Each broker strives to gain the best knowledge of the conditions of the supply and demand and the earliest intimation of any change. He is in communication with as many other traders as possible in order to have the widest range of information and the greatest chance of making suitable exchanges. It is only thus that a definite market price can be ascertained at every moment, and varied according to the frequent news capable of affecting buyers and sellers. By the mediation of a body of brokers a complete consensus is established and the stock of every seller or the demand of every buyer brought into the market. It is of the very essence of trade to have wide and constant information. A market, then, is theoretically perfect only when all traders have perfect knowledge of the conditions of supply and demand and the consequent ratio of exchange; and in such a market as we shall now see, there can only be one ratio of exchange of one uniform commodity at any moment.

"Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, the object of the bill, the very classification defined in the bill, is to exclude the products which are dealt in on this kind of a market, and leave outside of the operations of the bill the products which are dealt in in another or unrecognized market. I send up to the desk and ask to have read the description of the other market to which the things not brought into the bill are relegated. I have marked the passage on page 109 of the same work.

"The Chief Clerk read as follows:

"In the sale of carriages, pianos, jewelry, clothing, and other things which do not admit of such an authoritative contest over the price, there is great inequality in the prices at which two persons in the same city on the same day may buy two things of the same kind and of equal value. Hence there is great cheating in such trading. One may pay $200 for a watch which another buys for $100. There is no standard. In all these grades of goods long credits must be given, as the dealers must hold the goods until they reach consumers.

"But in articles dealt in by produce exchanges the price is advanced to the producer, and his crop can always be sold if he desires even before it is harvested. Hence the authoritative manufacture of prices confers somewhat the same benefit on a community as is conferred by an authoritative system of law, religion, manners, and ethics. It enables every man to know each moment how he stands relatively to the results of his past exertions, what they have cost, and how much he can get for them.

"Mr. WHITE. Such, Mr. President, is the description of the market destroyed by the provisions of this bill. The agricultural products which have the safe and the sound and the enlightened and the progressive market as defined in this book, and, as resulting from the nature of things, have the hands of palsy put upon them by this proposed statute, and dealers are relegated to the character of market as defined so clearly by this author, where cheating and lying necessarily from the nature of things obtain.

"I think that is a complete exposure therefore of the discrimination which is found in the bill as to the nature of the products embraced within it. But there is an answer yet more conclusive as to this discrimination. If the purpose and object of the bill is to strike with palsy transactions on boards of exchange, on boards of trade, why is it that the terms of the bill leave out all that vast body of property running up into the hundreds or thousands of millions, the bonds and stocks and values of every kind in this country, which form the great sum of the speculation of the country? If the vice of gambling and the tendency of gambling is what is reached by the bill on boards of trade or exchange, why is it that the bill leaves the New York Stock Exchange and all the other great stock exchanges in this country open, where values exceeding in value the things included in this bill are dealt in, by the very methods and by the very procedures which the bill condemns? By what rule will we here, legislating for a whole country, say that we will make our legislation partial; that we will select one class and leave out other and greater classes by applying the rule which the distinguished Senator has announced?

"Mr. President, this discrimination as to the things which are made the subject matter of the legislation in the bill is, in my judgment, far the least discrimination which the bill contains. The discrimination which hitherto I have demonstrated is as to the object to which it is applied. There is a broader, deeper discrimination in the bill as to classes in this country. I find in the testimony a statement by the president of the Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce as to the class distinction which is carried in this bill, which strikes me with so much force that I send it to the desk to be read.

"Mr. GEORGE. What is the name of the witness?

"The Chief Clerk read as follows:

"Mr. Bacon, of the Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce:

"Now, I wish to call attention to the fact that this legislation, if it is to have the effect which it is expected to have, and which is undoubtedly the object of the promoters of this measure, is legislation in favor of a class—in favor of the producing class; and if it produces the effect desired, it is legislation against the interest of the consuming class. It stands to reason that whatever enhancement of value may inure to the farmer falls necessarily upon the consumer.

"The census of 1880 (the figures for 1890 are not yet prepared) shows that the number of persons engaged in all gainful occupations of the country were 17,392,000, in round numbers; of those engaged in agriculture there were 7,670,000, constituting 44 per cent of the whole. Those engaged, as it is termed, in gainful occupations comprising the mercantile and manufacturing and mining interests of the country; those engaged in agriculture comprising all who are engaged in any branch of agriculture, not only in the raising of grain and live stock, but florists, tree men, and every branch of agricultural service; showing that 44 per cent of the population is directly interested in the production of agricultural products of all kinds. For the benefit of that 44 per cent the other 56 per cent of the population, if the objects of the bill be accomplished, will be taxed; or, to speak more properly, they are to be deprived of the benefit resulting from the operations of the natural and established laws of trade in their favor in order that 44 per cent of the population may receive a benefit. Now, the injustice of that is apparent on its face.

"But I wish to go a little further on that point. Of those engaged in agricultural pursuits, the number so engaged in the 10 cotton States is 2,837,000, which, deducted from the whole number engaged in agriculture, leaves 4,833,000 presumably engaged in the production of cereal and meat products, which represents a percentage of 28 of the aggregate. Instead of those who are raising cereal products, who are supposed to be benefited by this bill, being 44 per cent of the whole, it would be only 28 per cent of the whole. Those who are engaged in raising cotton are, of course, consumers of cereal products and of meats which are raised in the North, and they become sufferers in consequence of the enhanced values that are expected to result from the operation of this bill. I believe these expectations to be false, and that they will not be realized. But it is the purpose of the promoters of the bill to produce this result for the benefit of those engaged in raising cereal and meat products of the country, and if it does produce that effect it benefits 28 per cent of the people at the expense of 72 per cent of the people. Now, I submit whether this is fair legislation, to say nothing of the wisdom of it.

"Mr. WHITE. Now I send up to be read the opinion of Mr. Pillsbury as to the effect of this legislation if the purpose of its authors is successful. I desire to say before the Chief Clerk reads the excerpt that in the course of my remarks to-day I shall have occasion to refer to Mr. Pillsbury as an authority on the subject matter under discussion. At the very outset I wish to distinctly announce the fact that in referring to Mr. Pillsbury I intend by no way, directly or indirectly, in the remotest possible manner to refer to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota because of the fact that he has a business connection with Mr. Pillsbury.

"There is no Senator on this floor for whom I have a higher respect and a more profound admiration than the Senator from Minnesota; and if I make these references in the discharge of my duty I wish to enter at once a disclaimer of any possible imputation that in any way in the world I wish to indicate that I think the distinguished Senator is impelled in his course on this bill by anything but the highest sense of public duty to his country.

"The Chief Clerk read as follows:

"Senator PLATT. Then comes the other question which I was going to ask: Suppose this bill can be passed; do you think it would have any effect on the average price of wheat for the year?

"Mr. PILLSBURY. I think decidedly it would.

"Senator PLATT. Would make it higher?

"Mr. PILLSBURY. Yes, sir.

"Senator PLATT. And then the people who eat the wheat would have to give more for it?

"Mr. PILLSBURY. They would.

"Senator PLATT. Do you think that is a good thing?

"Mr. PILLSBURY. Yes, sir.

"Senator PLATT. To make every man who eats your flour pay more for it in consequence of legislation?

"Mr. PILLSBURY. Yes, sir; so long as this country is an exporter of wheat and raises one-third more wheat than it consumes. If we can keep the price of breadstuffs on a higher level, as it is well known that the little farmers have not had living prices for their wheat, I think it would be a good thing for the country, taken as a whole, and I think that Connecticut would be more prosperous if the people of that State had to pay a dollar or two more for their flour; I think that the general buying capacity of the Northwest and wheat-growing States would be that much increased. That is my doctrine of political economy.

"Mr. WHITE. Now, Mr. President, let us admit that the theory of the proponents of the bill is true, these consequences will follow. Are they just? Is there a Senator who admits that we should legislate in favor of one class and against the other?

"Mr. WASHBURN. Will the Senator allow me just a moment?

"Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

"Mr. WASHBURN. Does not the Senator think it is fair both to the producer and to the consumer to allow the law of trade and supply? My idea is that there should be no artificial change whereby prices are made either one way or the other from the legitimate law of supply and demand.

"Mr. WHITE. I, of course, anticipated and was approaching the objection which the Senator makes. But it seems to me there is a confusion of thought in the Senator's mind; I say it with great respect. Is not the right to make a contract for future delivery as much a right as the right to make any other contract? Has not the Supreme Court of the United States recognized that a future contract was a valid contract? Is not the sum of human liberty the right of a citizen to deal as he pleases and with such freedom as belongs to everyone?

"Of course, just legislation ought to balance every man's right equally and leave every man his freedom. But when it is proposed to restrain a man of his natural liberty to make a contract, which right inheres in him, with the object and purpose of bettering one class to the detriment of the other, I submit it is vicious and wrong in legislation.

"The only answer I find in the testimony is that there is such a solidarity between all classes of a community that if you benefit one the reflex resultant of this benefiting of one will so help the one who is injured as to cure the wound which you will have inflicted by the statute. That is the argument. I shall not attempt to answer it now. Suffice to say that this is the argument put all through this testimony by those who urge this bill. I shall have occasion, I think, in a few moments to show that while they put this argument for the purpose of defending this part of the bill, when they reach another part of the bill which is subject to attack, they deny the solidarity which they affirm here for the purpose of defending this provision.

"Now, let us see if there is not another discrimination in the bill, a discrimination as to persons. The second section of the bill, after defining futures and options, says what? It excepts certain persons from every provision of the bill, and who are those persons? The Government of the United States and every town and municipality. Now, what is the theory of this bill? The theory of the bill is that these dealings are wrong, that they ought to be forbidden. It looks to me as very bad public policy to denounce a thing by a prohibitory tax and then immediately declare that the Government may do it. That looks to me indefensible. What answer does the distinguished Senator make to this objection? He says, and I quote from his speech:

"The United States or any State, Territory, county, or municipality do not come within the provisions of this section, for the United States, or any State, Territory, or municipality do not make their purchases of supplies of boards of trade, but they are usually made by receiving bids or proposals from parties who have the articles desired to be purchased.

"The Government is excepted from the operation of the bill because the Government deals with people who have the objects which they propose to offer. Is not that entirely inaccurate? Does not everybody know that nearly all the supplies which are furnished this Government are tendered to the Government by people who have not got them and who have to acquire them? The very coal which is to heat this building at the next session of Congress has been contracted for, I am told, by one who is a coal dealer, and he has a contract for future delivery with a miner who is to mine it.

"Therefore this exception is all wrong. It is a plain discrimination. The reason given for it is wrong. The reason given for it strikes me as a very confused reason. If the terms of the bill do not reach the Government, then why is the Government excepted? The very making of the exception in the bill under every elementary rule of construction is a negative pregnant with the affirmative that if the exception were not made the Government would be included; and yet the Government is excepted on the ground that the bill does not cover the Government, when if that be accurate there was no necessity for the governmental exception whatever.

"Let me show by a curious coincidence how remarkable this exception is. One of the subject matters included in the bill, and, as I hope to demonstrate later, will be ruined by it, is cotton. Where did dealing in futures in cotton arise? Such trades in cotton futures arose in dealing with the Government. This is shown by an examination of a work which is the most authoritative work on cotton, Mr. Donnell's work, the accepted authority with everybody in the cotton trade. Mr. Donnell was a broker of great merit and high character, who, having accumulated a competency, has retired from business and devoted himself to the literature of this subject. In discussing the question of the origin of the future delivery of cotton he says:

"Contracts for future delivery.—This business commenced during our Civil War.

"Speaking of cotton:

"Some of our manufacturers entered into large contracts with the Government, and covered themselves by purchasing the raw material for delivery at some future time. The price, within certain wide limits, was then of much less importance than the certainty of getting the cotton when needed.—(E. J. Donnell's History of Cotton, p. 614.)

"Now, the Government is excepted from the operation of this bill on the ground that the bill does not apply to the Government; therefore showing that the exception ought not to be here. It is excepted on the further ground that people who sell to the Government have the property, when such is not the fact. Here the development comes that the very origin of dealing in futures in cotton came from contracts with the Government made during the Civil War. It seems to me this answer is complete——

"Mr. WASHBURN. Was it made on a board of exchange?

"Mr. WHITE. I have already answered the Senator's argument about the board of exchange. I have already demonstrated, I think, that trade can be a great deal more safely made on a board of exchange, where all the dealers, all the sellers, and all the buyers are congregated, where there is an ascertained and established price, than it can be made where such a thing does not exist.

"Let us take the distinction as to persons. The farmer has been left out from the prohibition of the bill. I think hereafter, when I come to another part of the bill, I can show that this is an illusory jack-o'-lantern exception left in this bill to lure the farmer on to his destruction. But suppose I should not demonstrate that, by what theory are we to say, here is a class of contracts which we strike with moral and legal inhibition, and then immediately take out of the reach of the inhibition a certain favored class of persons?

"Mr. President, the germ of more harm to the farming class lies within that exception than words can tell. They, above all other people in the race for honest government, require no discrimination. They, above all other people, must guard themselves against the arbitrary exercise of governmental power for the purpose of favoring classes. In this proposed statute the illusory concession which is made to them is sure to become the fruitful source of untold injuries to come hereafter.

"But it may be said the farmer makes the crop; the farmer intends to get a crop. This bill only allows him to sell the crop which he has in process of fruition or which he intends to make, and it uses that expression. Does that differentiate the proposition? Is the farmer's intention to make his crop any more serious than may be the intention of the man who contracts to deliver a thousand bushels of wheat on a particular day? Is the realization of his intention any more possible? Is the certainty that the intention which is in his mind is going to take life and being by the production of that crop any more certain than would be the ability of a man of fortune, with the money in bank, to buy the product that he is going to buy in the fulfillment of a contract? Is it not absolutely certain, on the other hand, that the risk of not being able to fulfill, whatever may be the honesty of the intention, is greater in the farmer's case than it is in the other?

"There is the exception written into this bill of retail dealers, and I suppose other exceptions. I think that makes this an exceptional bill, so entirely exceptional that I think it ought to be beaten.

"But let me call attention to another thing. All through this testimony—and I want to emphasize this fact—all through this testimony there is the admission that it is absolutely essential for the successful commercial sale of the things which are stated in the bill that trade for future delivery in them should not be hampered. Even the persons who most favor this legislation in their testimony say we would be against this legislation if it hampered legitimate trade. The distinguished Senator from Minnesota in his speech on the bill said:

"I desire right here to distinctly state that it is not the purpose of this bill—neither does it—in any manner whatever to interfere with the bargain, purchase, or sale of any product or property where the party making such sale is the owner thereof or where he has a contract for the ownership or right of possession of the same.

"It neither seeks nor does it in any way interfere with the freedom of commerce, but leaves legitimate trade without restriction or hindrance.

"These words were delivered in a discussion of this bill with the twelfth section in it, with the twelfth section in it which imposed a license of $2 upon all trade in actual cotton, even the trading taken out of the operation of the definitions in the bill. It is said of this bill to-day, which, even after the motion to strike out the twelfth section has carried, leaves the thirteenth section in it—that section provides that wherever an internal-revenue collector has reason to believe or to presume that any man is doing the things forbidden by the act, although he be making the future sales which are allowed, shall have a right to call for and inspect his books and business.

"The freedom from unreasonable search arose with Magna Charta; have we come now to this state of things in the American Senate that a contract which all the courts have declared to be lawful, which the bill admits to be lawful, is submitted to the right of search upon the mere suspicion of an internal-revenue officer? Yet the declaration is made that there is no intention in this bill to interfere with the freedom of trade. The earnestness of purpose and the zeal of the distinguished Senator, the evil which he sees and wishes to cure for a great public purpose, have so dominated his mind and clouded his vision that there lies a fog between his mind and the great and elementary principles of American Government; he sees freedom where I see slavery and oppression.

"Mr. President, let me pass away from these things. I wish to discuss the essential features of the bill now. I have discussed it hitherto on the theory that it was unconstitutional. I have taken up its contrarieties, and its confusions, and its contradictions, and its stipulations against human liberty and elementary rights. I propose now to turn my back upon all that. I propose to urge the defeat of this bill, supposing that this was a body with no restriction on it whatever, that this Senate was the most untrammeled and absolute legislative body in the world, that the Constitution was a myth, and all the restraints of English-speaking government a mere chimera which we had forgotten and which we were never to recall. I say, looking at this bill from this point, it is pernicious and vicious; that it will strike a blow at the commerce of this country the length and breadth and width and depth of which no human mind can compass until its results of disaster have worked out. Let me see if that is true.

"There is an elementary principle of legislation that in matters of commerce the wisest, safest, best, the most enlightened process is to accept the judgment of the men who by long commercial training and long commercial experience have a knowledge of the commercial subject matter in hand. That is an elementary rule. There is not a court, I think, in this land sitting to-day with a jury impaneled between man and man—I do not know how it is in the other States; I know it is so in mine, and I know it is laid down in elementary books on evidence—that if a complex commercial question were presented to that jury a commercial expert would not be allowed to testify. All the great reforms in our system, the protection of innocent holders, the rights accorded to third parties, all our system of insurance, all our system of maritime law, are not originally the creatures of statute. They were all brought forth from a mighty evolution, which treated the aggregate sense of the commercial world on a commercial question as the aggregate common sense of mankind.

"Now, what is the fact about this bill? There is a persistent, consistent, a universal declaration of all the commercial bodies in this country against this bill, and specifically pointing out the evils which will result from it.

"Mr. President, I send to the desk and desire to have read the protest of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York.

"The VICE PRESIDENT. The protest will be read.

"The Secretary read as follows:

"THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.

"Meeting of Thursday, March 3, 1892.

"The committee on internal trade and improvements, to whose attention was brought a request from the New York Cotton Exchange to join in a protest against three bills which have been recently presented to Congress, viz: House bill No. 2699, by Mr. Hatch, of Missouri; Senate bill No. 685, by Mr. Washburn; and Senate bill No. 1268, by Mr. Peffer, reported as follows through Chairman Louis Windmuller:

"It appears to have been the mistaken notions of the framers that they could benefit producers as well as consumers if they throw obstacles in the way of dealers, to sell what they do not own and buy what they do not need. They evidently believe that such sales and purchases tend unnaturally to depress or advance values. They seem to forget that these so-called speculators must deliver what they have sold and pay for what they bought. The price of cotton is low, not because it was sold short, but because the production is large and consumption is small.

"When a manufacturer is anxious to secure raw material for future orders, which are offered to him at a time when cotton on the spot commands a higher price than he can pay, the middleman, who anticipates a reduction of values, comes forward and agrees to furnish it at a figure which enables the mill owner to close contracts for the fabrics demanded by his customers. Breadstuffs are high, not because they were bought for a rise, but because they are needed by nations whose crops have been a failure. An exporter receives an order to forward at certain limits, when navigation opens, to a port on the Baltic Sea, a cargo of corn. It is unobtainable and not wanted for immediate delivery. The dealer in futures steps in and agrees to furnish to the exporter what he wants at the time when he needs it.

"It is indisputable that such dealers have become useful factors in the general development of commerce ever since it has assumed large proportions. They take risks by which future wants are provided in our home market as well as in foreign countries. When they overstep the limits of prudence they are the sufferers, rather than producers and consumers. A combination of such men is not powerful enough to control prices of the great staples of this country beyond their natural level so as to cause serious injury.

"But even if the public should occasionally suffer because the markets have been forestalled, your committee does not believe that the course provided by these bills furnishes a proper remedy for the evil. Past experience shows that legislation will only do harm when it tries to interfere with the natural laws of trade.

"Your committee therefore recommend that this Chamber join the Cotton Exchange and the other commercial bodies throughout the country in a protest against the passage of these bills, as they would injure the best interests of the community.

"On motion the following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

"Whereas there has been introduced in the Senate of the United States by Senator Washburn of Minnesota bills known as S. 685 and S. 1757, and in the House of Representatives by Representative Hatch of Missouri a bill known as H. R. 2699, levying a tax on purchases and sales for future delivery of cotton and all hog products of 5 cents per pound, and on wheat, corn, oats, barley, and other grain of 20 cents per bushel; and

"Whereas should any one of these be enacted into law the result would be the suppression of trading in this country in what is known as contracts for future delivery of the articles mentioned, to the great detriment of all persons engaged in their growing, handling, or consuming:

"Resolved, That the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York hereby enters its solemn protest against the enactment into law of any of the before-mentioned bills now before Congress or of any other bill or bills of similar purport.

"Resolved, That this Chamber hereby expresses its condemnation of any attempt on the part of Congress to enact laws for the supposed benefit of one portion of the community as against another.

"Resolved, That whatever the asserted evils may be incident to this method of doing business, it affords a measure of security and protection to legitimate traders as well as to the producers of the articles named that is not to be disregarded.

"Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Chamber that no good can result to the agricultural interest of the country by any legislation that curtails and restricts free and untrammeled trading.

"Resolved, That the great law of supply and demand regulates values of everything, and that no particular system of trading can ever more than temporarily, if at all, obstruct its full operation; that this inexorable law always has and always will operate whether a man sells what he does not possess in the hope of securing it at a later period at a less price or not, and that any effort having in view the abolition of 'short selling,' if enacted into law, would not only fail to secure the imaginary benefits sought, but would be productive of incalculable injury to legitimate business interests while this fact is in process of being determined.

"Resolved, That a copy of this protest be forwarded to each Senator and Representative in Congress.

"GEO. WILSON, Secretary.

"Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I sent up and had read first the memorial of this great body, because by its constitution and organization it is not a trade body. It is not the Chamber of Commerce of New York City. It is the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, perhaps one of the greatest bodies of commercial advisers in the commercial world to-day, composed of men many of whom are removed from practical business, men of large fortune, dealing in vast sums, men of great ability and thoroughly versed in the movements of commerce, whose opinion and judgment expressed on any commercial question anywhere where commerce is carried on would have great weight and great responsibility.

"I now send up to the desk, Mr. President, and ask to have read the memorials of the banks and bankers of New York, the banks and bankers of Chicago, and the banks and bankers of the city of New Orleans.

"The Secretary read as follows:

"NEW YORK BANKS AND BANKERS.

"NEW YORK, February 4, 1892.

"To the honorable the House of Representatives of the United States:

"The undersigned, engaged in the banking business in the city of New York, believe that if House of Representatives bill No. 2699, now before your honorable body, taxing purchases and sales of cotton, grain, and hog products for future delivery, becomes a law it will do great damage to the business in those articles and work a serious injury to producers.

"That, as bankers, we consider our risk in advancing on such property very much less than was the case prior to the inauguration of the present method of doing business.

"We therefore earnestly protest against the passage of this measure and trust that no legislation in this direction may be approved by your honorable body.

Seligman & Co., bankers; Heidelbach, Ickelheimer & Co., bankers; Kuhn, Loeb & Co., bankers; Blake, Brothers & Co., bankers.

"The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to have the names attached to these memorials read?

"Mr. WHITE. No; Mr. President; I do not.

"The Secretary continued to read as follows:

"CHICAGO BANKS AND BANKERS.

"CHICAGO, ILL., February 4, 1892.

"To the Congress of the United States:

"The undersigned hereby respectfully and urgently protest against the enactment of Senate bill 1757, 'defining options and futures,' and known as the Washburn bill.

"We believe that the passage of any such bill would be not only seriously detrimental to the agriculturist, but would be of incalculable injury to the manifold industries of the entire country, inasmuch as these industries depend for their profitable prosecution upon that system of buying and selling for future delivery which the Washburn bill would destroy.

"We believe the dealings in futures in grain and hog product, as regulated by the Board of Trade of the city of Chicago and similar exchanges, based on the actual delivery of the commodity traded in, are the highest development, after years of experience and labor, of the best system of handling the enormous crops of this country to the most profitable advantage of the producer.

"This system affords an open market on which the world's competition can meet in establishing values without the limitations and restrictions which an exclusively consumptive demand would impose.

"It daily declaration of values is an analysis of the world's product and requirement, and reduces to the minimum the risk of those engaged in handling the crops, thereby securing to the producer the highest bids at all times.

"By this system our merchants yearly advance millions of money for the cribbing and warehousing of grain throughout the country, which without the protection of the present market would not be done.

"To destroy this system, as contemplated by the Washburn bill, would reduce the circulation of money when most needed to move the crops, would greatly restrict credits owing to uncertainty of values, practically drive the small grain merchants from the field, and concentrate the business of handling the products herein referred to in the hands of wealthy corporations and syndicates of warehousemen and millers.

"NEW ORLEANS BANKS AND BANKERS.

"NEW ORLEANS, December 30, 1891.

"To the honorable the House of Representatives and Senate of the United States of America, Washington, D. C.:

"The undersigned, engaged in the banking business in the city of New Orleans, believe if Senate bill 685, 'the Washburn bill,' taxing purchase and sale of cotton, grain, and hog products, becomes a law, that it will do immense damage to the business in those articles, reduce stability in values, and work great injury; and that as bankers we consider our risk in advancing on such property very much less than was the case prior to the inauguration of the present mode of doing business. Therefore we most respectfully protest against the passage of the bill.

"N. B. Sligh, president, Southern National Bank; R. M. Walmsley, president, Louisiana National Bank; C. Kohn, president, Union National Bank; A. Baldwin, president, New Orleans National Bank; George R. Preston, president, Hibernia National Bank; G. W. Nott, president, Citizens' Bank of Louisiana; L. C. Fallon, president, Mutual National Bank; Chas. F. Hoffman, bankers and exchange; H. Maspero, president, Traders' Bank; James T. Hayden, president, Whitney National Bank; H. Gardes, president, American National Bank; W. P. Nicholls, president, Bank of Commerce; N. Landry, president, People's Bank of New Orleans; Pierre Lanaux, president, State National Bank; J. C. Morris, president, New Orleans Canal & Banking Co.; G. Ad. Blaffer, cashier, Germania Savings Bank; Jos. L. Bourdette; Fred. Peters, president, Metropolitan Bank; Gilbert H. Green; Germania National Bank, J. C. Denis, president; Moore, Hyams & Co.; Isidore Newman, sr.; Bertus & Durel.

"Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I send, in addition to these, a list of commercial bodies throughout the country protesting against the passage of this bill. Along with that list I send up the memorials themselves; and I request that the list be printed as a part of my remarks, and that the memorials also be printed as an appendix.

"The VICE PRESIDENT. That order will be made if there be no objection. The Chair hears no objection. It is so ordered.

"Mr. WHITE. I ask that the list be read.

"The VICE PRESIDENT. The list will be read.

"The Secretary read as follows:

"LIST OF EXCHANGES, BOARDS OF TRADE, MERCHANTS, MILLERS, ETC., PROTESTING AGAINST ANTIOPTION BILL.

"New Orleans Cotton Exchange.
"Savannah Cotton Exchange.
"Houston Cotton Exchange and Board of Trade.
"Mobile Cotton Exchange.
"Greenville Cotton Exchange.
"Memphis Cotton Exchange.
"Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce.
"Chicago Board of Trade.
"New York Produce Exchange.
"New Orleans Board of Trade (Ltd.).
"New Orleans Clearing House Association.
"Bankers, millers, and merchants of Toledo, Ohio.
"Baltimore Corn and Flour Exchange.
"Chicago merchants and manufacturers.
"Minneapolis Clearing House Association.
"Minneapolis Business Union.
"Minneapolis Chamber of Commerce.

"Mr. WHITE. Now, Mr. President, in the face of this almost universal commercial opinion are we going to pass this bill? Will it be said, as was intimated on this floor, that perhaps some of the bankers may have objection to the bill because it would affect their deposits of margins on futures? Can that be said of this great body of bankers throughout this country?

"Why, Mr. President, but a while ago when I put the question as to the discrimination against one of the large interests of the country by this bill, the only answer made was that there was such a solidarity of interest that the benefits of one would be resultingly compensatory for the injury to the others. Solidarity of interest which is affirmed, as respects the discriminating clause of this bill, is now denied in the face of this great testimony of commercial men from one end of this country to the other, men who have been dealing in these methods of business and who know their utility to the commerce of the land.

"Why, sir, there is hardly a cotton plant blooming in the Southern States to-day, there is not a leaf of a cotton plant smiling in the wind which does not trace its way back in some way by some connection, however remote, to the capital which is represented in these petitions. That capital will suffer as much as will the producer by the passage of this bill.

"The railroads, all the great interests of the country, act and react one upon the other, and you can not strike down the producing element of this country without striking down these great interests. When you find all these enlightened interests, all these men and bodies who are inseparably connected with the interests of the country, uniting on a purely commercial question in unbroken opinion as to the commercial harm which is to come from a given commercial restriction, it seems to me it is trivial to the last degree to say that their interest is not the interest of the producer and that the producer can be stricken down without their feeling it.

"These banks and bankers are the instrumentalities by which the producer makes and moves his crops. The great bank at New York loans its money to the bank elsewhere, who in turn loans it to a factor, who loans it to a planter. The factors in New Orleans loan money throughout the Mississippi Valley to their constituents to enable them to make their crops. The ability of one of these classes to pay the other depends largely upon the making of crops. The increased ability to pay depends upon what the crop will bring in the markets of the world.

"And yet we are told now, as to all of these great interests, complex and involved, united as by the inevitable laws of nature itself, that these merchants do not belong to the producing class and have no right to a judgment on this great matter of commerce. That argument denies the only premise upon which the discrimination in the bill as to classes can possibly be justified.

"But, Mr. President, we are not left to opinions in our own country. All over the world—in England, in Germany, in Austria, in France, in Holland, in India, in Egypt, everywhere—this system of forward-delivery sales, which is an evolution to meet the wants of modern trade, obtains and is practiced.

"Yet, at this late day in this great body, representing the greatest commercial people in the world, the most active, the most enlightened, the most fertile in resources, the most advanced, are we to be called upon to listen to the contention that all the bankers of the world, not only in this country but everywhere, the great business men of the world, all the exchanges of the world, without reference to nationality, are a mere body of degraded and prostituted gamblers? That is the inevitable outcome from the arguments which have been adduced on this floor; arguments, in my judgment, in the domain of reason, as flimsy and as wanting in logical foundation as it is possible for argumentation to be.

"No, Mr. President, when we come to commercial questions and find the universal consensus of commercial mankind agreeing to one thing, all tending to one thing, all supporting an evolution which has come, which is here, and which must remain, I say against all this the opinion of any one man here or there or somewhere else should weigh as nothing. If we were dealing with a theory, if there were here a question of natural philosophy or of chemistry, perhaps one mind with one ray of light could shed over the whole universe a splendor which all the world had not discovered. But when we come to the practical things of life, things that were not born but were evolved from commerce, because commerce is not a birth but an evolution, the only safe rule is to listen to commercial opinions. Commerce is a creation of the aggregate practical common sense of mankind, and nothing ever obtains universally in commerce that has not been founded upon the rock of things practical.

"It is a mistake to say, as has been intimated here, that these bodies whose petitions I have presented are bodies not of producers. Why, the only body I am familiar with, Mr. President, is the Cotton Exchange of New Orleans. That exchange has a great many producers, agents, or factors of planters as members. It has the buyer and the seller, the planter, and the factor who represents a vast volume of planters. If you were to-day to put an exhaust pump on the cotton fields of the southern country and draw out of those fields the money which has gone from these commercial bodies and whose only hope of return is in the fruition and wise marketing of those crops, you would cause no greater destruction to sweep over those fertile and laughing fields than will, I am afraid, result from the passage of this bill.

"Now, Mr. President, having laid down these general principles, I propose to look at the origin of this system of future delivery and see whence it came.

"Where did it take its birth? If we look back 40 years and picture the conditions of things at that time, and then look at the condition of things to-day, sum up the whole mass of human acquisition existing now and compare it with the human acquisitions of those days, we shall have a résumé of the growth of this future system.

"There is not a spark of electricity encircling the world to-day like a flash of lightning which does not carry in its womb the germ of an undeveloped future contract. There is not a railroad train dashing over the land that has not written upon its locomotive headlight the necessity of future contracts. There is not a steamship plowing the vast deep with all the rapidity of ocean transit which now obtains that does not at every puff of her mighty engine repeat and repeat again to the commerce of the whole civilized world the necessity of future contracts.

"I found, Mr. President, this morning, in a paper recently published in New York on the death of an illustrious man, an estimate of the consequences which had come from the electric cable joining Europe and America. The writer of that article, with much lucidity, called attention to the fact that it was the intermingling and intercommunication between man and man which had generated this closeness of union in commercial transactions out of which had developed this system which dominates the commercial world to-day and which lies at the foundation of every human business. There is not a civilized human being who does not bear living evidence not only of the necessity but the universality of this practice.

"The very material from which the coat I wear was woven was probably bought on future delivery. The spinner who spun it, in order to save himself from loss, had sold it for future delivery in order to be guaranteed a price which would be remunerative. There is not a thing to-day which enters into the use or consumption of mankind which, under this modern and universal system of future delivery, is not covered by contract in one way or the other to save loss which would otherwise result.

"The inevitable tendency of modern business is to draw people together, to make intercommunication of man with man greater. The inevitable result is equality. The future business is the necessary result of the struggle between men for equality. Before the future business came into being the large capitalists, the mighty millionaires, of whom the Senator from Minnesota speaks, had to furnish the money with which to carry on commerce. This future system, as I have said, is the result of the struggle for equality. Before it came large fortunes were required to carry and hold the product and submit to the great expense and risk which resulted from the holding them until taken by consumers, whereas now the ingenuity and quickness of the minds of men, responding to the wants of modern trade, have engendered this system of future delivery, which has put every man upon a footing of equality with every other man, enabling one without large capital to be the equal relatively of the man with great capital.

"I can recall that in my boyhood, in the city of New Orleans, the great commercial houses, the great English houses with large sums of money, the agents of the Brown Bros. and the agents of other great bankers, the Baring Bros., did business there. When exchange was to be drawn to pay for cotton, the Baring Bros. or Brown Bros. bought it. If cotton exchange was taken to a bank, there was danger of it being refused for fear the price of cotton might go down. The banker would say, 'If I take this bill except upon the credit of the drawer, a decline in the price of cotton in the future will make a loss.' So it resulted that the business was transacted largely upon the personal credit of these great houses, or on the credit of the cotton buyer, who was required to be a man of fortune.

"But now a man with an office and without much capital is as good as the Brown Bros. He gets his cable order from the spinners he represents on the other side to buy cotton. He buys spot cotton and sells it for future delivery. He sells the very exchange which he is to draw for future delivery. He must know the rate of exchange before he can make his price, and asks the bank to agree to take his exchange at a date in the future. Every transaction connected with it is a future transaction. His possibility of dealing without capital is caused by the fact that an insurance resulting from future delivery is put upon every article that is dealt with in the course of the transactions as they go along.

"See what a revolution it has worked in the Southern States. Formerly great masses of cotton would come to the city of New Orleans and be stored. The buyer was gone. Decline was rapid. It required the actual presence of a man of means to buy this property in order to hold it, because the buyer must submit himself to the risk of loss if cotton declined.

"What is the situation now? Why, the receipts as they come in are distributed over the year under this system of future contracts. Cotton is bought for future delivery and is thus taken from the spot market. The small consumer is enabled to buy because he is not obliged to pay cash, but can take advantage of a transaction for future delivery. That is the situation. It has curtailed the profits of the millionaires. It has reduced the charge to the producer.

"Mr. President, I telegraphed the secretary of the cotton exchange of the city of New Orleans to ascertain what were the charges of the middleman now as compared with such charges formerly. I have a telegram in reply, in which the secretary says:

"NEW ORLEANS, LA., July 22, 1892.

"While no regular statement can be made, owing to irregularity of charges, you can safely state that under old system, including cost of advancing commission on sales of cotton, commission on purchases of supplies, insurance rebates, etc., cost on a bale of cotton averaged fully $5 per bale. To-day millions of bales are sold direct from interior, avoiding many extra charges under the free-on-board-delivery system at 25 and 50 cents a bale under the free-on-board and future-delivery systems, which have built many flourishing interior centers. Many of the old items of charge have been abolished; these will be largely restored if present trade methods are interfered with.

"HENRY G. HESTER, Secretary.

"Hon. E. D. WHITE,
"United States Senate.

"Now, Mr. President, I desire to have read a statement of the results of this business found in the same book which I have read from this morning, commencing on page 103 and going down to the marked paragraph on page 104. That states with such lucidity the evolution of these economic problems that I incline to agree with the distinguished Senator from Nevada [Mr. Stewart] when he said this morning that he considered the author one of the most lucid of political economical writers.

"The Secretary read as follows:

"'Three independent economies exist in the practice of buying and selling for future delivery, say one, two, or three months ahead, which could not be effected by buying grain on hand and taking present delivery.

"'First. Buyers for consumption—millers, exporters, and foreign purchasers—can, through these, convert a future unknown price into a known price, so far as is necessary to enable them to base future contracts for production thereon. Suppose a manufacturer of cotton goods or iron, feeding his own men, as indirectly he does, and obliged to estimate the rate at which he can afford to take orders according to the rate at which he can buy bread and provisions, it is plain that he could 'figure' the rate at which he could take orders more closely if he could make certain his own future rate of expenditure on his supplies or food and provisions. This he could do by buying in August, deliverable in October.

"Second. Precisely as buying in a wide market equalizes prices over a wide area of country and enables millions of persons to produce the same product in close competition with each other, so buying for a considerable period of time, or 'going long' spreads and equalizes over a long period of time the changes in price which are made inevitable by natural causes, such as war, drought, flood, great or small harvests, and the like. Equalization of prices over time is as essential to steady production as equalization of prices over wide areas and numerous groups of producers and consumers. If a raise of 20 cents per bushel in wheat is made necessary by an impending war between two grain-growing countries, and if one buyer knows it three months ahead, and buys his supply at an advance of 2 cents per bushel, he not only saves his own supply but he brings the market 2 points nearer where it ought to be, and thus serves millions of producers and consumers who are interested in the raise being both early and gradual, not late and spasmodic.

"Thirdly. Such 'futures' originate with buyers, since if no one wished to buy ahead no one could sell futures. Each buyer pays a margin on his contract sufficient to secure the seller against loss in event of a fall in price and no delivery. The futures run in links from the consumer back to the producer. In such cases they cause a current of advance payments to set in from the dealers in the futures or purchasers.

"This is in effect a movement of money in advance from the consumers, or their representatives on the board of trade, to and among the producers. Farmers are thus enabled to get advances on their grain and planters on their cotton, whereby the harvesting is virtually done by the capital advanced by the consumer. This converts articles like cotton and wheat, for which prices are established by 'futures,' into 'cash' articles, or articles on which long advances are had, whereas cotton goods, furniture, and manufactured articles are sold so invariably on long credits that even 'cash' means 30 days after delivery.

"Mr. President, I also send to the desk, with a request that it be read, an excerpt from Contractual Limitations, which is a modern book, published in 1892, by an ex-chief justice of the Supreme Court of Indiana. It contains a statement of the problems involved in these modern methods of business which I think so clear that I desire to insert it in my remarks.

"The Secretary read as follows:

"Trading in cotton futures was established in New York in 1870 and in New Orleans a few years later. As I am more familiar with the cotton trade than with the other trades in which transactions in futures are made, I will confine my remarks more especially to cotton futures. Contracts in cotton futures are made for the delivery in lots of 100 bales during the month contracted for, such delivery to be at the seller's option upon five days' notice to the buyer. An order on the warehouse for the cotton is tendered for every notice of delivery by the seller to the party to whom he has sold. If the buyer has also sold the cotton for delivery during the month for which he has received notice, it is customary for him to transfer the notice of delivery and warehouse order to the party to whom he has sold, and such transfers are made until 3 p. m. of the day of issuing the notice or until its receipt before that hour by a party who has bought but has not sold, or who desires to receive the cotton, and this party receives the cotton from the one who issued the notice and warehouse order and pays for it.

"As those who have bought and sold have no interest beyond the difference in the price at which they bought and the price at which they sold, it would be a useless expense to have the cost of delivery and receipt incurred for each change of ownership, when the passing of the warehouse order accomplishes every purpose and saves unnecessary charges. All immediate parties between the party who issues the notice and warehouse order and the party who receives the cotton settle with each other the difference between the price of their respective contracts and the price at which the cotton is received and paid for. In the course of business it happens that many contracts are settled before the month of their maturity and without actual delivery of cotton. For instance, a merchant may sell for a planter a contract for October delivery, and the next day he may buy for a southern cotton buyer a contract for delivery the same month, and if these transactions are made with the same party on the exchange, a direct settlement would be made as between the two members of the exchange.

"A merchant might sell to a party, who might sell to another, and this other might have previously sold to the first party, all the transactions being for the same month's delivery. This would make a settlement of contracts between the three and is called a 'ring settlement.' These 'ring settlements' are purely matters of chance. They may be effected very soon after the transaction, or they may not occur for months, and they may not occur at all. They do not in the slightest degree enter into the matter of the original transaction, which is based upon the probability and intention of actual delivery of the cotton contracted for. In much of the legitimate business at present the transactions in futures are of great benefit to producers, manufacturers, merchants, bankers, and the general public.

"About three-fourths of the cotton crop is usually marketed during the first four months of the season. If such a large proportion of the crop was forced upon the market for immediate sale, the effect would certainly be to unduly and greatly depress prices. By the sale of futures against consignments of actual cotton relief is often given to an overstocked market and better prices are secured for the planter than would otherwise be possible. If prices are satisfactory, the planter can direct his merchant to sell futures against his crop before it is actually ready to be marketed and thus secure the benefit of a remunerative price which might not be obtained if the sale could not be made until his crop had actually reached a market.

"Mr. President, having referred to the general laws of trade from which the future system was evolved, I now propose to summarily restate some of the benefits which it confers on the cotton planter.

"It gives him a wider, safer, relatively higher, and less fluctuating market.

"It cheapens the rate at which the producer obtains the money to make his crop by enabling the factor and all who deal with the producer to sell by futures the product with which the producer is to pay them, thus diminishing their risk and enabling them to reduce their charges to the producer.

"It has diminished the charge of the middlemen by drawing the producer and consumer together, by enabling the buyer to sell for future delivery and buy the producer's crop to fill his future sale already made.

"It has multiplied buyers and brought them to the door of the consumer.

"It has multiplied investors by enabling them to buy actual cotton and sell futures against it at a small advance to cover interest and charges, thus making the investment safe. The investor, having sold for future delivery against his purchase of actual cotton, is absolutely safe, is submitted to no risk of fluctuation in the market, and therefore can afford to pay a better price to the producer,

"It has enabled the spinner to pay a better price to the consumer. He buys his cotton for consumption by means of a future contract, thus obviating the risk of a decline in the market. He sells the goods which he is to make from the cotton by a future contract, thus insuring a profit and thus enabling the spinner to do his business on a narrower because a safer margin of profit. It has brought the cotton fields of the South nearer to the great centers of American and European consumption by diminishing the risk, thus reducing the difference in price which formerly existed between cotton in the field of the producer and that cotton at the door of the consumer.

"It has relieved banking capital, thus leaving more money to assist the planter in making his crop.

"All these things, Mr. President, are the necessary resultants of the first proposition, which is that the system of selling cotton for future delivery gives the producer a wider, safer, relatively higher, and less fluctuating market. If this proposition be true all the others necessarily follow.

"Now let me show the existence of these benefits by an examination of the state of the cotton trade before and after the future period, so that by a comparison between the two periods the mind may be able to determine, not by abstract reasoning, but by the touchstone of absolute and undeniable fact, whether the benefits which I have stated have or have not resulted.

"In the domain of theory minds may differ. The moment we advance an abstraction, one mind takes one view and the other takes another, and the union of the two minds becomes impossible because of the divergent premises or the contradictory deductions which the minds make.

"But when we enter the domain of absolute and unchallengeable fact, then the only question which remains is first to ascertain the truth and then follow it. By that touchstone I hope to demonstrate that this system has been a merciful blessing to the cotton planter of the southern country and to the cotton trade, and that its destruction will entail upon that people in loss of price and incidental sacrifices a sum equal to, it may be, $100,000,000.

"I shall say nothing of the grain trade. There are Senators who are more familiar than I am with the movements and operations of grain. I may say, however, that the theory and opinions of all the grain brokers, all the elevator men, all the bankers who advance on its exchange and bills of lading, and all of the people who deal in grain. I think almost without serious exception, adhere to the promises stated in the book which has just been read.

"In Minneapolis, the very center of the grain trade, as will be seen, all the organized commercial bodies have filed their memorials here against this bill. While the distinguished Senator from Minnesota was good enough to say to me that he thought they had modified their opinion in consequence of a modification in the bill, I think when it is known what an illusory hope that modification holds out, that their protests will apply. But we are not wanting in this record indubitable evidence that the principles which I assert, and which the theoretical writers and all the practical men assert, apply to grain.

"I find in the testimony of Mr. Romer, taken before the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, the following:

"Mr. ROMER. I will say, if I am allowed, that another important miller in the country, in an interview with myself on the Produce Exchange of New York, said he was heartily in favor of this bill. 'Why,' said I, in my simplicity of heart, 'this bill will be an injury to the farmer; this bill will narrow the markets and give him no opportunity to sell to the best advantage.' He said, 'I am not legislating for the farmer, I am legislating for the miller; the farmer will take care of himself.'

"Senator WASHBURN. That man must have been from New York.

"Mr. ROMER. That was ex-Gov. Stanard, of St. Louis, Mo. He is a reputable miller.

"They want to be the buyers and without competition—the buyers at their own price.

"Mr. President, I think the testimony here makes it perfectly clear, absolutely clear—and I want to call attention to it very deliberately and have it weighed—that whilst there may be divergence among millers, as there undoubtedly is, from the earnest and zealous and disinterested attitude taken by the Senator from Minnesota on this floor, yet there are other millers who consider that the necessary effect of this bill will be to reduce the price of the product made by the farmer and put him in the hands of and at the mercy of the miller. Mr. Pillsbury, the gentleman to whom I have already referred, and whose testimony is in this record, is a part owner of a vast milling establishment. He testifies that they have, I think, 150 elevators. I may be mistaken in stating the number. Now let me read his testimony, and I invite attention to it. This testimony was taken before the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Represenatives:

"Question: Mr. LONG. Well, formerly when millers were able to carry this wheat and flour and their money invested in it they then charged a profit sufficient to cover the interest on their money and that went out to the markets of the world and paid the expenses, etc., and profits back to the mill man.

"That is the question.

"Answer: Mr. PILLSBURY. The universal rule used to be that the miller generally accumulated wheat, say, when the farmers were putting in their surplus, rapidly. The universal rule, almost, used to be that you could buy the wheat cheaper at that time than at any other time, and you could make a fairer profit on the actual holding of the wheat than you could at such times when these movements of the farmers were less.

"Let me repeat it.

"You could buy the wheat cheaper at that time than at any other time.

"Mr. President, the system of futures was introduced in order to prevent purchasers from taking advantage of the time when the farmer was shipping rapidly, buying low, and then selling it afterwards for a large profit. After the system of futures came in, when this vast surplus was accumulating, this was prevented. Not only the rich man, but the poor man, could buy for future delivery without any risk whatever. Every contract so made necessarily relieves the pressure on the market and gives the producer a better price. Mr. Pillsbury, in what I have just quoted, admits this.

"But he goes further—

"Question: Mr. LONG. Well, now, then; as it stands now the miller can not carry the wheat and flour, because there is a large risk attached to it in consequence of wind selling. Then, if this wind selling has the strength that you say it has, it is manifest that it has a prejudicial influence against the raiser of wheat.

"Mark you, the question is inconsequential. The answer to the previous question had been that it was prejudicial to the miller of wheat, and the question says 'prejudicial to the raiser.' Now, mark the answer:

"Mr. PILLSBURY. Yes, sir; against the raiser of wheat—

"Here comes the gist of the answer—

"and the miller before—

"That is, before the system of 'futures'—

"could generally use his good judgment and make money by the rise of wheat. I would state a fact, which perhaps would be a surprise to most of your committee, that I have no doubt the milling interests in this country, taken as a whole, in the last 10 years have paid the farmer more money for wheat than they have gotten out of him. That is the fact through the Northwest.

"Mr. President, this bill proceeds upon the theory that the farmer has not got his full money; that he has not been paid the value of his product. Here is a statement that under this system during the past 10 years the millers have been paying the farmer more for wheat than they, the millers, have obtained for it.

"Let me continue the citation:

"I think I can count—

"Says Mr. Pillsbury—

"on the fingers of my two hands the 150 milling firms, say 10 years ago, in our part of the world; and I think that is true all over the country, that there are only a few millers who, by using the highest triumphs of milling and the best executive ability and producing the best brand of flour, have been able to make anything. The immense competition and capacity of the mills of this country has doubled three times the amount of flour they can make, and it is got right down the last few years to the question of the survival of the fittest; but there was a time when they could always run on a profit, years ago, by buying wheat in the fall, say on an average of $1 a bushel, and we were almost sure to make a good profit by carrying it until the time when the state of the roads, etc., prevented the deliveries being so large. I look on short selling as being the greatest impediment to the profit of milling business in that way.

"That is just it, Mr. President. Here, if human language can state it, is an express admission that before the system of futures the way the millers did their business was when the surplus was coming in from the crop in large quantities, to buy it cheap, and when the roads got bad and the farmer's wheat could not come in, to sell it high. If the language does not say that, what does it say?

"Does not that exactly tally with my statement of the 'future' system? The 'future' system has destroyed that. Why? Because a man looking forward to the coming of those muddy roads and knowing that the muddy roads are to come, has said to the farmer, 'Do not sell your wheat now at a low price; I will agree to pay you a month hence, when the roads are muddy, a higher price; just let me take it.' So competition has come in; and instead of buying wheat cheap when wheat was abundant and selling it high later on, the prices have been equalized.

"I do not know whether that is a fact in wheat or not, for I have no experience and I do not propose to discuss it; but I say when, on the face of this testimony, I find the statement to be that that is the case, I have the right to assume that Mr. Pillsbury knows a great deal more about wheat than I do, and to accept his declaration of what were the consequences before the 'future' system, and to see very plainly what is the consequence now and thus to keenly appreciate the great solicitude of Mr. Pillsbury for the producers of the country and his desire that their grain should sell high.

"Now, Mr. President, let me review the facts as to cotton. But before I do that I desire to send up and have read a list of telegrams. I have compiled the telegrams all into one. The phraseology of this one telegram is not literally the phraseology of the many which I have received, but they were all substantially the same, and I have put the signatures under one in order to avoid duplication.

"The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Turpie in the chair). The paper referred to will be read.

"The Secretary read as follows:

"COTTON FACTORS OF NEW ORLEANS.

"NEW ORLEANS, LA., July 18, 1892.

"To Hon. E. D. WHITE,

"United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

"We ask your efforts to defeat Hatch antioption bill. Its passage will lower prices, injure planting interests, and badly affect cotton business generally.

"Stewart Bros. & Co.; Geo. W. Sentell & Co.; Hyman, Hiller & Co.; Simon E. Marx; J. Freijhan & Co., Bayou Sara, La.; Lehman, Stern & Co.; John M. Parker & Co.; R. M. Walmsley & Co.; Pugh & Co.; Phelps & Co.; Thos. L. Airey; Levy Bros.; Robert Day & Co. (Ltd.); H. Abraham & Son; J. Weis & Co.; Baldwin & Putnam; Bickham & Moore; W. B. Thompson; Chas. Chaffe.

"Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, most of the names found in that telegram are the names not of cotton buyers, but of cotton sellers. They are the names of the great body of the cotton factors of New Orleans who carry almost the entire crop of the Mississippi Valley.

"Mr. GEORGE. There is an important name missing from that list.

"Mr. WHITE. Whose name?

"Mr. GEORGE. Richardson & May.

"Mr. WHITE. I send up a telegram from Mr. May, of Richardson & May.

"Mr. GEORGE. I noticed the absence of the name.

"The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paper referred to will be read.

"The Secretary read as follows:

"[Telegram.]

"NEW ORLEANS, LA., July 18, 1892.

"E. D. WHITE, United States Senate:

"I believe the passage of the antioption Hatch bill will do incalculable damage to the cotton trade and cotton planting in the United States, and I invoke your earnest efforts to defeat it.

"A. H. MAY.

"Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, some Senators here know personally Mr. John T. Hardie, of the city of New Orleans, and his great business experience. I had a telegram to the same effect from him.

"I repeat, that these telegrams are not from cotton buyers, but they are from cotton sellers; and there does not live a body of more enlightened and honorable merchants than those whose names are found upon that list. Many of them have been in the cotton industry from its infancy, and in all its trials and tribulations. They have followed it through it all, and they are doing it to-day, as they have always done, honestly and wisely.

"I desire to say another thing. Among that body of high-minded and enlightened gentlemen and progressive merchants, who have been in this business for all these years, there are found none of these great aggregations of wealth to which the distinguished Senator from Minnesota referred. There is honest competency among them, and many are large cotton planters.

"I have received, beside these, a telegram, which I desire read, from the dealers in rice and sugar and produce in the city of New Orleans.

"The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paper referred to will be read.

"The Secretary read as follows:

"NEW ORLEANS, LA., July 19, 1892.

"Hon. E. D. WHITE, Washington:

"We, the undersigned dealers in rice, sugar, and produce, consider the antioption bill as detrimental to business, and feel that its passage would work injury to our interests.

"Bloom & Son, Lefeirere & Marionneau, Miltenberger & Flower, O. Doyle & Co., John W. Coyle, B. W. Seago, J. A. Harral, Elmer & Zeebrook, G. Schwartz.

"Mr. WHITE. I will not encumber the RECORD by more telegrams. I take it for granted that if a man wanted an opinion as to the operation of this bill upon cotton he could not go to a more enlightened source for the information than to these gentlemen—information coming, as I said just now, from sellers of cotton; information coming from men who are solely interested that it should bring as high a price as possible; information coming from men who have watched these movements through all these years with a solicitude born of the keenest interest, because they are always involved in it. When that is the case, when the universal opinion of the commercial world sustains them, am I to be told that we are to take the opinion on the subject of men who have had no experience whatever?

"But let me now come to figures. I send to the reporter and desire to have incorporated in my remarks—I will not have it read—a table showing the annual crop, the exports, and United States consumption of cotton since 1841, which is brought down to 1891.

"The table referred to is as follows:

"Mr. WHITE. Now, what is the claim which those who defend future sales advance? The claim is this: That as in a few months the whole cotton crop was precipitated upon the market, this created a glut in the market and put the producer largely at the mercy of the buyer. The crop either had to be sold or to be stored. If the buyer was not there to take that crop, then there was this vast mass of receipts, and of course there was a serious decline in the market.

"Our total spinning capacity in this country represents a little under a third of our crop—somewhere between a third and a fourth. I will not be accurate in this statement. The balance of the crop was for exportation, and the agents of the great English buyers and consumers were there; and if they did not buy, the price went down.

"Under the system of 'futures' has this evil increased or has it diminished? It should have increased largely, because before the future period the crops came in more slowly than they do now. Why? In the first place, the greater part of the cotton crops in the South in the olden times was made by slave labor, and if the price was not satisfactory the large planters were able to hold their crops for an advance. In the second place, a great part of the cotton was grown on the alluvial lands along the streams, and the only exit to the markets of the world was the rising of the water in those streams. All these things and others of less importance tended at that time to retard somewhat the incoming of the crop of cotton. Despite that fact, in the first months of the season, before future dealing came in vogue, when the cotton came in there was always, unless there was some abnormal condition, which can easily be explained, a serious depression in the market, which put the producer absolutely at the mercy of the consumer. Who was to take it but the consumer? He availed of his advantages and fixed the price.

"As this evil grew, the system of futures was devised, and devised for what purpose? Devised for the purpose of bridging over this glut, of preventing this cotton which came from being pushed upon the market, thus allowing it to be bought by a man who could not pay for it at once but who could do so two or three or four months off, thus necessarily spreading the large receipts over a longer period instead of throwing them all upon the market and causing them to be sold for the prices the consumer was then willing to give.

"Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question for information?

"Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

"Mr. GEORGE. I understand the position of the Senator from Louisiana with reference to the cotton trade to be, that now, owing to the increased facilities for marketing the cotton crop, railroads and all that sort of thing, contrary to the fact as it existed many years ago, when a very large amount of cotton was precipitated into the New Orleans market, much more than was needed then by the consumers—am I right that far?

"Mr. WHITE. I say the receipts are larger now than they were then. I did not enter into that question. I spoke of the price of cotton.

"Mr. GEORGE. Then I understand the Senator to say—and I want to understand him and I want him to understand me, because I know there are many difficulties about this thing—I understand the Senator to say that but for the 'future' system of dealings this cotton would be thrown upon the market then and there in its glutted state, and there would be a great fall in the price. Is that right?

"Mr. WHITE. I was not saying that when the Senator was kind enough to interrupt me. I had advanced that as a theory in my argument before, and I was proceeding to demonstrate as a fact that it was so. I am not engaged now in the statement of theoretical problems. I was endeavoring to put my theories to the touchstone of fact by showing that such was and is the case.

"Mr. GEORGE. Very well. Then I understand the Senator to change his position a little from the way I understood him, for now he states the proposition a little differently, that the records of the commercial exchanges and the cotton exchanges demonstrate the fact that when this cotton gets into New Orleans or other markets in the fall in this glutted state, the result is that there is a fall in the price?

"Mr. WHITE. Always.

"Mr. GEORGE. Let me go on. Now, I understand the Senator to say that the 'future' sales or the 'future' system will counteract that, but it does not now operate in that way owing to the 'future' system. Is that so?

"Mr. WHITE. Oh, no; I did not say that. I said not to the same extent.

"Mr. GEORGE. Very well. It lessens it, then?

"Mr. WHITE. It lessens it seriously.

"Mr. GEORGE. Let us understand this. What prevents under this bill every single bale of cotton that reaches New Orleans or any other port in these crowded months, these months of surfeit, being sold for future delivery?

"Mr. WHITE. I beg the Senator's pardon. He is now making an argument, and not asking a question.

"Mr. GEORGE. I am asking a question.

"Mr. WHITE. No; that is making an argument. I was not discussing whether it could be done under this bill. I am simply now demonstrating the fact that the system of 'futures' had prevented the consequences of overreceipts, and in the course of my argument, if the Senator will allow me, I intend to discuss the matter he is speaking of.

"Mr. GEORGE. I am very much obliged to the Senator for his courtesy; but this is a matter in which my constituents feel a great interest, and I do not want to make a mistake about it. I thought that the Senator had asserted a proposition and a theory which could not be made to fit the facts of the case. If, now, the Senator, who has been so very courteous to me as to allow me to interrupt him so far, thinks I am trespassing and that he will answer this matter further on, then I have only to say that I thank him for his courtesy so far, and that if my life and health are spared I shall try some time during this debate to answer any position which he may take which goes to show that the price of this large amount of cotton in New Orleans or in the other market places of this country is not affected by the future sales, except deleteriously.

"Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, in illustration of what I was saying, I hold in my hand a table. I will comment upon the table before asking to have it printed with my remarks. I have tabulated the receipts of cotton at the ports of this country from 1870–71 down to 1891–92. The figures are startling. From September 1 to December 31 there were received in 1870–71, 1,642,000 bales of cotton. There were received in 1871–72, 1,392,000 bales.

"Mr. GEORGE. At all the ports?

"Mr. WHITE. At all the ports. Now, I want to call attention to these figures. I shall not read the whole list, but the table will speak for itself in the RECORD as part of my remarks.

"In 1889–90 there was received before the 31st day of Decembers 4,270,000 bales. In 1870–71 the amount was 1,642,000 bales, and it is but little over 2,000,000 bales, as a rule, running down the list, until we get to 1878–79. Then it was 2,651,000 bales.

"Mr. GEORGE. Let me ask the Senator right there if he has the total for each year, so as to show the proportion?

"Mr. WHITE. I have already offered as part of my remarks such a statement.

"Mr. GEORGE. The Senator does not understand me. The subject will be more understandable if the table is inserted.

"Mr. WHITE. If the Senator will allow me, I am dealing with statistics, and if he does not let me proceed with an orderly statement he will confuse me.

"Mr. GEORGE. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator.

"Mr. WHITE. In making a statistical statement, without intending to be discourteous, I should prefer not to be interrupted.

"Mr. GEORGE. I beg pardon of the Senator. I will not interrupt him again.

"Mr. WHITE. We had not reached a higher figure than 2,600,000 in 1876–77; in 1891–92 the total receipts up to the 31st day of December were 4,783,000 bales—nearly 5,000,000 bales.

"Now, just make the comparison. In 1870–71 there were 1,642,000 bales; in 1891–92, 4,783,000—nearly 5,000,000 bales.

"The table referred to is as follows:

"A comparison with 20 years ago shows that the receipts at the ports for the four months ending December 31, 1891, were nearly three and a half times larger than for the corresponding period of 1871, and exceeded the receipts of 1871 by 3,391,000 bales. The cotton marketed during the first four months of the season of 1891–92 exceeded the entire crop produced in any season previous to that of 1878–79. It will also be observed that while the date of arrival at the ports of one-half of the season's receipts was in 1871 on January 17, the date of such arrival of recent years has been from November 23 to December 3, or about six or seven weeks earlier.

"Mr. WHITE. This table also shows the date of the receipt of one-half the crop. On it I find this instructive statement: One-half of the total crop in 1870–71 had arrived by January 17; in 1872–73, January 8; in 1873–74, January 1, and now and then one-half the crop arrived at various days in December. In 1888–89, by December 5 one-half of the total crop had arrived in the city of New Orleans and other ports. In the following year, 1890–91, one-half of the total crop had arrived by December 8. In 1891–92 the crop is estimated, because we can not make it complete, and it is estimated on the basis of receipts up to July 15.

"This shows the great pressure of receipts on the market; this shows how the cotton pours in now at an early day. Who is to buy this cotton? If all this cotton is precipitated upon the market and if it had required actual buyers to be then and there ready to take it up for immediate delivery, why would not the producers have been at the mercy of the consumers? How can I show that this system of futures produced the result of obviating the consequences of the glut by selling not only to those wanting for the present but also to those requiring it for the future or more remote periods? I think I can do so not only by reasoning but also by facts——

"Mr. BUTLER. May I interrupt the Senator a moment, because I want to get at the real facts, and I know he does?

"Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

"Mr. BUTLER. Is it not a fact that a great deal of the cotton which the Senator says goes into all the ports of the United States at certain dates has been already bought from the producers?

"Mr. WHITE. Yes, sir; of course.

"Mr. BUTLER. The farmer has sold it?

"Mr. WHITE. There is no doubt about that.

"Mr. BUTLER. So that when the argument is made that that has any effect upon the producer, I submit to the Senator if it were true, and if the statement which I have just made be true, his argument falls to the ground.

"Mr. WHITE. On the contrary, it confirms my argument. If the Senator understands—and I was coming to that as an entire answer to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. George]—it is just a confirmation of my argument 'strong as proofs of Holy Writ.' I will demonstrate it if the Senator will have a little patience.

"Mr. BUTLER. I am patient.

"Mr. WHITE. I say the effect of the arrival of all this cotton was necessarily to reduce the price. What else could it do? It always has done it, and does it with every product. I have shown the vast increase of the receipts for a given time in the modern period over the old period, resulting from modern facilities. Now I propose to make a comparison showing how much cotton fell before the 'future' period, at the time of large receipts of the crop, and how much it fell after the 'future' period. If I find that after the 'future' period the decline in cotton from the pressure of receipts was less than it was before the 'future' period, although the receipts have been largely increased, do I not make a demonstration that can not be answered? The fact that there was a decline in both periods is not gainsaid, the question is, In which period has there been the least decline?

"I hold in my hand an exhibit of the dates of the lowest prices for cotton in New York during each season from 1850–51 to 1860–61—that is, a period before futures. I do not take in the period from 1861–62 to 1870–71, because of the war and the fluctuations in gold. I stop at 1861, because the war intervened, and if I went into the subsequent period, before 1880, questions of gold value, of the rate of exchange, and the disturbance of currency resulting from the war would be factors in the problem. I desired to make an accurate compilation. The statement, as I have said, shows the lowest point to which cotton fell from 1850–51 to 1860–61, and from 1880–81 to 1890–91.

"I take these two periods, one before the system of 'futures' and one after. I want to show the fact that the incoming crop caused a glut in the market and thus produced a depression in price which was common to both periods. It does that, as I said just now, in every product, and that glut occurred at about the same time relatively. Here it is. In 1883–84 the lowest price was September 1, 1883; take 1853–54, and the lowest price was October 21, 1853; take 1884–85, and the lowest price was October 24, 1884; and the lowest price in 1854–55 was December 15, 1854; take 1885–86, and the lowest price was February 26, 1886; and the lowest price in 1855–56 was November 9, 1855.

"The depression, therefore, of both periods was as a rule coincident with largest receipts.

[1] Crop of 1851–52 proved to be the largest up to that date, and when it became apparent in August, 1851, that the new crop would be greatly in excess of any previous season prices could not be maintained.

[3] Crop of 1880–81 was largest grown up to that time. It exceeded previous crop 845,000 bales. Its vast size was not fully realized by the trade until May, 1881, when prices declined under the large stocks.

[4] Crop of 1882–83 exceeded all previous crops, and was about 1,500,000 bales greater than the preceding crop. This was not plainly seen until April, 1883, when prices declined to lowest of the season.

[5] Crop of 1890–91 exceeded the estimates made in November, 1890, by over 1,000,000 bales, and when it was seen that the crop of 1891–92 would also be large the prices gave way.

"Now, I want to call attention to another fact. I hold in my hand a statement of the total sales of futures in New York and New Orleans. Every future sale is registered in the New Orleans and New York Cotton Exchanges. The statement contains the future sales in the cities named of the cotton crop from 1880–81 to 1890–91, inclusive—the whole volume of those sales, the volume of the crop, and the average price of spot cotton for each season.

"The table referred to is as follows:

"Total sales of futures in New York and New Orleans, and cotton crops 1880–81 to 1890–91, inclusive.

"Those figures absolutely demonstrate that the greater the volume of 'future' sales to the volume of the crop, the higher the average price was for spot cotton. Here they are compiled from Cotton Facts, a book of unquestioned authority in the cotton trade, its author, Mr. Shepperson, being in no way a dealer in cotton, but devoting his time and talents to the literature of the subject. I wish to print the table in the RECORD as part of my remarks, and I call every Senator's attention to it, particularly those from cotton-growing States. This table shows that taking the volume of future sales and the volume of crops, that the average price of actual spot cotton was higher when the volume of 'futures' bore the largest proportion to the volume of the crop.

"What does this illustrate? It illustrates a very simple elementary proposition of political economy, as clear as two and two make four; that is, that prices are always higher in an active market; that the more trading there is, the more you get for the thing traded in. But when I showed this table to a distinguished Senator the other day, he said to me, 'That table does not prove anything; you have taken the average price of the year.' Now, the complaint is, and I want to call your attention to the fact, that the effect of this future dealing is not that it does not give as high an average price, but that it is a snare and a delusion to the farmer, and that it is a system of 'now you see it, and now you don't'; that when the glut comes the farmer's cotton is taken at a low price and sold at a high one after the farmer has already marketed.

"In other words, the claim is that the future dealer takes the hand of the farmer and leads him down into the depths of the Slough of Despond, and when he is led down and all his products taken away from him, then up goes the price and the speculators take the advantage. That, Mr. President, is absolutely and entirely false in every particular, as shown by my figures. Although it is untrue, it seems to be an opinion entertained by some, doubtless from error of fact.

"I now send to the desk to be read the testimony of Mr. D. W. McCune, who represents the National Farmers' Alliance.

"The PRESIDING OFFICER. The paper referred to will be read.

"The Secretary read as follows:

"Now, then, if the claim be just, which is made by the other side here, that this future selling regulates and controls and keeps up the market, and if it also be true that it can be made to have a temporary effect upon the market, then it follows if the pressure brought to bear at the beginning of the season temporarily reduces prices, then by means of this system they keep it down, and, as was ably shown by the gentleman from Minnesota who testified on our side, it had the effect of frightening away would-be investors, that it frightens away legitimate capital that would otherwise be induced to hold this crop when there was a superabundance, and if they could estimate on the volume of the crop and the volume of the demand and have some reason to believe it was an investment they would go into it, but owing to the manipulation of these futures it was so unsettled an operation that it horned off and kept the legitimate investors frightened away, and they would not take hold of it at all. Now, the same is true, and the point that I am gradually intending to show is this, that by this system they keep the mills horned off. They squeeze the cotton out of the producer and they keep the consumer horned off, so that he will not buy a pound of cotton until he is compelled to have it, and they keep legitimate capital frightened away so that they will not invest in it.

"Now, this system does not result from a little buyer who buys a few hundred bales and sells against it while his cotton is going to market; it is not from legitimate business men at all, but it is done by these combinations that manipulate, that squeeze the crop out of the hands of the producer and hold it through the season, and deal it out in driblets as they need it at a high price.

"Of course that is impossible; but I do believe that there is a certain part of it—that is, the part of it that is carried on a large scale at exactly the right time, when the crop commences to move, when the money is scarce, when the big buyers who have agents all over the country want to buy, that they can turn and fairly flood the leading future market—New York—with sales and offers to sell and depress the price very materially. I do not see how anyone can deny that. Now, I am taking, Mr. Chairman, a more conservative position perhaps than I believe, but I am taking it so as to be sure and just.

"Mr. WHITE. Before I meet that argument I desire to call attention to the difference between the Senator from Minnesota and this gentleman. The idea of the Senator from Minnesota seems to be that this future system prevents the enhancement of price, drives it down always and continuously. The idea of the gentleman whose statement has just been read is not that futures affect the price continuously, but that futures make the price low while the farmer is selling and then make it high when the speculator has gotten it. The two pretensions can not be both true. The Senator from Minnesota said yesterday that the effect of futures was such that when a man bought he could never sell with profit; he could not carry it; he could not get along. If a man be a buyer, then it seems to me he would buy at the season when these speculative buyers would be in the market—that is, buy when, if McCune be right, they were closing the farmer out cheap, and sell when the speculators were raising the price. That, it seems to me, would be the time to sell.

"If this is a system by which the cotton factors and all those representing the cotton planter put the crop down, when it is coming in buy it, and then raises the price and sell it high for themselves, it seems to me that is a kind of business that would just suit the miller. But the Senator from Minnesota says that that does not exist, although Mr. McCune says it does.

"To show that this view is not true I have made a comparison of prices of middling upland cotton in New York from 1880 to 1891 with the period from 1850 to 1861, the same standard of comparison being applied to both. I have taken the prices during both periods. Here they are during the time when the future system did not exist, from 1850 to 1861. Here they are when the future system did exist, from 1880 to 1891. I have taken those two sets of prices and made the calculation, and any man can make it.

"I will print the table as a part of my remarks. It shows the range of fluctuation in the two periods. What was it? Why, sir, the greater range of fluctuation was in the period from 1850 to 1861, before futures. In 1850–51 the fluctuation was 3 7/16 cents more than the range of fluctuation in the first year of the other period, 1880–81. In 1851–52 it was fifteen-sixteenths more than it was in 1881–82. In 1854–55 it was 2½ cents more than in 1884–85. In 1856–57 it was 2 5/16 cents more than it was in 1886–87. In 1857–58 it was 4 1/8 cents more than in 1887–88. There are but three years in the whole time in which the range of fluctuation in the period where futures obtained was greater than the range of fluctuation existing before the future period, and those three years are explained by the occurrence of disturbances which operated on the market entirely extraneous from the future question. I will annex explanations of these years by way of notes to the table.

[1] The crop of 1882–83 was the largest grown up to that time and exceeded the previous crop 1,300,000 bales. Prices yielded under the pressure of excessive receipts and stocks, thus causing wider fluctuation in prices.

[2] The season of 1883–84 opened under the depressing influence of the large stocks remaining in the United States and Liverpool from the crop of the previous season (an increase of about 300,000 bales), and the lowest prices were current from Sept. 1 to Jan. 1. The condition of the new crop planted in the spring of 1884 was unfavorable and this caused a sharp advance, thus widening the range of fluctuations. The crop proved to be 1,237,000 less than the previous one.

[3] In the first four months of the season of 1889–90 the receipts at the ports were the largest previously recorded reaching 4,270,000 bales, and exceeding the receipts of the corresponding period of the previous season by 556,000 bales. Under this pressure prices receded from 11⅛ cents on Sept. 1 to 10¼ cents on Nov. 4, this latter price being the lowest of the season.

[4] Prices for 1860–61 are to the end of April. The Civil War was a disturbing factor after that date and prices advanced before close of the season (Aug. 31) to 20 cents, making a range for the entire season of 10 cents.

"Reference to the seasons from 1866–67 to 1879–80 has been omitted because they covered what is known as the reconstruction period, as well as the time of suspension of specie payments. The fluctuations in cotton during these years were very great, and the fluctuations for the four years immediately preceding the establishment of the future-delivery business in New York were the largest of which there is any record. The fluctuations for middling cotton in New York in 1866–67 were 17 cents; in 1867–68, 17½ cents; in 1868–69, 10¾ cents; in 1869–70, 15¾ cents.

"But it may be said you have calculated in the range of fluctuation, and in order to arrive at the range of fluctuation you have taken the highest and lowest price during the whole year. There is no other way to do it.

"Mr. RANSOM. Will my friend allow me to interrupt him?

"Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

"Mr. RANSOM. Will the Senator give us the list of prices representing the period?

"Mr. WHITE. I have not the list of prices under my hand. The prices were higher before the future period.

"Mr. RANSOM. They were higher in the first period, were they not, the period when they had no futures, than in the period when they had the actual prices?

"Mr. WHITE. Of course, cotton was generally higher years ago than now, and so with everything else. There is no contention about that. There is no contention in this testimony here anywhere that the effect of the future system was to lower the price of cotton. I have read the statement of Mr. McCune in which he says that the effect of this system is not to affect the general price but to make cotton low when the farmer is selling and high when he is not selling.

"If the Senator will turn to the statistical abstract and make a comparison with of all our agricultural products which are not sold by future delivery he will find that shrinkage in value affects not only cotton but all other things in this country equally. To attribute general shrinkage in value (which has affected the whole country, affected things which are not covered by futures as well as things which are covered by futures), to the future system, when the record does not contain any such pretension, when the gentlemen whom they are combating for say it is simply to prevent them from being skinned by having the price put down and then put up, is asking me a question which, in my judgment, is entirely out of the record.

"Mr. RANSOM. My friend will pardon me. He invited the question, or I should not have asked it, by a remark which he just made to me in a low voice. He was speaking of the fluctuations, and I simply desired the information for myself and the Senate to show what the comparative prices were in the two representative periods he designated. I asked the Senator this simple question for information, and I hope he will not hold me responsible for what any other person has said are complaints of farmers and what are not.

"Mr. WHITE. I thought I had fully answered that question by what preceded, when I exhibited a table showing the volume of futures and the volume of crop, and the price, and showed that price depended absolutely upon the law of supply and demand and not upon the quantity of futures. I thought that question had been answered. I think now to my mind it is perfectly and absolutely and satisfactorily answered.

"Mr. RANSOM. I did not mean to be involved in this little colloquy between us, but I took the liberty of reading a part of the memorandum which the Senator had offered to show that the price of cotton was highest when the volume of futures was largest. He read the memorandum to the Senate to show that the price of cotton was highest when the volume of futures was largest. I read hastily the memorandum, and I have it now before my eye. I learned from the memorandum that the price of cotton was highest when the supply was smallest, and that the volume of futures had nothing to do with the price one way or the other, or at least it did not have the effect the Senator attributed to it. For instance——

"Mr. WHITE. I think the Senator ought not to interrupt me by making a speech at this time.

"Mr. RANSOM. All right; I will not.

"Mr. WHITE. I am engaged in a regular argument.

"Mr. RANSOM. I am very sorry——

"Mr. WHITE. I appreciate the Senator's regret at interrupting me, and I know how keenly he feels its force.

"Mr. RANSOM. While the Senator was in his seat and the Clerk was engaged in reading I asked him a little question and he said he wished I would ask him then so he could satisfy my mind. But my mind is not satisfied. I am an axious inquirer.

"Mr. WHITE. Evidently the Senator is very anxious.

"Mr. RANSOM. I am very sorry I disturbed my friend—extremely sorry. I did not mean to do so. It is a thing I am very rarely guilty of in the Senate.

"Mr. WHITE. The solicitude of the Senator from North Carolina I think would be fully answered if he had listened to what

I said when I produced this table. I never thought, and I made no such statement, that the price depended upon the volume of futures; but I said that the average price of the years since the existence of futures was largest in the proportion the quantity of futures bore to the crop. Of course that statement is a mathematical statement of the proposition that the law of supply and demand governed as the volume of futures depended upon the volume of crop. The Senator looks at the statement and says the statement demonstrates that the price depended upon supply and demand, and yet he asked me whether futures affected it. That is the answer I got.

"Mr. RANSOM. I did not understand the Senator, then.

"Mr. WHITE. In order to prevent any possible implication that this calculation of average embraced any very low period or very high period I have taken the price of middling cotton in New York from 1880–81 to 1890–91, month by month, and also during the period where no futures existed, month by month, from 1850–51 to 1860–61, and it shows, beyond a peradventure of a doubt, large and abnormal fluctuations, month by month, before futures. That is the very condition of things which is complained of here existed then, and it also shows the absence of such a condition of things during the future period.

"In other words, taking the prices month by month since the future period you find a small decline, a decline when the cotton begins to come in, but the rate of decline from that declining point throughout the year is less than was the rate of the fall in the period where no futures obtained. Taking the fluctuations, following them month by month since futures, you find the amount a fraction of a cent. Taking the fluctuations during the other period, it is not infrequent that they run up into large figures. I will take some of them as examples. Take 1884–85, December was 1.39 above September; 1854–55, December was 1 cent below September. In other words, despite the incoming of the crop in 1884–85, December prices had been driven up to 1.39 above what cotton opened at the commencement of the season, whilst in 1854–55 it had lowered in price 1 cent from the beginning of the season. Of course all these statements refer to the prices of actual cotton.

"Go to another year. Take 1885–86; October prices were 0.21 below September. In 1855–56 they were 1 cent below September. Take 1887–88; December was above November 0.35. In 1857–58 December was below November 2 cents. In other words, the very process which is complained of here occurred before the future period and not since the future period. Why was this? Because futures held the market with a steady hand; and although there was as a rule a decline, that decline has been small compared with the persistency of decline and the abnormal fluctuations which took place before futures came into existence. Now, if this is not a complete answer to the complaints, I do not know what could be. I submit this table to be printed as a part of my remarks:

"But there is other overwhelming evidence of the advantage which has resulted from future-delivery transactions. I affirm that the certain effect of futures has been to relieve the American producer from the grasp of the British spinner; has been to decrease the shipping margin between the New York and Liverpool markets, thus to that extent assisting the producer. I hold in my hand a comparative statement as to the values of middling and upland cotton in Liverpool and New York at the times of the lowest prices in New York in 1844, 1845, 1848, and the lowest price in 1892—making allowance for the difference in freight charges and the equivalent for the delay in time. I submit the table to be published in connection with my remarks:

"Comparative values of middling upland cotton in Liverpool and New York, at the times of lowest prices in New York in the years 1844, 1845, 1848, and 1892, making allowance for difference in freight charges and an average mail date equivalent of 35 days later than Liverpool date for the New York date. "This statement is remarkable in two respects:

"1. The enormous margin required in the past by the cotton merchant to protect himself against a decline, as compared with the present, when he can protect himself by selling for future delivery.

"2. The wide fluctuation in that margin, ranging from 1 3/4 cents to 2 5/8 cents, showing the lack of stability in values.

"It is also a well-known fact in the cotton trade that during the years of low prices cited cotton in the southern ports sold for less than 4 cents per pound, while now, with the same or lower range of prices current in Europe, it is bringing 6 cents per pound in the South.

"These figures show that on November 25, 1844, cotton in Liverpool was 3 7/8 pence. The freight was three-eighths pence. The Liverpool price, freight paid, was 3 1/2 pence, the equal in American money of 7 1/16 cents. The New York price was 5 5/16 cents, leaving a shipping margin of 1 3/4 cents. Now, go to February, 1848; the shipping margin is 1 3/4 cents; in April, 1848, it is 2 5/8 cents. These facts show that there existed between the Liverpool price of cotton at that time and the price of cotton here this large margin.

"What did that come from? It came from the fact that the American producer was at the mercy of the British spinner. His cotton came into the market. Our mills could not consume it. Here was this large surplus, representing at least 70 per cent of the crop, and the margin between America and Liverpool was an average of nearly 2 cents during those years.

"It may be said, 'But you have picked out years; you have selected 1844 and 1845 and 1848.' In order to meet that criticism I have had a table prepared, showing the shipping margin between Liverpool and New York in 1884–85, 1885–86, 1886–87, as the period of futures, down to 1890–91, with a comparison from 1854 to 1861—the nonfuture period.

"What does this comparison show? Let us see. The shipping margin in 1854–55 was 1.36 cents; in 1884–85 it was 1 cent; in 1855–56 it was 1.70 cents, while in 1885–86 it was 0.87 of a cent; in 1856–57 it was 1 1/4 cents against 0.81 of a cent in 1886–87; in 1857–58 it was 3.14 cents against one-half of a cent in 1887–88; in 1858–59 it was 1.92 cents against 1 1/4 cents in 1888–89; in 1859–60 it was 2.37 cents against 0.87 of a cent in 1889–90; in 1860–61 it was 1 3/4 cents against 0.93 of a cent in 1890–91. The average shipping margin of the seven years 1854 to 1861 was 1.96 cents per pound against an average of 0.89 of a cent for the seven years 1884 to 1891 of the futures period. I submit the table as a part of my remarks.

"Average shipping margin of the seven years 1884 to 1891 is 0.89 of a cent, and of the seven years 1854 to 1861, 1.96 cents per pound.

"What do these margins represent? This enormous average difference of over a cent a pound on the shipping margin during the years compared was caused by the fact that the cotton was held during the future period from pressing on the market by the effect of the future-delivery system, and therefore the glut produced nothing like the damaging effect that it did before that period. Here was a difference in shipping margin of over a cent. Whom was it made by? Of course it was made by the American producer. I resume the showing. If the average price depends upon the volume of crop without reference to futures, if the range of fluctuations during the period before futures was greater than in the periods of futures, if the fluctuations month by month before the future period were much greater than they are in the future period, if before the future period there was a large shipping margin between Liverpool and this country and that margin has diminished considerably—if these facts be true, I ask, Do not they absolutely confirm every proposition I have advanced, and do they not justify the universal consensus of the commercial world that dealings in futures helps to maintain the price, and therefore helps the producer?

"I come now to the question which my friend the distinguished Senator from Mississippi [Mr. George] put to me, and that involves the discussion of another portion of the bill. I say this bill is a delusion. I say under this bill contracts for future delivery can not be practically made until commercial men devise expedients and mechanism to frustrate the law and to overcome it, and why? The provision of the bill is that the planter may sell for future delivery either the crop he has made or the crop he proposes to make.

"Mr. GEORGE. Not proposed, but having in process.

"Mr. WHITE. Well, that does not change the logical proposition. I did not intend to state it with inaccuracy. I do not think that affects the situation. Let us see how the future business is conducted. In the first place, the question which the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Butler] asked me is perfectly true. A large part of the cotton which came early to market had probably been already sold before it got there. Sold how? Sold under the future system. The result of the future system has been to break up great buyers, and now all over the southern country everywhere, in every county, wherever cotton can be sold there is found a cotton buyer. A buyer for whom? A buyer for himself. The telegraph goes everywhere. The buyer is communicating with spinners. The spinners do not buy average lots of cotton. They buy particular kinds of cotton.

"There is no farmer who can sell a particular kind of cotton. A crop of cotton is diversified and composed of divers grades. The spinner wants a certain kind of cotton. The buyer telegraphs him, 'I will deliver you such a grade of cotton,' say a thousand bales or 500 bales. He has not got it. There is not one planter who could give it to him. He sells it on the faith of his credit and faith in his ability to obtain the grades required. The spinner believes in him; he knows him. That man, in order to protect himself from loss, the moment the spinner says he accepts, telegraphs to a market and buys futures as a hedge against his sale to the spinner. Cotton as sold for futures does not cover a particular grade, but an average lot of cotton.

"All that is below a certain grade is not admitted, and no lot of cotton is of a uniform grade. The moment he buys actual cotton he picks out of that lot of cotton the bales which correspond to what he has sold the spinner and disposes of futures to that extent. If compelled to buy another lot in order to complete his sale to the spinner, he sells more of his futures, and so he goes on and goes on until he has made up his lot to deliver to the spinner's order, and also disposes of his futures. I ask the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. George] where is the farmer who can do that? Where is the crop of the farmer that is going to supply that want and carry out such a transaction, which is a typical representation of the contract by which the producer's cotton passes to the consumer?

"Mr. GEORGE. Do you want an answer now?

"Mr. WHITE. Certainly; I should be very glad to have an answer.

"Mr. GEORGE. My answer is that the farmer can not do it and it can not be done under the form of the future contract adopted by the Cotton Exchange of New Orleans and the Cotton Exchange of New York, in both of which, whilst a man purchased the contracts for middling cotton, the seller may deliver him any kind of 7 full grades, 14 grades of cotton, and no manufacturer can ever supply himself under the future system as regulated in New Orleans and New York.

"Mr. WHITE. Let me answer the Senator. He evidently has not understood my position. Let me state an elementary commercial transaction: A is a spinner. B is a buyer. A, the spinner, says to B, the buyer, 'I want a thousand bales of long-staple cotton.' That is not a transaction made under the rules of any exchange. B, the buyer, says, 'Very well; I will deliver to you a thousand bales of long-staple cotton.' Here a contract has been engendered between A, the buyer, and B, the seller, to deliver a thousand bales of long-staple cotton. The seller has not got the cotton. He has got to get it. What does the spinner do in order to protect himself against loss? He has sold his goods. He knows the price he is going to have to pay for his cotton. He immediately proceeds to sell his goods for future delivery predicated upon the price at which he has agreed to pay for this cotton.

"What does the seller do? It is an ordinary contract under the rules of no exchange. Then that seller buys a lot of cotton for future delivery—deliverable to him two months ahead. He knows the price at which he has bought it and at which he has sold. His whole object in doing this is to get a lot of cotton so as to make up this lot which he has agreed to deliver. Covered by his two contracts, one of sale and the other of purchase, he looks about in the country, picks up the grade he has sold to the spinner, and as fast as he does this he sells out his futures. He may make 20 or 30 future transactions before completing this entire business. He could not do this without futures. How could he do it without suffering the risk of a decline? He insures himself against a decline. The spinner insures himself against an advance. Everybody in the transaction is insured.

"Mr. GEORGE. Except the planter.

"Mr. WHITE. The planter sells and gets his money.

"Mr. GEORGE. He sells on futures.

"Mr. WHITE. And I have shown he gets a more regular and a better and less fluctuating price than he got before the future system came in. That is the answer to it.

"Mr. President, it is one of my great objections to this bill that whilst it holds out a delusive hope that the planter can personally dispose of his cotton by futures, he practically can not by the restrictions created by this bill. The whole cotton country is changing its form. Cotton used to be made in large fields, with one owner and class labor. Now it is getting subdivided, and small holdings are coming in.

"I have here a statement taken from the preceding census—I could not get it from the last—showing that two-fifths of the farms in the southern country are now small holdings, and the system is increasing. Take my own State. We have an alluvial country with large planters and we have a hill country with small planters making a small number of bales each. Anybody who is familiar with cotton coming to the New Orleans market knows that in one invoice there will be 20, 30, 40, and 50 marks of cotton, all shipped by one, but belonging to different people. Small planters ship 1 and 2 bales at a time.

"The provisions of this bill allowing the sale of futures by the planter strikes a blow at the small farmer in the hills of my State, because whilst it gives them the privilege to sell futures under the laws of trade, they will not be able to avail themselves of it, whilst the man who makes a large crop and has a large assortment of cotton will find himself a favored person as compared with the small cotton producer. I stand for the small cotton producer; I stand for the farmer in my State who can not avail himself of the provisions of this bill because he does not make a lot of cotton which he could sell to advantage. The effect of this bill will be to allow the man only who has a large amount of cotton to sell it under the bill.

"Mr. President, the figures are so clear to my mind that I have searched them in vain for an answer. I think they are an absolute demonstration of the truth of the proposition which I hold, and until the figures are answered discussion of the theory of the situation is without avail. I say, with these figures staring me in the face, I dare not vote for this bill. The cotton crop from the southern country is now coming in. I saw in the Financial Chronicle the other day a statement that there are nearly a million bales on the continent. There are fifteen hundred thousand bales of cotton in Liverpool, and considerable spot cotton in this country, much probably held under future contracts and thus stretched over to the next year. The same day my attention was called by a newspaper to the fact of the arrival of the first bale of the new crop in New Orleans.

"I do not desire to prophesy evil as to the future. I know that no act of any legislative body can break up a great commercial system and render it nugatory. The laws of the world, the laws of commerce, are higher and stronger than any legislative system, and they adapt themselves with marvelous rapidity to any wrong restrictions which may be put upon them. Yet the process of adaptation is one of pain and one of travail and one of labor. Pass this bill, strike down this system in the presence of a large amount of spot cotton now in stock, and, with a new crop coming, my judgment is that this bill will cause confusion. By the disarrangement and the turmoil which it will probably make in the commercial methods of the whole world, the loss to the people of the cotton States will likely not be less than fifty or sixty million dollars for the ensuing year.

"Suppose we do pass the bill and strike the present business methods down, what good is it going to do? Is there not a cotton exchange where futures are dealt in at Liverpool? Are they not on the Continent of Europe? Did not just a few days ago a gentleman send me the charter of the organization of a great exchange in the city of Hamburg for the purpose of conducting this business of futures in cotton? Did he not send me a letter from a German merchant saying that they had noticed the intention to strike down the business here, and they hoped it would come to them?

"Is there not a cotton exchange at Alexandria, in Egypt? Does not both the Egyptian and the Indian crop move under the operation of laws of future delivery? Without that system I have shown that the disparity between the American price and English prices is large. With the system I have demonstrated that the disparity diminished until there has been an average gain to the producers of this country of over a cent a pound. I am unwilling by my vote here to transfer this vast sum of money out of the pockets of the people of the cotton States into the pockets of the people of Great Britain."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of amendment No. 139, the amendment relative to the Mississippi Choctaws.

Amendment 139: Page 70, line 6, insert the following:

"That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to make a per capita payment to the enrolled members of the Choctaw, Chickasaw, and Cherokee Tribes of Indians of Oklahoma entitled under existing law to share in the funds of their respective tribes, or to their lawful heirs, out of any moneys belonging to said tribes in the United States Treasury or deposited in any bank or held by any official under the jurisdiction of the Secretary of the Interior, said payment not to exceed, in the case of the Choctaws and Chickasaws, $100 per capita, and in the case of the Cherokees, not to exceed $15 per capita, and all said payments to be made under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided, That in cases where such enrolled members, or their heirs, are Indians who by reason of their degree of Indian blood belong to the restricted class, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, withhold such payments and use the same for the benefit of such restricted Indians: Provided, however, That the provisions of this act shall not be applicable to the members of the Choctaw Nation in Oklahoma until Congress shall have determined the rights of the Mississippi Choctaws whose names do not appear upon the approved rolls of the Choctaws in Oklahoma and until such of said Mississippi Choctaws as shall be found entitled to enrollment have been placed upon the rolls of citizenship of the Choctaw Nation."

Mr. KETTNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. UNDERWOOD, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12579, the Indian appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

PENSION BILLS.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the following pension bills, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference:

H. R. 13297. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

H. R. 13920. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

H. R. 14546. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

H. R. 15071. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

H. R. 15504. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the pension bills just mentioned, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. KEY of Ohio, Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma, and Mr. SELLS.

CORRECTION OF THE RECORD.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, on page 11416 of the RECORD, first column, halfway from the top, appears this:

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON] is recognized, and the gentleman from Georgia yields to the gentleman from New Jersey.

The words "Speaker pro tempore" should be stricken out and the word "Chairman" should be inserted. The Chair at that time was occupied by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER].

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. Is there not a practice in this House, well recognized, that any small mistake in the text can be corrected by submitting it to the gentlemen at the desk?

The SPEAKER. The Chair never heard of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know frequently that has been done by calling it to the attention of the clerks at the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair never heard of it being done, and thinks it would be an unfortunate practice if it were done. If that were done, who would fix the limit on what was material and what was immaterial in a change of the RECORD?

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication:

To the Speaker of the House of Representatives:

I respectfully request leave of absence until July 15, because of important matters, both public and private, requiring my attention.

FRANK PLUMLEY.

JULY 1, 1914.

By unanimous consent, the request was granted.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 4938. An act providing for the issuance of patents to transferees of town lots purchased from the United States at public sale in certain cases; and

H. R. 16192. An act to authorize the issuance of patent to Rachel E. Dangerfield Boast for the southeast quarter of section 21 and the northeast quarter of section 28, township 1 south, range 57 west of the sixth principal meridian.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 751. An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 5843. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 5575. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 5501. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and of wars other than the Civil War, and to certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 5446. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, July 2, 1914.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Rev. A. J. Dickinson, D. D., of Birmingham, Ala., offered the following prayer:

Most gracious God, we thank Thee for our country and for the civilization that we hold in trust for coming ages. We pray Thee that Thy blessing may attend this great land. Guide Thou this House in its deliberations and promote peace and happiness among men. Guide, we pray Thee, the Senators in their taking of counsel one with another. Lead us to right ends. May we live to Thy glory, and may prosperity attend the land. And unto Thee Thou King Eternal, invisible, Thou only wise God, be the glory forever and ever. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting certified copies of the findings of fact and conclusions filed by the court in the following causes:

Mrs. Vitha B. McClendon, administratrix of Joel McClendon, v. United States, and Jean Michael Vendenheim v. United States (S. Doc. No. 529).

The foregoing findings were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I see just two Senators on the other side of the Chamber. I raise the point of no quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names.

Ashurst	Dillingham	Norris	Sterling
Brady	Fletcher	Page	Sutherland
Brandegee	Gallinger	Perkins	Thomas
Bryan	Hughes	Ransdell	Thornton
Burleigh	Jones	Sheppard	Townsend
Burton	Kern	Shively	Walsh
Catron	Lane	Simmons	Warren
Chamberlain	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.	White
Culberson	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Mich.	Works
Cummins	Newlands	Smoot

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to state that my colleague, the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. WEST], is still detained in his room on account of the injury he received a few days ago. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I wish to transfer that pair for the day to the junior Senator from Georgia. So I will vote during the day, in view of the transfer of my pair, and I will not announce it again.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the absence of the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], who is unavoidably detained, and also the absence of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CHILTON], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], who are absent on business of the Senate, being in attendance upon a committee. This announcement may stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Thirty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. STONE and Mr. VARDAMAN answered to their names when called.

Mr. DU PONT entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-two Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Sergeant at Arms is instructed to request the attendance of absent Senators. He will execute the order of the Senate.

Mr. O'GORMAN, Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas, Mr. CLAPP, Mr. KENYON, Mr. THOMPSON, Mr. CHILTON, and Mr. OVERMAN entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] on account of illness in his family. He has a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

Mr. KERN. I move that the order directing the Sergeant at Arms to request the attendance of absent Senators be vacated.

The motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT OVER THE FOURTH OF JULY.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns on Friday evening, which is to-morrow evening, it be until Monday following, at 11 o'clock a. m.

The motion was agreed to.

MONUMENT TO PRESIDENT JOHN TYLER.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Some time since the Senate of the United States and the House passed a concurrent resolution calling upon the Chair to appoint five Senators to attend the unveiling ceremonies of the monument to be erected over the grave of the late President of the United States, John Tyler. In compliance with the provisions of the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res 22) the Chair appoints Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. CHILTON, Mr. GOFF, and Mr. GALLINGER members of the joint committee on the part of the Senate to represent the Congress of the United States.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. DU PONT. I present a resolution adopted at a meeting of the Delaware Bankers' Association held at Lewes, Del., on June 18, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation so far as it relates to interlocking directorates of banks. I ask that the resolution may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DELAWARE BANKERS' ASSOCIATION,
Wilmington, Del., June 25, 1914.

Hon. H. A. DU PONT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR DU PONT: At a meeting of the Delaware State Bankers' Association, held at Lewes on June 18 the bill (H. R. 15657) relating to interlocking directorates was fully discussed, and the following resolution unanimously adopted:

"Resolved, That we are strongly opposed to this bill for the reason that we believe it will deplete the numbers and impair the efficiency of our bank boards by robbing them of many of our strongest members at the very time their services are most needed—particularly is this true of smaller cities and towns—and impair confidence by tearing down and lowering the tone of bank managements, and in many ways interfere with the successful launching and operation of the Federal reserve act, which fact is of such importance as to overshadow any legislation which under other circumstances might seem advisable. We believe that the bankers and business men are more anxious even than our legislators to eliminate from the new system the abuses that have crept into the old, and that legislation is unnecessary to accomplish this end. At least, give them a chance. We believe that the welding together of a great mass of strong banks and strong men is essential to the success of the plan, and that it is unwise to legislate against the whole country for the purpose of correcting abuses existing in one locality."

Respectfully submitted.

WILLIAM WINDER LAIRD,
Wilmington Trust Co.,
JOHN RICHARDSON, Jr.,
National Bank of Delaware,
EZEKIEL COOPER,
Farmers' Bank of Wilmington,
Committee.

Mr. DU PONT presented a petition of Capital Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Dover, Del., favoring Government ownership of telegraph and telephone lines, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Delaware, remonstrating against the enactment of the so-called Clayton antitrust bill and alleging that certain provisions thereof are discriminatory in character, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have received many petitions in the form of telegrams, letters, and resolutions, favoring the adoption of the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States prohibiting the manufacture, sale, and transportation of intoxicating liquors. I present the petitions and ask that they be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions will be received and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have received a great many petitions, telegrams, and memorials in relation to the same subject, both for and against it. I have had great numbers of remonstrances signed by individuals and sent to me in packages, not exactly in the form of petitions, but I present them, together with several other petitions, and ask that they may be appropriately referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petitions and memorials will be received and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PERKINS presented a petition of the Medical Society of Riverside County, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for the retirement of superannuated civil-service employees, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of San Francisco, Cal., remonstrating against the enactment of the so-called antitrust legislation, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of San Francisco and Mountain View, in the State of California, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating beverages, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DILLINGHAM presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Vermont, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating beverages, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BURLEIGH presented petitions of sundry citizens of Maine, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating beverages, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented resolutions adopted by the Department of Maine, Grand Army of the Republic, assembled at Lewiston, Me., June 17, 1914, favoring the appointment of a soldier to the position of surveyor of the port at Portland, Me., which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WORKS presented telegrams in the nature of memorials from sundry citizens of California, remonstrating against the enactment of the so-called antitrust legislation, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented telegrams in the nature of petitions from sundry citizens of California, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating beverages, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WARREN presented a petition of sundry citizens of Cheyenne, Wyo., praying for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CATRON presented a memorial of Local Union No. 330, International Union of the United Brewery Workers, of Albuquerque, N. Mex., remonstrating against the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating beverages, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Oregon, remonstrating against national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Oregon, praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of Local Branch, United National Association of Post Office Clerks, of Portland, Oreg., remonstrating against the recent dismissal of certain employees of the Washington City post office, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a telegram in the nature of a memorial from A. D. Grant, of Keene, N. H., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for national prohibition, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ROOT presented petitions of sundry citizens of New York, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of New York, remonstrating against national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Pastors' Union of Lockport, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent the sale of opium and cocaine except for medicinal uses, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a resolution of the Board of Aldermen of New York City, N. Y., remonstrating against the proposed appropriation for renovating and repairing the present post-office building in New York City and favoring an appropriation for a new Federal building on some other and a more suitable location, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also presented a memorial of the Merchants' Association of New York City, N. Y., remonstrating against the provisions in the sundry civil appropriation bill and the pending antitrust bills exempting labor and farmers' organizations, etc., from prosecution under the antitrust laws, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Saranac Lake, Waterport, Odessa, Rochester, Buffalo, New York City, and Babylon, all in the State of New York, praying for the enactment of legislation to provide for Federal censorship of motion pictures, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia presented petitions of sundry citizens of Fairfax County, Newport News, and Staunton, all in the State of Virginia, urging Federal legislation for woman suffrage, which were ordered to lie on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13297) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. KEY of Ohio, Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma, and Mr. SELLS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13920) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. KEY of Ohio, Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma, and Mr. SELLS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14546) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. KEY of Ohio, Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma, and Mr. SELLS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15071) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. KEY of Ohio, Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma, and Mr. SELLS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15504) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. KEY of Ohio, Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma, and Mr. SELLS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 12914) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. ADAIR, and Mr. LANGHAM managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13542) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. ADAIR, and Mr. LANGHAM managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14234) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. ADAIR, and Mr. LANGHAM managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14738) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. ADAIR, and Mr. LANGHAM managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15692) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. ADAIR, and Mr. LANGHAM managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 4938. An act providing for the issuance of patents to transferees of town lots purchased from the United States at public sale in certain cases; and

H. R. 16192. An act to authorize the issuance of patent to Rachel E. Dangerfield Boast for the southeast quarter of section 21 and the northeast quarter of section 28, township 1 south, range 57 west, of the sixth principal meridian.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 2823) relating to the temporary filling of vacancies occurring in the offices of register and receiver of district land offices, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 636) thereon.

Mr. BRYAN, from the Committee on Claims, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 963) for the relief of Mrs. Andrew Riganopolous (Rept. No. 637); and

A bill (H. R. 9362) for the relief of R. B. Whitacre & Co. (Rept. No. 638).

Mr. SHIVELY, from the Committee on Pensions, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 4232) to establish in the War Department and in the Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as "the Army and Navy medal of honor honor roll," and for other purposes (Rept. No. 639); and

A bill (H. R. 16294) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war (Rept. No. 640).

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. DU PONT:

A bill (S. 6025) for the relief of the heirs of Lewis D. Brown; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. THOMAS:

A bill (S. 6026) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Selleck (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. O'GORMAN:

A bill (S. 6027) granting a pension to Ella M. Decker (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PERKINS:

A bill (S. 6028) to authorize the Commissioner of Navigation to cause the rebuilt bark Simla to be registered as a vessel of the United States (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. OVERMAN:

A bill (S. 6029) granting a pension to William M. Miller; and

A bill (S. 6030) granting a pension to Daniel W. Setzer; to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. O'GORMAN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,000 to pay the clerk of the Committee on Interoceanic Canals for extra services, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. SAULSBURY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

INDIAN LAWS AND TREATIES.

Mr. CLAPP submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 25), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound 3,000 copies of Senate Document No. 719, Sixty-second Congress, second session, entitled "Indian Affairs, Laws and Treaties," volume 3, 500 of which shall be for the use of the Senate, 1,500 for the use of the House of Representatives, 200 for the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, 50 for the House Committee on Indian Affairs, 50 for the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, 100 for the Department of the Interior, 50 for the compiler, and the remaining 550 shall be sold by the superintendent of documents.

THE FORESTRY SERVICE.

Mr. CATRON. I have here an article written by Mr. M. J. Nagel on the Forestry Service, which contains about two closely written pages. It pertains to a matter which, I think, would be of interest to the committee investigating this subject, and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the article was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Our system of agriculture is the most theoretic and impractical system in existence. It is the ruin of foresters and forest. It is the ruin of farmers and farms, wasting labor and money, creating floods and destruction, misleading the Government and public with theoretic statistics. The most important branch of our Government, the Forestry Service, is managed by theoretic professors and college boys. They are not acquainted with practical work.

The report of the special forestry committee of the conservation congress is misleading to the Government and public. The theoretic addresses are most impractical, and not a word is mentioned about how to correct the ignorance of practical forestry. If this system of forestry was advised by a man in France or Germany, he would be considered incompetent. This report says, on page 359, "It is estimated that seven and a half million acres of denuded forest land in the national forest require reforestation. Under the present plans 30,000 acres are reforested annually." I am sure not half of it has a stand. I can advise and teach the present force of men to reforest 500,000 acres annually at a much less expense than at the present time. The report says, "It will cost $12 per acre to reforest." I can teach and will take the contract to reforest every acre of denuded land, abandoned farms and fields in the United States for less than $5 per acre, and all will grow. By this method more than $50,000,000 can be saved in reforesting seven and a half million acres.

The report says nothing of how to prevent floods, regulate the flow of waters in the rivers; nothing of the useless and misleading publications by impractical professors and employees in agricultural colleges that are ruining the farm and forest. An investigation should be made by men who are experienced and competent in practical agriculture. I can prove what I say and can advise how to change our system of agriculture so as to better conditions.

If the Government, States, counties, townships, and farmers will work in harmony, we can reforest 2,000,000 acres each year, as can be demonstrated.

Statements about German forest and forester are false, erroneous, and misleading; such publications are to draw more money from the Public Treasury.

All abandoned farms and fields should be reforested, and dams should be built in all ravines and creeks to store the water and prevent the silt from washing into the rivers. This will regulate rivers and floods. No estimation can be made at the present time as to how much water could be stored for the benefit of farm and forest.

If the money appropriated by the Smith-Lever bill would be spent judiciously by practical experienced men of agriculture, men who know the conditions of farms and farmers and do know how to teach farmers, that bill would be a blessing and would help to double the crop of agriculture; but, as proposed, to send inexperienced college boys to instruct farmers, it will do very little good and will work harm.

The most important and vital question at the present time is how to improve our farms and keep the rural population on the farm. The Roman Empire died of excess of urbanism. The Roman Empire, so strong and well-cultured in art and literature, erred in neglecting agriculture. To satisfy the plebeian in the cities they built magnificent theaters, temples, and monuments that we admire to-day but neglected agriculture, and it was ruined. The people have pressed to the populous centers until the cities are overrun with beggars, loafers, and tramps. The newly rich families only seek to spend their money so as to show their wealth and compete with older families in luxuries, causing the poorer class to envy them and curse the situation. The cities in competing with one another advertise the schools and the pleasures they have in the cities and attract the attention of the rural population. The high cost of living is unnecessary. The present condition of the United States is very similar to the condition of the Roman Empire in the second and third centuries. Our theoretic system of agriculture will be our ruin. This impractical system is ruining farm and forest. We have to change our system of agriculture to increase the rural population, improve farms and farming, and we soon will reduce the high cost of living. Impractical education is reducing the rural population and increasing the consumers.

The rural population can keep up prosperity of the land. The farmer has to provide for all. Ruin the farm and the country is ruined. Urbanism will be our ruin. The industries of the large cities will increase luxuries and wants. The increase of production does not keep pace with the increase of population. Our theoretical professors, without practical knowledge and experience, can not remedy this lamentable situation. The impractical education in our agricultural colleges is driving the children from the farm to the cities, thereby helping to ruin farm and forest. If we would model our system of agriculture after the English, German, and Danish systems, we could double our farm products and reforest each State in the Union with less expense than we have now.

The foresters at the James Reserve planted 6 acres with 10,000 seedlings. Mr. Mahoon planted at the Zuni Reserve 1,750 seedlings on 1¾ acres. Messrs. Peck, Hayes, Philips, and Myers hired Indians to plant 5,000 seedlings on 2½ acres The supervisor in Colorado says, in his report, we planted in three years 54 acres and in one of the years 27,000 pine seedlings and 3,200 Douglas fir seedlings on 15 acres. Colorado has more than 6,000,000 acres to go over.

With such reforesting it will take 10,000 years to get over the ground and will cost twenty times as much as a practical forester would spend.

The Bureau of Forestry published how much seed was sown, how many seedlings were planted, but did not publish how many seeds or seedlings grew.

The Bureau of Forestry published how many seedlings grew in the nurseries, but did not publish how much it cost to raise these tree seedlings. It can easily be demonstrated that they can be raised for one-tenth of the present cost.

The present system is responsible for reducing many poor people almost to the point of starvation by depriving them of the privilege of collecting dead wood and seeds, the collection of which is a benefit to the individual and the forest and if not collected is a determent to the forest.

This forest system was partly responsible for the forest fires.

This forest system has directly and indirectly wasted money and forest.

This forest system had impractical college boys to start nurseries, who did not know how to start nurseries on different elevations and kinds of soil. Most of this money has been wasted if not all. This forest system sent inexperienced college boys to estimate the standing timber who had no practical knowledge whatever, so that the boys had a picnic at Government expense and made no valuable report. Publications of last year stated that 530 pounds of pine seed were sown on 45 acres. So much seed, properly planted, would plant 6,000 acres. Publications say that the foresters will sow 5,500 pounds of seed on 700 acres. Properly planted, this would plant 25,000 acres. All such seeding is now feeding rats, mice, and squirrels. The present system is not teaching forestry, but is fostering a lot of useless employees who are ignorant of the business. Three thousand foresters and rangers are worse than idle, doing very little useful work, but harassing and tyrranizing farmers, miners, small sheep and cattle owners, making false reports, depriving poor citizens from collecting dry wood, cutting grass, collecting seeds, a benefit to the citizen and grave danger for fire if left in the forest. Foresters and rangers under this present system are a detriment rather than a benefit to the forest. The few acres seeded and planted are in such a condition that a real forester would be ashamed to mention it. Many men are driven to desperation to set fire to the forest. No practical work is done for future benefit. Nine-tenths of the forestry bulletins are useless. They are of no practical use to the farmer and the average citizen can not comprehend them. The publications of the forester say we have planted 20 acres with seedlings with 15 men in 20 days, and they expect half of those seedlings to grow; one practical forester can plant more than 20 acres in 20 days and all should grow. Forest Bulletin 98 says, on page 36, the foresters sow on 1 acre 700,000 seeds of the Engleman spruce and a practical forester needs only 2,000 seeds; they sow also 360,000 seeds of the lodgepole pine and 260,000 seeds of the Douglas spruce and only 2,000 seeds are needed to the acre. This is all the work of the impractical forester. At the present rate of wasting and selling available timber and no reforesting done in 10 years we will have no available timber to sell in the West.

Foresters and rangers make reports to suit themselves. No investigations of forest are made and no man is there who can make investigation and make a correct report. If a farmer or miner complains, he will never get a just hearing and no citizen can appeal, so he has to suffer. There were reported 3,138 forest fires in 1912; 2,164 were extinguished by the rangers. Like all reports of foresters and rangers it is impossible to believe that half of that number of fires started, except the rangers themselves set fire to the forest to make a good report to headquarters. If proper care was taken of the eastern and southern forestry, it would add thousands of millions of dollars to the national wealth. Every county in the United States should have a supervisor to see that all the waste and worn-out land should be reforested. The agricultural colleges in the States should teach forestry and agriculture. Too much theory and too little practical teaching is taught.

Every farm of 160 acres has from 5 to 100 acres of land idle that should be used for reforesting The State authorities should require that all this land should be reforested. It would add to the comfort of the farmer and his cattle and be a beneficial ornament. The present forest system is inefficient; the Agricultural Department needs practical men to direct the work. A forester should live in the forest, not 50 miles to 200 miles from the base of operations. A district forester should, every morning, direct his foresters, apprentices, and rangers to do certain useful work, especially to make fire guards and reforest, and not trouble miners and farmers. The district forester should be present while planting seedlings and not leave it to inexperienced boys and laborers.

Our president said, in his address in Kansas City, September 25, 1912, Mr. Holmes of the Agriculture Department says we can raise a bushel of wheat at the expense of 3½ cents and a bushel of corn at 10½ cents. The December crop report says it cost at the average 66 cents to raise a bushel of wheat, and in Iowa 31 cents; in Maine 72 cents to raise a bushel of corn; both are agricultural reports. The president said that in England and Germany they raise twice as much grain to the acre on land cultivated for 100 years as we do on new land. If we would model our agricultural system after the English, German, and Danish agricultural systems, we would soon raise twice as much to the acre. We have to combine the best methods of the three countries in our agricultural system to improve our farm and farmers. The publications say to use commercial fertilizers is a detriment to most farmers, without knowing how to use it for the different kinds of soil or how to use it for the different kinds of crops. The different kinds of soils and crops need different fertilizers, and if the soil is not enriched with stable or green manure the soil is impoverished with commercial fertilizers. Our theoretic college professors can not teach the plain farmers practical farming he himself does not know. Only an intelligent farmer can teach the plain farmers, and each county should have a few farmers taught how to analyze the soil and how to use the different fertilizers on different crops—farmers learn from the farmers. Our president said we have spent $100,000,000 on commercial fertilizer. More than half was wasted by ignorance, not knowing how to use it. I learn a league is formed to ask $500,000 of Congress to experiment improving and fertilizing the soil. It can be demonstrated in two hours how to improve and fertilize the soil most practically. The speakers in our conservation congress are lamenting the impoverishing of the soil of the farms. That we raise every year less grain is a calamity for the Nation, but nobody gives any practical remedy. A practical agricultural system would remedy it. The forest association is lamenting the depleting of the forest. Theoretic addresses never give a remedy; only a practical forest system will be a remedy.

The agricultural college can not teach practical farming on 10 or 100 acres in one part of the State; neither forestry on 100 or 1,000 acres. It takes a forest to teach practical forestry by a practical forester. If the money uselessly spent at agricultural colleges and experiment stations was used to help assist poor families in the cities to start on a farm, great benefit and improvements would be the result, as many a farmer boy and girl, by the wrong, theoretic education, has left the farm for the city and to-day thousands would go to the farm if they had the means to start again. This top-heavy education of the college is a detriment and ruin to our children.

M. J. NAGEL.

STATE REGULATION OF PUBLIC UTILITIES.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have here an article published in the May number of the Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, by Hon. John M. Eshleman, president of the Railroad Commission of the State of California, entitled "Should the public utilities commission have power to control the issuance of securities?" It is one of the strongest arguments that I have yet seen or heard in favor of the control of the issuance of securities of corporations by railroad commissions; and as that is a live issue before the Senate at the present time, I ask that the article may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The article referred to is as follows:

SHOULD THE PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION HAVE POWER TO CONTROL THE ISSUANCE OF SECURITIES?

[By John M. Eshleman, president Railroad Commission of the State of California.]

Inasmuch as this volume is devoted to a discussion of State regulation of public utilities, and as I am not informed whether the issue to be discussed is the propriety of regulation of utilities at all, or, admitting the propriety of such regulation, whether to State or to municipal authorities should be accorded the right of regulation, I am somewhat at a loss how to attack the subject upon which I have been requested to contribute a paper. I shall assume, however, that it is desired that I discuss the issue whether the control of the issuance of securities should be assumed at all by whatever regulatory authority to which the work of regulation is intrusted.

The propriety of the regulation of securities of utilities, with particular reference to railroads, was the subject of a report to the National Association of Railway Commissioners at its annual session in Washington, October 28 to 31, 1913, by the committee on railway capitalization. The report of this committee advocating regulation of securities of railroads by the Interstate Commerce Commission was adopted, but not without considerable opposition. It was not there urged, however, by anyone that there should not be some form of regulation, the principal question at issue being whether regulation should be by a method of control or a method of publicity. The report of the committee, which was adopted, recommended regulation by control as opposed to regulation by publicity. This report, with the discussion thereon, is found in the Proceedings of the Twenty-ninth Annual Convention of the National Association of Railway Commissioners, pages 114 to 223 and 238 to 257.

One of the first States which has attempted comprehensive regulation of the securities of utilities is Wisconsin. The fiscal affairs of utilities of that State, including railroads, have been under the jurisdiction of the Wisconsin Railroad Commission for several years. Regardless of that fact, the present chairman of the railroad commission of that State, a former chairman of that commission, now a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the United States Senator who has heretofore most strongly urged the necessity of the regulation of securities of utilities, are now apparently inclined to the belief that the regulation there prevailing is improper. Furthermore, the Railroad Securities Commission appointed by President Taft in 1910, and consisting of Arthur T. Hadley, president of Yale University, chairman, Frederick N. Judson, Frederick Straus, Walter L. Fisher, and B. H. Meyer, transmitted a report to the President wherein, regardless of protestations on the part of members of this committee to the contrary, in my mind, is advocated a merely passive policy with reference to railroad securities and not at all a definite positive program looking to the correction of evils found by this commission to exist or the prevention of the recurrence of such evils in the future. This demands that cogent reasons be given by one who advocates active regulation of securities of utilities. In the face of these eminent authorities and with what I believe to be a careful consideration of every argument adduced by them, I state definitely my belief, first, that regulation of the securities of utilities is necessary, and, second, that such regulation must take the form of control by the public authority and is not satisfied by publicity alone. In the limit of this paper it will be impossible, however, for me to discuss in detail the merits of regulation by control as opposed to regulation by publicity. My views on that question are fully set forth in the report above referred to.

The opponents of regulation of the securities of utilities by control present two important objections to such regulation: First, they urge that the regulation of rates and service of utilities does not require the regulation of the securities of such utilities; and, second, the regulation of the securities of utilities brings about a guaranty by the Government, if not in law at least in morals: (a) Directly of the securities approved, and (b) indirectly of the securities already outstanding and issued prior to control by governmental authority.

Some of those presenting these objections urge that they are insurmountable, and that no regulation whatsoever should be attempted. Others contend that they merely present difficulties inherent in the present scheme of regulation which is applied in Wisconsin, New York, California, and other States. Those who urge that some method other than the method of control applying in the States named should be applied generally favor a system of publicity, and some there are who suggest that we should adopt a method similar to that imposed by the English companies act.

I join issue on each one of the objections raised. I am of the opinion that not one of them is valid against the system of regulation which is growing up in the various States following the lead of Wisconsin, wherein the affirmative approval of the governmental authority is required before stocks and bonds may be issued, and I shall discuss these objections in the order named to the extent that is possible in a paper such as this.

FIRST, CAN ADEQUATE REGULATION OF RATES AND SERVICE OF UTILITIES BE BROUGHT ABOUT WITHOUT REGULATION OF STOCKS AND BONDS?

On this question Chairman Roemer, of the Wisconsin commission, in a letter to the National Civic Federation, says:

"As I view the matter, the regulation of the issues of corporate securities is and must be for the benefit of the investors. It has no bearing independent of statutory provision upon the question of rates."

Mr. B. H. Meyer, formerly of the Wisconsin commission, now of the Interstate Commerce Commission, in discussing this matter before the National Association of Railway Commissioners in October last, said:

"With power to establish the value of the public utilities on the one hand and adequate power to regulate rates and service on the other, I take it that the question of stocks and bonds is largely a question of public morals."

The Railroad Securities Commission has this to say on this point in its fifth recommendation:

"If we were compelled to assume that rates are to be materially influenced, either in their making by the railroads or in their regulation by the Government, by the amount and face value of the stocks and bonds outstanding, it seems to your commission impossible to escape the conclusion that these securities should be issued only under governmental regulation. Your commission, however, believes that the amount and face value of outstanding securities have only an indirect effect upon the actual making of rates, and that they should have little, if any, weight in their regulation."

Senator LA FOLLETTE, of Wisconsin, in the issue of La Follette's Weekly of January 31, 1914, editorially urges that regulation of the securities of railroads is not necessary to the regulation of rates. In this connection he says:

"The fair value of the property is the true basis. The public need not concern itself with all the villainies of overcapitalization which abound in the history of every railroad in the country."

It may be well at this point to state that it is generally conceded that there is no difference in principle between the regulation of securities of railroads and those of other utilities, and herein I shall make no distinction between the several classes of utilities in this regard.

Eliminating any consideration of the investor, who, according to some of these eminent gentlemen, deserves no protection, it appears that two fundamental fallacies exist in their reasoning: First, that they have forgotten apparently that the amount of the rate is not all that must be considered, but the character of the service as well. While the rate may remain the same, if the service deteriorates or the character of the commodity furnished by the utility is impaired, plainly the patron of such utility is paying a higher rate, when we have regard to what he is getting for his outlay. Second, they have neglected to inform themselves that, although legally they are correct and legally the financial condition of a utility need not be taken into consideration in fixing rates and requiring service, yet actually such financial condition can not be overlooked because it has always had and does now have a material effect on the rates and service of utilities.

That this is true in concrete cases is easily demonstrated. That it always will and must be the rule I believe is equally clear. Utilities, as other enterprises, are initiated, managed, and owned by men. Men, in the main at least, prefer their own advantage. Thus the natural inclination of those controlling the destiny of any public utility leads them, when a choice must be made between public service and private advantage, to choose private advantage. Gain has been, is now, and always will be the prime motive of those engaged in public utility as well as any other business, and the service of the public is only secondary thereto. Therefore we may naturally expect to find that procedure followed, in the absence of restraint, which is most likely to result in profits to those in control. In practice, those who initiate a public-utility enterprise attempt to get as much out of it as is possible and put as little as possible in, with the result that the enterprise starts with the maximum burden that can be imposed and not kill it in the beginning. Every dollar that is taken out, or rather withheld, by construction contracts, watered stock, or discount on bonds represents what is in effect a liability, and a liability which, if it take the form of a debt as a bond or a note, must be paid, and a liability which, if it represent water in stock, will be paid if those in charge of the property can possibly bring about such result. The design of every public-utility manager is, of course, to pay his bond interest and then to bring his stock to par or better. These results are sought regardless of the amounts which have been received by the utility for such bonds and stock. If obligations which netted the utility less than par are carried and paid off in the end, and if stock which has been sold for less than par ever goes to par, the extra funds to bring this about must come from the rates. When we view the history of utilities and see that in numerous cases the results here referred to have come about, we must conclude that, in such cases at least, capitalization has affected the rates; for such rates have been unquestionably higher by that amount than is necessary to pay the expense of doing the business and a reasonable return on the value of the property devoted to the public use. These men who have long studied this question, however, say that capitalization need not affect rates. We answer that historically it has done so, and we have no reason to believe that in the future it will not have a like effect. If we should put a certain amount of meal into a bag and go away and subsequently, on inspecting the bag, find more meal in it, we would probably be pardoned if we should conclude that the additional meal came from somewhere; and if only one person had had an opportunity to make the addition, we probably would not be far wrong in concluding that this individual was responsible. And when in the case of a utility certain funds, ascertainable in amount, go in from proceeds of stocks and bonds, and thereafter we find there are funds much in excess of these amounts in the utility and the only source from which money has been acquired in the interim has been the rates, we must here again be pardoned for believing the extra funds came from these rates. Of course, this reasoning overlooks appreciation in lands and kindred property, but the valuation theory, urged as a solution of our rate troubles by the very men who say capitalization does not affect rates, presents this same complication. As a matter of fact, however, practically the only public utility presenting the unearned-increment problem as a substantial factor is the railroad. And can anyone urge that the tremendous fortunes made from railroads by the Harrimans, the Goulds, the Hills, and others, not one of which resulted from dividends, but from sale or retention of securities with small, if any, return to the railroad corporation itself, can be accounted for on the theory that the lands owned by these railroads increased in value to such an extent? It is well known that much of the property now in use by public utilities has been purchased and is being purchased from funds realized from rates. Consequently such rates have been higher than necessary, and however able public authority is to make rates independent of and unaffected by capitalization, it has not yet done so.

Because, then, of a perfectly natural inclination of mankind, the tendency is to put the minimum into the utility at the beginning and take the maximum out in the form of stocks and bonds. The same natural inclination leads men in control to take the maximum out thereafter in rates in order to restore the margin between the minimum contributed in funds and the maximum retained in securities. It is idle to say that these inclinations working on the one hand to get the maximum out of the utility and on the other to get the maximum out of the public have no effect. Every one knows they have had an effect in the past and that, in the absence of restraint, they will have a like effect in the future.

It is very evident that corporations have but three sources from which to secure funds: Stock, borrowed money, and earnings. With stock all, or mostly all, out at the beginning, with bonds issued to an approximation of the value of the property and with consequent inability to sell more, there is left but the rates from which to secure funds. When we meet a situation such as this it always is necessary to secure more from the rates in order to get extensions or betterments, or else not have such extensions and betterments. We have to-day an exhibition of the result of impaired credit consequent upon the inability of the roads to sell more bonds under their present earning capacity, when we see the eastern roads applying to increase all of their rates in order that, with the higher earning power, additional money may be secured. When, as I have said, there is no possibility of getting money from the sale of stocks or bonds—the two main sources of revenue for the utility corporation—such corporation can not go forward unless it is enabled to do so from funds realized from its only remaining source of revenue, its rates. Thus by permitting those controlling the corporation without restraint to indulge their natural inclination and exhaust the two main sources from which revenue may be secured, as is always their tendency, we inevitably bring about a condition wherein through financial inability the utility can not accord to its patrons those rates and that service to which they are entitled.

Thus, if no regulation is afforded, we will inevitably have utilities tending toward overcapitalization. This tendency will result either in higher rates, as it has in the past, or in poorer service, for you will have utility managers by natural inclination and often of necessity, when proper rates are imposed, curtailing expenses, restricting service, and in every way possible tending toward the minimum service that can be rendered. Free to work their own will in their financial affairs and always tending, if not prevented, to overcapitalize and then held down to the minimum basis for earning through regulation of rates, utilities inevitably get into bad financial condition. This condition could be, at least, measurably prevented by putting restraint upon these natural inclinations by proper regulation of securities. I am prepared to cite examples from my own experience in regulation where needed extensions have not been made, added service denied, and exorbitant rates maintained, because of the necessity of the managers of such utilities to pay interest upon debts which too nearly approximated or were in excess of the value of the property devoted to the public use. It would seem to be clear that it is better, both in the interest of efficiency of utility operation and of economy in governmental machinery, to prevent such a condition being brought about, rather than wait until it is produced and then seek to force a utility to give the service at the rates that are justified but beyond its financial ability to give, with the result that a long contest ensues during which service is impaired, investors defrauded, and confidence shaken with no better condition after such contest than could have been brought about initially by proper regulation by the commission.

It appears, then, that failure to regulate securities permits bad financial conditions to grow up which impair the financial ability of the utility, and hence its service, until such bad financial conditions are remedied; and the remedy then unsettles conditions and defrauds investors, while less effort by way of prevention would maintain the financial ability and bring about conditions naturally that now must be forced through receivers, courts, and reorganization. In short, those who urge that the financial affairs of utilities should be let alone and that only rates should be regulated fail to see that they merely attempt to cure a condition which they admit is bad rather than try to prevent it. They further overlook the fact that, if it is right to cure it, prevention is certainly justified. If, as we contend, overcapitalization naturally occurs in the absence of restraint and that overcapitalization is the usual condition which we meet, it readily appears that its cure must always be made at the expense of some one, as the money diverted through overcapitalization must be supplied from some source. Rarely will it be possible by human ingenuity to prevent its being supplied, partly, at least, from the rates; and what does not come from that source comes from the purchaser of securities. Prevention, on the contrary, through regulation, if effectively applied before it is too late, brings about readily the desired result, and the imposition of reasonable rates and the requirement for efficient service are secured without injustice to any innocent party and without the long period of bad service always occurring when a utility loses its financial ability to do that which it is legally obligated to do.

Therefore we conclude that the first objection, that regulation of rates and service does not require regulation of securities, is not well founded. It remains to consider the second objection, which is that—

GOVERNMENTAL CONTROL OF STOCKS AND BONDS MORALLY, AT LEAST, COMMITS GOVERNMENTAL AUTHORITY TO RECOGNIZE STOCKS AND BONDS WHEN FINDING VALUE FOR RATE-FIXING PURPOSES.

Every argument I have yet met in support of this contention indulges, indirectly at least, the presumption that the governmental authority acting is not equal to the job. Now, I quite readily admit, in the language of Dr. Milo R. Maltbie, of New York, that "I would prefer to have no regulation to that which is not effective, for a form of regulation without substance is worse than no regulation." What I have to say has reference solely to competent and effective regulation.

Those empowered to regulate should, of course, be advised as to the legal effect of their acts. They should know, as Mr. Roemer, of Wisconsin points out, that the contract between stockholders is protected against impairment by the Federal Constitution and that "each share of any class is entitled to all the privileges of every other share of the same class." Likewise bonds issued under the same trust deed stand on the same footing, regardless of when issued. And knowing these legal principles, they should avoid taking any step with reference to present issues of either stocks or bonds out of issues authorized and partly out without knowing the value behind those already issued. If, in the case of a corporation a part of whose securities have been issued before regulation was applied, it is found that overcapitalization exists, no new issue should be permitted which will be on a parity with what is already out, thereby becoming diluted by the water already in the enterprise. Under a proper stock and bond law the burden is upon the utility to satisfy the commission that the application is justified, and unless those in control of the corporation will take such corporate steps as are necessary to overcome the difficulty presented by equal participation, then no securities should be permitted. The financing by preferred stock, which is now being done in various States, is an answer made by utility corporations themselves to the argument here considered, and an answer that will always be made if utilities commissions are firm and have an understanding of their work. The California commission, for example, has laid down the rule, and adheres to it strictly, that any utility in a financial condition which the commission would not approve if presented originally to it, but, nevertheless, not actually insolvent or in such a bad way that its condition is doubtful, may take any financial step which leaves it in a better financial state. It is allowed to progress toward a satisfactory financial condition, but it must not go backward. Its option is to advance or issue no new securities of any sort. If an agency is actually, although not legally, insolvent by having debts in excess of its asssets, it must reorganize before it can issue more securities. By this rule the burden is placed, as it should be, upon the utility to present a satisfactory plan of finance; and if any of the legal difficulties suggested by Mr. Roemer are still present, the application is not approved. No utilities commission need, nor ever should, permit the issuance of stocks or bonds in any case where such permission will serve, by reason of participation, to imply a legal sanction of outstanding issues where such outstanding issues have not the proper property values behind them. In the case of doubt as to the property values behind the securities, the commission can quite properly withhold its approval until the applicant utility shall have presented satisfactory evidence upon which the commission can act. With all due respect to the opinion of the eminent Senator from Wisconsin, as voiced in his present opposition to the railroad securities bill pending before Congress, I am plainly of the opinion that he has overlooked the distinction between a rate case, where the burden is upon the public, and a securities case, where the burden is upon the utility. In the former some one wants something against the utility. In the latter the utility wants something, and to get it it must disclose and not suppress evidence. Overlooking this distinction, the Senator advises us, as regards railroads, to wait until the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have finished its labors in valuing railroad properties, and then, by rates having proper relation to such value, to get rid of the water then found to exist in the railroads by rendering them unable to pay their obligations which shall have been incurred in the meantime in excess of what should have been incurred. And it is also evident that it is thought that water now exists and that more water will go in in the future, while the valuation is being made, for plainly if it were expected that nothing but the proper financing would take place there could be no objection to, although, of course, no need for, governmental action on the ground that such action would serve to recognize improper financing. In short, the very argument that no governmental restraint should be imposed, on the ground that improper securities might thereby be validated, presupposes, of course, the fact of the issuance of such improper securities in the case. We are justified in assuming that the lack of restraint hereafter pending the final completion of the stupendous work of valuation of railroads, as required by Congress, will leave the roads open to do more of this very thing and further to impair the financial standing of these properties.

And this is the advice of those who urge that we must not regulate securities, because by so doing we incur a moral obligation with reference to such securities. Too many securities have been issued in the past under no regulation. Too many will be issued in the future we know. Yet in the face of this condition we should do nothing, because our hands may be soiled also with guilt. Having the power to prevent and not preventing a crime, it occurs to me, imposes some kind of moral obligation, which possibly may be greater than that which attaches after an unsuccessful attempt to prevent such crime. Knowing that securities are being and have been issued and sold that should not be issued and sold, nevertheless let us permit it until in our good time we get ready to contract the earning power of the utilities through rates so they may no longer pay their obligations with consequent loss to investors and impairment of financial ability of the corporations properly to serve the public, all because of our fear of incurring a moral obligation by attempting to do something. Admitting we incur no legal obligation by regulation, as I think I have shown is the case when we ought to escape such legal obligation, there is not one cogent reason advanced which leads me to believe that we are not morally more bound by failure to regulate than by regulation. The corporation is the creature of the State. Every step which may be taken in issuing stock or authorizing bonded indebtedness must be taken in compliance with some statute. The State now regulates utility corporations in this regard as it does all corporations, and by so doing empowers such corporations to take advantage of the public and empowers the officers of such corporations to take advantage of the corporations themselves to the hurt of such corporations and the public. Add to this the fact that Government knows not only that these things may be done, but also that they have been and are being and will be done, and to my mind we have a pretty large moral obligation in itself and one that is minimized rather than accentuated by taking additional steps to prevent abuses possible under the authority already conferred. To relieve ourselves of any moral obligation at all we must dispense with the corporation itself. But having created the corporation with power of oppression under present economic conditions, can we excuse ourselves, if it oppresses, by the plea that by an attempt to prevent such oppression we become particeps criminis? Being entirely responsible for every power of this fictitious person wherein it issues securities, we can not avoid responsibility for what it accomplishes by means of such powers.

As palpably erroneous is the contention that by approving securities we will mislead investors. The very able chairman of the Wisconsin commission in a letter to the National Civic Federation states that by authorizing the issuance of securities and directing their investment the governmental authority involved "is likely to cause certain investors who purchase such securities as an investment without knowing anything of the management of the corporation or the possibilities of the enterprise to rely upon the State's sanction of the issues. These are the investors who need protection and who, I am apprehensive, will often be the victims of investments in ill-advised and mismanaged public-service corporations whose securities have been authorized by State commissions. The business man who deals in such securities needs no protection."

These views of Mr. Roemer deserve respect because of his great ability and long experience; but at the risk of appearing presumptuous, I respectfully suggest that a little analysis will show them to be fallacious. Who buys the bad securities to-day? Not the business man who deals in securities, for he, with or without regulation, makes his own independent investigation. So as to him regulation effects no change. Who, then, buys securities to-day under no regulation, without making an investigation for himself? The unwary, of course. Who will buy them under regulation, according to this argument, without independent investigation? Here, again, the unwary. The whole argument, then, is "unwary investors are now misled into buying bad securities. Make your securities better by effective regulation and issue fewer of them for the same amount of property, and thereby victimize the man by protecting him and giving him more for his money."

I have attempted to deal with the more important controverted questions involved in regulation of securities. I am strongly of the opinion that not one of the arguments advanced against regulation will bear analysis. I am convinced that these arguments are adduced in contemplation of ineffective regulation and are directed more against what has been and is being done in some quarters by way of regulation than against what the State can do under proper statute carefully and intelligently administered.

In summarizing the argument on the first objection it is well to have in mind what the railroad securities commission had to say with reference thereto. In this connection I call attention to the following comment:

"They (the railroads) have therefore been less able to give the shippers or the travelers the facilities that are requisite no less for the convenience and safety of the public than for the profitable utilization of the railroad itself. To the extent that we lessen the debt we shall increase the power of the railroads to raise money when the public needs added facilities and shall at the same time reduce the chance of default and lessen the severity of commercial crises."

And to what Dr. Maltbie, of the New York Public Service Commission, first district, one of the clearest thinking men engaged in regulation work in the country, also says:

"The State owes a duty toward investors as well as it does toward shippers and passengers. Further, proper regulation of securities will ultimately affect rates and service. It may not immediately, but in the long run better service and lower rates will be given by corporations that are upon a sound financial basis than by those having a great overcapitalization and unsound finances."

In short, as pointed out at length herein, whatever ought to be the result of overcapitalization and however much men may theorize, the fact remains that it has and does now affect rates and service, and a proper regulation of rates and service can not be had without regulation of securities.

In answer to the second objection, it appears that the State, by methods easily available, can regulate and is regulating securities without directly or indirectly validating or approving existing outstanding securities that should not be approved. Besides, the State incurs an obligation from an ethical standpoint in putting a corporation, by permission, in the way of doing a thing which results in a fraud, and particularly is the State morally derelict if after having conferred power on a corporation, and having seen such power used in a way to work injustice, at having the power to step in and prevent such injustice, fails to do so. And any restraint applied which tends to prevent such improper procedure on the part of corporations, instead of morally involving the State to an extent beyond which it is now obligated, tends, on the contrary, to lessen the moral responsibility.

As regards securities that are approved by the State under the proper precautions pointed out herein, I can give myself no great concern as to the effect of such approval. If the public utility commission does its duty, the approved securities should be good; and if it sees to it that the proceeds are honestly invested in the property and takes care that securities approved are not diluted through participation with other securities not approved, then why should not these securities be recognized in the rates? But regardless of any difficulties that confront those empowered to regulate securities, the condition under regulation is so immeasurably better for utility, patron, and investor, as far as can now be determined, that I am at a loss to understand the Jeremiahlike attitude of those who some years ago indulged the same childlike faith in the efficacy of regulation that some of the rest of us now display. But I could the better understand and perhaps agree with those formerly urging regulation and now so fearful of its results if they would point out wherein it has failed where effectively applied, instead of contending that it may produce results that have not yet come upon us. The evils of overcapitalization are familiar to us all. The logic of regulation seems to me to be irrefutable. Where properly carried on it is certainly preferable to the former condition, and until something more substantial than mere fears of results that can not be shown as yet to have materialized is urged against the propriety of regulating securities, such regulation certainly should not be rejected and a reversion to former admittedly bad conditions invited.

Mr. WORKS subsequently said: Referring to the article which I requested a moment ago to have printed in the RECORD, as it is of such importance, I think it might well be published as a public document. For that purpose I ask that it may be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

CONDITION OF THE TREASURY.

Mr. SIMMONS. I send to the desk a telegram received this morning from the Secretary of the Treasury, which I ask may be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

[Telegram.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 1, 1914.

Hon. F. M. SIMMONS,
Chairman Finance Committee,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Heartily congratulate you on the result of the operations of the new tariff and income-tax law for the fiscal year just ended. After paying all ordinary disbursements of the Government there was a surplus of $33,784,452.07, and after paying all Panama Canal expenditures for the year there was a deficit of only $1,010,058.81. These figures are subject to revision upon analysis of complete returns.

W. G. MCADOO.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, my attention was attracted in hearing read the communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitted by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. I am pleased to know that the finances of the country are apparently in a satisfactory condition. Whether that be so or not, it is a fact that the industrial conditions of the country are in a very unsatisfactory condition, and I want to submit very briefly one or two items on that point.

A shoe-manufacturing concern in Nashua, N. H., had a customer in Baltimore, who formerly purchased $200,000 worth of shoes annually, who recently wrote the manager of that shoe factory that he had just made a bargain with an English house at a lower price than he was able to make with the Nashua concern, and that he would hereafter purchase his shoes from England. So that one concern has lost a customer who purchased shoes at the rate of $200,000 a year; and I may add that the shoe industry in New England is far from being in a prosperous condition.

On yesterday I received a letter from one of the leading citizens of Lebanon, N. H., an enterprising, industrial town. My correspondent says:

The two American woolen mills here in Lebanon in the past six months have run, on an average, only 48 looms out of 142, which is only one-third the capacity of the mills. At the present writing they are completely shut down, and the outlook is anything but hopeful, as no orders whatever are in sight.

The overall shops are rapidly receiving cancellations of orders for mackinaws, which they have been working on almost entirely of late, and the knitting mill has nothing in sight after the 1st of August. So that one can easily see that business in Lebanon is extremely dull.

I received through the mail two or three days ago a communication, which I doubt not other Senators have received, from the committee of Flax Dressers' Local 694, United Textile Workers of America, affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, of Paterson, N. J., in which they say:

We, the flax dressers of Paterson, N. J., beg to call your attention to the condition of our trade in this country since the duty of 3 cents per pound was taken off the dressed line, or hackled flax, at the last revision of the tariff, and appeal to you to aid us in having the flax dressed in this country. Our representative, in his evidence before the Ways and Means Committee at Washington, explained to them how any reduction in the dressed line would mean the extermination of our industry in this country. We also appealed to the Finance Committee to have the duty retained on the dressed line. Still it was placed on the free list in face of all the statements we made as to what would be the result, as the following facts will prove:

There are only 18 men working here now, whereas if our industry was protected the same as other American industries it would take 200 men instead of 18. All the other mills throughout the country are in just the same situation. But we can not expect to get the work here when they can get the flax hackled in their own mills in Europe at less than half the price than we can hackle it here, and ship it in free. It is evident that while our men are unemployed the big business men of this country and the cheap labor of Europe are enjoying the fruits of the 3-cent reduction in the dressed line. We court the fullest investigation of our statements made to the Ways and Means Committee and refer you particularly to our communications to the Finance Committee on this matter. Hoping you will give our appeal your very earnest consideration and use your influence in having the duty replaced on the dressed line. * * *

COMMITTEE OF FLAX DRESSERS' LOCAL 694,
UNITED TEXTILE WORKERS OF AMERICA,
Affiliated with the American Federation of Labor.

Mr. President, in my committee room I have numerous similar letters and appeals. I present these simply to show that, while the financial condition of the country may be satisfactory at this moment, doubtless in large part due to greatly increased importations of foreign goods, the industrial condition is almost as bad as it can be. I received a letter two or three days ago from a friend, formerly engaged in business in New Hampshire, but who has been engaged in business in San Francisco for the last five years, in which he said to me that the industrial situation on the Pacific coast is just as bad as it was during the last Cleveland administration. However that may be, I know that throughout New England there is very serious industrial disturbance, and that a great many honest and industrious men who want employment are out of work, and, hence, as a corollary to the communication submitted by the Senator from North Carolina, I wanted to put in the RECORD the facts which I have stated.

Mr. HOLLIS and Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. HOLLIS. Mr. President, I desire to state that I have been in New Hampshire recently, and though I made very diligent inquiries I could not learn of a single cotton mill or woolen mill or textile mill of any kind nor a pulp mill nor a paper mill that has closed. A few Republican managers of mills say they are going to close down, but they have not done so as yet. If they do, it will be merely for the ordinary repairs in the summer.

The McElwain Shoe Co. was cited to me as a plant that had closed. I have a letter from the manager of that company saying that they shall begin again immediately after the 4th of July. In my own part of New Hampshire, in the vicinity of Concord, you can not hire men at any sort of reasonable wages. Contractors are trying to get men to take care of their work; you can not get a carpenter to patch your roof, and you can not get a painter to paint a house. Labor has never been so well employed in New Hampshire as it is to-day. All these wails come from places that are farther away, based generaly on what some one says, some one writes, some one guesses, or some one predicts. I state on my authority, from actual investigation, that labor has never been better employed in New Hampshire than it is to-day.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey and Mr. THOMAS addressed the Chair.

Mr. HOLLIS. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. GALLINGER. Perhaps my colleague had better go to Lebanon and look at the situation there.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is wholly impossible to have a chorus here.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey was recognized by the Chair.

Mr. THOMAS. I understood the Senator from New Hampshire had the floor and yielded to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thought the Senator from New Hampshire had taken his seat, and the Chair is quite sure that he did.

Mr. HOLLIS. That is true.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I will detain the Senate only a moment. It seems to me that the part of a statesman in times of distress and alarm is to allay apprehension, not to spread the flame and try to bring calamity to every household in the land.

Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] makes reference to the unsatisfactory conditions in this country. It is a notorious fact, and the Senator will not contradict it, I think, that affairs in business in a mercantile and manufacturing way are quite unsatisfactory the world over. Germany, if you please, and England as well, have been suffering more or less from this general condition of stagnation.

From the adjoining State of Connecticut I read most glowing accounts of the splendid prosperity that is there under way, and I want to bring to the notice of the Senate the fact that in the State of Pennsylvania a great tube plant, employing from eight to ten thousand workers, has started up with prospects that are most alluring and inviting.

In my own State, which is a great manufacturing community, i. the city of Elizabeth, the county seat of my own county, is a great plant, known as the Singer Sewing Machine plant, employing 10,000 hands. We put their product on the free list. We were told on all sides in Elizabeth that we were inviting calamity and were inviting our own defeat to advocate putting sewing machines on the free list; but what has been the result? It has been the annual custom at this time of the year of the Singer Sewing Machine Co., during every year that I have had any knowledge of it—and they have been there 20 years or more—to close down for one month, as they said, for repairs and for other purposes. Within the past two or three days—I do not know whether I can put my finger on the clipping—but I learn from two papers published in the city of Elizabeth, one the Elizabeth Journal, the property and voice in days past of the distinguished and honorable John Kean, my predecessor, a protectionist and a Republican, that the situation has entirely changed, and instead of closing down the plant for four weeks this year they notified their workmen on Monday last that no such shutdown would take place; that a week would be as long as they could afford to have the plant idle this year; that they had sold out their stock of sewing machines, and that their orders were such as to keep the Singer Sewing Machine plant busy and humming for the rest of the year.

Further than that, take the Claflin disaster. Our friends have tried to make much of that. Everybody understands that the Claflin firm were a responsible and honorable firm, but that in common with the rest of our country they became inoculated with the microbe of avarice, and they have been living the life of a debauchee; they have been capitalizing and running not only their own plant in a wholesale way, but retail plants all over the country, and there must be a very favorable condition when a great firm, with ramifications spreading far and near in this country, can fail for the sum of $34,000,000, and yet have no more effect on the commercial and mercantile market than the dropping of a feather.

The fact is, Mr. President, we have been living the life of a debauchee, and we are reaping the headaches of the hereafter very largely, but a better day is in store. Take your own journals; take the conditions in Pennsylvania; in New Hampshire, as the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] has cited them; in Connecticut; in my own State of New Jersey, and you will find there is a picking up, a kindling up of mercantile interests. The shafts and spindles that have been silent and idle for a time past are to-day again busy, and men of business, including John Claflin himself, have said that the conditions generally are sound.

So I feel that it is falling far short of our duty when gentlemen, occupying the honorable, distinguished, and potent position of Senator, stand on the housetops crying alarm, rather than endeavoring to stay it and to promote a better feeling. That, to my mind, is the truer and better part of statesmanship.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire has been absent from the Chamber for some little time, on unavoidable business, of course; and during that period of time, I presume, he has been at home fixing his fences.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from New Hampshire was on a somewhat different mission from that. The Senator from New Hampshire has read both the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and the newspapers during the time he was absent.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the Senator from New Hampshire read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD during his absence, he is entitled to, and I hereby offer him, my profound sympathy. I confess I have not read it much during that period. I presume that before long a number of others, including myself, will be absent and engaged in the same essential pursuit. Hence my reference to the absence of the Senator was not intended as a personal reflection, or as implying that he was engaged in anything that was not perfectly proper but very desirable.

In view of the lugubrious prophecies of disaster uttered last summer by the Senator and his confrères as to the inevitable results of tariff reduction, I have no doubt that the Senator is extremely delighted—mournfully so, perhaps; sadly so, perhaps; but nevertheless delighted—to ascertain that in individual instances there are conditions which seem to support his claim to the rôle of a prophet. Mr. President, I have no doubt that business is depressed in some sections in New Hampshire, just as it is depressed everywhere in the country, just as it is depressed all over the world; but that this depression is universal, that it is the consequence of revenue legislation, I utterly deny. It occurred to me while the Senator was speaking about the sorry condition of the woolen mills in New Hampshire that it might be due to the fact that wool, the raw material of those mills, is now selling for a great deal more per pound than it ever sold for during the prevalence of the high-tariff duties applying to this commodity, which always have been declared to constitute the citadel of the great American system.

I have no doubt that some reason for the depression in New England may be traced to the railway conditions there. I recall that a few years ago New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad stock was selling for over 200 and paying a dividend of 10 per cent. You can not give it away now. The story of New Haven, Mr. President, is the most shameful episode in the shameful history of railway finance in America. The Senator knows that the Boston & Maine Railroad was dragged to its ruin through the machinations of the scoundrels who manipulated New Haven and who are to-day responsible for much of the poverty, and perhaps the suffering and the misery, resulting to the unfortunate shareholders of those unfortunate corporations, who in some instances invested all of their savings in their shares because of the faith they had in the integrity of those who controlled and directed their operations.

We have been told that the capacity of the consumer to purchase has much to do with prosperity in business. When you consider that the revenues derived from the dividends of these great railway corporations of New England have disappeared and that bankruptcy confronts them, we can easily understand, perhaps, why it is that some unfortunate manufacturers in New England are not so prosperous as they have been heretofore.

I am not going to occupy the attention of the Senate any longer upon this subject, however, beyond reading an extremely short editorial from the New York World of the day before yesterday. I think it has some bearing upon the subject matter of the discussion. It is entitled:

NAILING ANOTHER LIE.

The Journal of Commerce prints an infamous cablegram from London stating that—

"The cotton-cloth business at Manchester is the smallest for years, and the market is very irregular."

This, of course, is a deliberate and unqualified lie, circulated by English cunning to deceive credulous Americans as to the real operations of the Underwood-Simmons tariff. Our old friend Wilbur F. Wakeman, of the American Protective Tariff League, must get after it at once.

The Manchester cotton trade was never so prosperous. Every trans-Atlantic liner staggers into New York with the burden of Manchester cotton cloth, while billions of New England operatives are slowly starving to death, and some of the less prosperous New England mills are barely earning 40 per cent dividends.

But if it should really happen that the Manchester cotton-cloth trade is the worst in years, that is because President Wilson refuses to give business a rest and because Congress persists in debating the antitrust bills.

Mr. President, the Democratic Party has a program two-thirds of which it has accomplished. It is at the threshold of the remaining third, whose enactment will be effected before this Congress adjourns. For my part, I thank God that we have at the head of this administration a man who knows his duty and, knowing it, is willing to take the responsibility of performing it; and I for one am glad to follow his lead hereafter, as I have followed it heretofore, whenever I can do so with a clear conscience. He has the wisdom to perceive and the courage to pursue the pathway of public duty and has behind him the confidence of the public and the support of his party.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have intended for some days to present to the Senate at an opportune time some views upon the question which the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] has raised this morning; but on account of the fact that both sides of the Chamber have been so anxious that the river and harbor bill and the trade commission bill should go forward, I have not felt like trespassing upon the time of the Senate, and I shall not do so this morning; but at an opportune time I shall. However, I wish to read now—I shall consome only a minute or two—a letter I received on the 22d of June from the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Redfield:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, June 22, 1914.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Some days ago gentlemen representing Leigh & Butler, importers of textile machinery and agents for Mather & Platt (Ltd.), one of the largest English manufacturers of textile machinery, called upon me. They said that although American makers of textile machinery were complaining of foreign competition, the fact was that in most cases, and in some lines in all cases, the American makers quoted prices which they (Leigh & Butler), as importers of English machinery, were quite unable to meet.

Mr. Coffin, who writes the inclosed letter of the 18th, which, I am sure, will interest you, is an experienced and intelligent man, having been in the employ of the American textile-machinery makers before he was employed by Leigh & Butler.

Now, I want to read just a few lines from the letter of this agent of this English importing house, referred to in the letter of the Secretary of Commerce:

Hon. WILLIAM C. REDFIELD,
Secretary of Commerce.

DEAR SIR: Referring to our conversation while at your office last Monday in regard to mill costs, I thought you would be interested in a report that I got from one of our largest bleacheries and finishing concerns yesterday.

That is a New England bleachery and finishing concern.

The agent told me that for a number of years they have been under contract with an English exporting house for 10,000 cases of finished white goods that were shipped direct from here to South America, China, and the Philippine Islands. He reported to me that the reason these goods were bought here by the Englishmen was because they could be bought in this country for much less money than in England, and that the goods were of better quality. My object in calling at this place was in answer to an inquiry for some finishing machinery. I found that it was impossible for me to compete with the American machine builders in price.

I called at another very large mill in New Hampshire, where a large order for card clothing is pending. I found also that after we had figured our price just as low as was possible it was impossible for us to compete with American card clothing.

Mr. President, a few days ago I had a conversation with the largest manager of cotton mills in my State. He is the manager, I think, of 13 of the largest cotton mills in my State. Right here, in passing, I want to say that we have something over 300 cotton mills in North Carolina, and if a single one of those cotton mills is under suspension, if a single one of them is not running at full time, it has not been brought to my attention. This cotton-mill manager stated to me that last year and up to this time this year he had had one of the best business years since he had been connected with the cotton-mill business, and he has been for many years connected with that business.

Mr. President, we can read letters, as the Senator from New Hampshire has, from people who take a pessimistic view of this question; and we can read letters, as has been done by many Senators here, from those who take an optimistic view of the question. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] a few days ago in a very elaborate speech to the Senate upon present conditions, filled column after column and page after page of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD with letters written from various and sundry sections of this country by men engaged in various kinds and classes of industry, taking an optimistic view of the present conditions and outlook.

I do not deny that there has been during the past year some slight halt at certain times in the business of this country. We could not expect it to be otherwise; but it is a fact, admitted by economic writers and students who have investigated the question, that if we have had a slight halt in the business of this country, growing largely out of the fact that we were reorganizing our system of tariff and our system of finance and the fact that such reorganizations are always accompanied with more or less disturbance, that as a matter of fact there has been less disturbance, less depression in business in this country during the last 12 months than in almost any other great industrial country in the world. Compared with the conditions which have existed in our neighbor just to the north, Canada, the conditions in this country during the last year could be described as boom conditions.

I shall have occasion a little later to go rather fully into this matter; but I shall not this morning trespass further on the time of the Senate. I should not have indulged in these remarks but for the fact that the discussion of the Senator from New Hampshire seemed to call for some answer.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not intend to take more than a very few minutes this morning; but I feel that it is only justice to the business conditions of the country to say just a few words upon the situation as it exists to-day as I see it.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] may say there has been only a slight halt in business in this country of late. I want to call his attention to the fact that there has not been any halt whatever in the importation of goods into this country, notwithstanding there has been a halt in the consumption of goods.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit just one interruption?

Mr. SMOOT. Why, yes.

Mr. THOMAS. Is it not a fact that the house of Claflin was one of the greatest importing houses in the country?

Mr. SMOOT. I can not see that that makes any difference at all from what I said or to what I intend to say.

Mr. THOMAS. Perhaps not; but is it not a fact?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no question but that the Claflin house imported a great many goods; but I can not see the connection between that and what I intend to call the Senator's attention to.

Mr. THOMAS. It is merely this: I think the Senator is one who prophesied great prosperity to the importers of the country, at the expense of the manufacturers, in the event of a change in our revenue legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; but when I made the statement to which the Senator refers I had particular reference to the men who sit in offices, with not a dollar invested, who import goods as importers and sell them to the trade in this country, with not a single dollar of investment and little responsibility.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not recall that the Senator at the time limited his remarks to that class of importers.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not want to take the time this morning to go into that question.

I have here the importations of manufactured goods in 26 lines of manufacture for the month of May. In 1914 they were $35,952,822. The same identical lines of goods imported for the year 1913 amounted to $15,183,938, or an increase of $20,768,884, or an average increase of 136 per cent. On these same lines of goods I want to call attention to how steadily the importations have increased since December:

In December the increase was 54 per cent.
In January the increase was 58 per cent.
In February it was 64 per cent.
In March it was 71 per cent.
In April it was 129 per cent.
In May it was 136 per cent.

All of that great increase of importations simply means that they are not made in this country by American manufacturers.

Mr. President, that tells the story. I want to say to the Senator from North Carolina also that if I had the time now I could go into the RECORD and show him, as presented by a Congressman in the House, letters from many of the cotton mills of North Carolina that were running only three days a week. I do not know how many there were, because I did not take the time to count them at the time I was reading about them in the RECORD. But the importations of cotton cloths would show that this class of trade is interfered with. I notice that the importations of cotton cloths increased in the one month over 100 per cent. Even in the month of May cotton cloths imported into this country increased a little over 40 per cent.

It can not, Mr. President, have any other effect than to take that amount of business away from cotton manufacturers in this country; and we all must admit that the consumption is not as great as it was a year ago, and that decrease also falls upon the manufacturer.

Mr. President, I received a letter the other day from a mutual friend of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] and myself, which reads as follows:

MONSANTO CHEMICAL WORKS,
OFFICE 1800 SOUTH SECOND STREET,
St. Louis, June 22, 1914.

Hon. REED SMOOT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SMOOT: I have read with much interest the newspaper report of your speech on the Treasury's statement of foreign trade showing the immense gain in imports and decrease in exports during the month of May.

Our Democratic friends who framed up the last tariff measure certainly must now realize how great were their mistakes, as now demonstrated by the Treasury's statement and the thousands now out of employment.

As an illustration of the mistaken policy of stopping American manufacture to help the American consumer, I desire to recall to your mind how hard I fought for a rate on chloral hydrate to enable my company to stay in the manufacture of that article.

We were denied the rate, and as a result we had to dismantle that department and most of the apparatus went to the junk pile, for the reason that the apparatus used for the manufacture of chloral hydrate can not be used for anything else.

The plant had not been dismantled 30 days before the German manufacturers put up their price on the article 11 cents per pound—over 50 per cent advance on the price previously ruling.

You knew what would happen just as well as I did, that as soon as the European manufacturer has no competition in this country he puts up his price to the highest limit possible, and who can blame him?

As matters now stand, the European manufacturers will supply all the chloral hydrate consumed in this country, while before that we stood between the American buyers and the foreign manufacturer.

With kind regards.

Very sincerely, yours, JNO. F. QUEENY.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. KERN. I simply rose to inquire whether that gentleman is still a friend of the Senator from Missouri after the efforts of the latter to ruin and destroy his business?

Mr. SMOOT. I think so, because I do not believe if the Senator from Missouri had had his way in that matter the rate would have been reduced to such an extent. I will say to the Senator I stood upon this floor and told the Senate that if the proposed rate was put into the tariff bill there would be no chloral hydrate manufactured in the United States, and it happens so. There was no question in my mind about it.

I wrote to Mr. Queeny and asked him if he had any objection to my calling this to the attention of the Senate, and he wrote back to me on June 27, 1914, and said:

MONSANTO CHEMICAL WORKS,
OFFICE 1800 SOUTH SECOND STREET,
St. Louis, June 27, 1914.

Hon. REED SMOOT,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SMOOT: I have your esteemed favor of the 25th instant acknowledging receipt of my letter of the 22d instant.

I have no objection whatever to your calling the attention of the Senate to the dismantling of our chloral hydrate plant. As a matter of fact, I should like to see you do it, because it confirms the statement that I made to the members of the subcommittee of the Senate Finance Committee, who had Schedule A in charge.

I stated to them that if they would not change the rate proposed, we would have to go out of business in the article, and this would give the two European manufacturers of the product a free hand to supply the world.

Senator HUGHES replied that it was a hothouse industry. If it was, they put it out of business all right; and the American buyer can now send his money over to the European manufacturer, who gets the 50 per cent advance in price, and the United States Government receives less than one-tenth of the duty previously obtained on importations of this product.

This subcommittee was, as you know, guided by the recommendations of Dr. Herstein. I went to Washington and told the truth, but I was met with the statement that Dr. Herstein was a Government expert, and his statement was taken against mine, although he had had no practical experience whatever in chemical manufacture, other than, as I understand, a few years in the manufacture of cream of tartar and tartaric acid.

I am not trying to pose as a prophet. I knew from actual experience what would happen if the rate stood. It has happened. We were put out of business on the article, and, as I have already said, the two European manufacturers now supply not only the requirements of American consumption but the requirements of the world.

Very sincerely,

JNO. F. QUEENY.

Mr. President, I could stand here for an hour and tell the Senate of just such cases as this.

I call attention to the manufacture of oxalic acid and the efforts undertaken to produce it in this country. What was the result? Almost the same as this. So instance could be added upon instance.

Mr. President, I was going to say more this morning in relation to this matter, but I will conclude by simply referring to the Singer Sewing Machine Co. The only reason I wanted a duty upon sewing machines was not for the protection of the manufacturers of sewing machines in this country, but to compel them to make the goods in this country and not make them in Scotland and France. They do not need a protection on sewing machines. The Singer Sewing Machine Co. did not claim that they did. What they wanted was free sewing machines so that if ever a time came when they had trouble with their workingmen in this country they could say to them: "We will make our goods in Scotland, in France, or in Russia, as we can ship them into this country free of duty."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. They do not seem to be making them in Russia. They are making them in this country. I want to say to the Senator right here I have a statement from the Singer Sewing Machine Co. that they are supplying the market. There is a small amount of imports. There were less than 20,000 sewing machines imported into this country last year.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly. That is just what I said.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. They are made here.

Mr. SMOOT. The Singer Sewing Machine Co. is perfectly satisfied with free sewing machines.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The Senator did not think so when we were passing the tariff bill. We were told by the defenders of the tariff that if we passed the measure the mills in the city of Elizabeth and in Connecticut would rust to stagnation.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is wrong.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not think I am.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say that I stood on the floor of the Senate and stated the only reason why I desired a duty on sewing machines was so as to compel the making of them in this country.

I called attention to the fact that it would be a splendid thing for the Singer Sewing Machine Co. to have free sewing machines. With their mammoth plants in Scotland, France, and Russia, if they ever came in conflict with their employees, they could say to them, "We will shut down and make all our machines in a foreign country."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. It seems to have been a splendid thing for the 10,000 workmen who are working in this plant in Elizabeth. They have made a great addition to the plant, and the workmen have been notified that they will begin work again on Monday, with the prospect of continuous prosperity. So if that policy has been good for the sewing machine, it has been good for the workmen. God speed a policy that is good for the workmen and for capital. That is what we are defending.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly it is good for them, and I am very pleased that it is.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. What about this——

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say now that if the Singer Manufacturing Co. are prosperous they ought to be, because they have the whole world as their market. The machine is sold in every part of the world, and they are extending their plants. I am told now that they are going to start a great plant in Germany, besides the other plants they have in foreign countries. So there is nothing, as far as the tariff is concerned, that affects the Singer sewing machine, and that is all I desired to say.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. We did put it on the free list.

Mr. SMOOT. Machines are on the free list.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I know; we placed them on the free list.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator now that if there had been a duty upon the machines there would not be a single solitary machine less exported, and the importation of all that have been received would have enriched the Treasury.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. What has the Senator to say regarding the case I cited about the great tube plant at McKeesport, Pa.?

Mr. SMOOT. I have the figures in my office of the unemployed in the iron industry of the United States. If there is one plant that has been long idle and has secured orders enough to start up the plant, I am awfully pleased to hear it. I hope the men will be employed right along.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not know whether the Senator——

Mr. SMOOT. It would give me great pleasure to see the country boom.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I believe that.

Mr. SMOOT. It would give me great pleasure to see every workman in the land working at the highest possible wages. But I want to say to the Senate, with the rates of duties that we have upon many lines of manufactured goods, and with the wages that are paid in this country as compared with those paid in foreign lands, it will be impossible to keep people employed or to have the increase and extension and expansion of different lines of business as has been the case in the past.

Mr. STONE. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah what is the occasion, what is the motive that moves him to make these daily or almost daily lamentations?

Mr. SMOOT. I am not making a lamentation, and I do not think the Senator from Missouri has any right to so intimate.

Mr. STONE. Then why not——

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to say to the Senator from Missouri that I have made no statement here as to the importations or figures that I have not taken from the records of the Treasury Department.

Mr. STONE. I think the Senator has.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not propose at any time when I speak on this floor to try to misrepresent anything. Four or five Senators have been talking about the subject matter on which I have been speaking, and I simply have said what I have in answer to their statements.

Mr. STONE. The Senator should remember that he who excuseth himself before he is accused accuses himself. Nobody, as far as I have heard, has accused the Senator of deliberately making misrepresentations.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, the Senator has done it in the past, I am sorry to say.

Mr. STONE. No; not that the Senator deliberately made a misrepresentation.

Mr. SMOOT. It may not have been done deliberately.

Mr. STONE. The Senator made misrepresentations, but I think he did it without knowing it.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator can find one misrepresentation I have made, I will arise on the floor of the Senate and acknowledge it to the Senate.

Mr. STONE. The Senator will be very slow to make an acknowledgement of that character. He would prefer to undertake to defend what he said. Convince a man against his will and he remains usually of the same opinion still. The Senator gets impatient because I ask him why he surcharges the atmosphere of this Chamber with his lamentations from day to day. Everyone knows that the Senator is a veritable Jeremiah. I suppose to-morrow morning the Washington Post will have an article, editorial or otherwise, on the same line. If you could only yoke the Washington Post and the Senator from Utah together you would have a pair of Jeremiahs that would take the blue ribbon in any circus on the globe.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, my name does not appear in the Washington Post very often, or other newspapers of the country, and I am not in the public service for that purpose. I have never sought at any time the headlines of the newspapers, and I never shall.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, I want to say that I am a partisan, for I love my party. I have spent my life for it, and I am willing to spend it over again in the same direction.

Mr. GALLINGER. How could the Senator do that?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I could not, and that is a misfortune in the economy of nature. I may have failed in my efforts sometimes, but it has been a great pleasure to preach the gospel I believe in, and by the eternal I will preach it on every occasion, night, noonday, and Sunday. I respect a man who has convictions and has the courage to defend them. I believe the Senator from Utah is one of that class. I would not give a rush for a man who had not convictions, and I would give less for a man who having them did not have the courage to defend them.

I made some little desultory reference to the great tube plant and I sent over to my office and got a clipping from the Trenton Times, of New Jersey, June 26, 1914, a Republican paper. It as follows:

GREAT TUBE PLANT STARTS FULL TIME.

McKEESPORT, PA., June 26.

It was announced here yesterday that the National Tube Co., of this place, one of the largest plants, will resume operations in full next Saturday, and that two additional welding furnaces will resume work at once. It is stated that the entire plant, which employs many thousands of men, will be in operation by July 4.

For several weeks the mills have been working at about 75 per cent of their capacity, and but few of them were operated Saturdays. The order just issued will place the mills on day and night turns, with a full force of employees working.

I shall ask leave to print these two slips.

I want to say, Mr. President, this is not of Democratic authority. Nobody will accuse Judge Gary, of the steel plant, of that. Here is an editorial in the Journal of Commerce, and God knows nobody will accuse the Journal of Commerce as leaning very kindly toward the party of the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] and myself. It is quite an extended article. It goes on to say:

We have been exporting iron and steel of late to the value of some $250,000,000 to $300,000,000 a year.

This editorial, which I trust the Senator will listen to, finally winds up in this way:

The trouble—

Now, mind you, this is from the gospel of the Republican press, and they do not agree with all your tariff notions—

The trouble which we are going through now, so far as it is due to tariff changes, results from the vast complication of the protective system and the necessity of adjustments in passing to a simpler one, which can not be effected in a day or without more or less of squeeze and strain.

I think no one will contradict the thought I mentioned a minute or two ago. We have been living at breakneck speed. The high tariff has overstimulated industries. It has crushed out minor ones and overstimulated others, and in railroads as well. We have been living, as I said, the life of a debauchee, and we are reaping the results of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I beg pardon. I should like that column in the Republican Journal of Commerce and Bulletin, of the city of New York, on "Iron and steel and the tariff," by Judge Gary, to be published. It is about a column long.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I must object to these newspaper clippings being put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. We can all engage in that, and I think it is of no earthly consequence. If anybody is interested in the opinion of that journal, he can go out and buy a copy. I decline to have the Government advertise that paper or any other. If the Senator wants to read it, he can do so.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I do not want to inflict my poor elocution on the Senate.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I enjoy the sound of the Senator's voice. I think it is always musical, and sometimes informing.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Cut that out.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think if Senators were compelled to undergo the physical labor of reading all the voluminous and continuous literature which pervades the press of the country, they would not perhaps inflict it upon the Government Printing Office in such a limitless quantity.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. With the permission of the Senate I withdraw the request, so far as the Journal of Commerce is concerned. I would like to have the two minor clippings printed. I trust the Senator from Connecticut will not object. God knows I would not object to printing all the advertisements of wooden nutmegs in Connecticut that you might want. If the minor ones may be allowed to slip through, I will not ask that the larger one be printed.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Elizabeth Journal, Republican, June 25, 1914.]

SHORT VACATION AT SINGER SHOP—TAKEN AS SIGN OF BUSY FALL SEASON—LAY OFFS CLAIMED DUE TO NEW MACHINES.

For the first time in several years, the Singer plant's midsummer vacation will last only one week, including Independence Day. Notice has been given that the factory will close Saturday at noon; will reopen Monday morning, July 6, and that Saturday and June 6 will be pay days.

The midsummer lay offs have run from two to three weeks in recent years; the three weeks' limit having been reached in 1907.

That conditions at the Singer plant have been showing a gradual improvement during the last few weeks, and that the short mid-summer vacation proves that things are on the mend, is the roseate view taken by many. Recent developments, it is, indeed, hoped everywhere, mean that a boom is in prospect.

There has been no actual closing down of the plant, but there has been an undoubted depression. This statement is proved by the number of employees put on part time, as well as the fact that a considerable number were laid off. The laying off has been due in a certain degree, it is admitted, to the installation of greater efficiency methods.

For instance, more machines in the polishing room are said to be one of the principal reasons why there are 50 employed there now, as against about 300 in 1908. In the needle department there was a greater number not so many years ago. Machines caused many of them to be laid off, and now 8 or 9 men are said to be getting out the work formerly done by 100 or more

The importation of machines since the new tariff went into effect, according to a reliable authority, has only resulted in about 20,000 machines coming into this country from abroad.

[From the Elizabeth Times, June 25, 1914.]

SINGER LOAF TO LAST ONLY ONE WEEK—SHORTEST LAY OFF IN FIVE YEARS IS JOLT TO CALAMITY HOWLERS—TUTTLE IS SUBSTANTIATED.

Announcement was made at the Singer factory yesterday afternoon that the annual "loaf" this year will last only one week. The factory will close down next Saturday afternoon and reopen Monday morning, July 6.

In view of the efforts of the calamity howlers to spread news of "hard times" in the plant because of the tariff revision, the news was received with much surprise. The short vacation shows that there is a large amount of work to be done in the factory now that the overproduction of 350,000 machines has been wiped out under the new system inaugurated by Superintendent Dosch.

This will be the shortest "loaf" in more than five years. During the past few years, and while the tariff was in its "upward" schedule, there have been two and three week vacations in the factory. The rumors spread by the alarmists caused anticipation of a four-week "loaf," or nothing less than three weeks.

The short vacation lends more credence to the statement published a few months ago by Congressman WILLIAM E. TUTTLE, who showed that any inactivity that might prevail at the plant was not due to the tariff revision. Those who know the conditions at the plant have declared that the lay offs during the past few months were caused by a new policy of Superintendent Dosch. When Mr. Dosch assumed the superintendency, he found an overproduction of 350,000 machines on his hands. He decided to eliminate the overproduction, and consequently work at the factory became slack for a time. The storage bins have been cleared of machines, and the factory is now in practically normal condition, as is indicated by the curtailed "loaf."

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I had no thought that the observations I made would result in so tumultuous a debate. The Senator from North Carolina informs us that he proposes to enlighten the Senate on the workings of the new tariff law in due time. I do not know when that will be, if we are to pass the three great bills that are now pressing upon us; but I will patiently await that day, and will, if I have an opportunity to do so, submit some observations in reply.

I simply want now to say, Mr. President, that I am fully satisfied in my own mind that there is a great deal of industrial disturbance in this country, including the State of New Hampshire. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE] says it is a "headache" that afflicts the industrial interests of the country; and I of my own knowledge know that a great many men are having headaches because of the fact that they are out of employment, and they are having heartaches likewise. It may be entirely "psychological," Mr. President, as has been suggested in a certain high quarter, but the people of New England, who are suffering and praying for relief, are of the opinion that it is something more serious. That is all I now care to say.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, after these alternating wails of despair on the one side and hosannas of triumph on the other, I call for the regular order.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to ask the Senator from Indiana if he will not withdraw his request for a short while. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has promised that whenever he was shown to be in error in any of his figures he would be glad to correct them, and I thought this might be a very good time to call attention to some of his errors. I will not press it now, but at some other time I shall be very glad to call the Senator's attention to them.

Mr. KERN. I will withdraw my request for the present, to permit one more hosanna of triumph.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall be gald to have the Senator from North Carolina call my attention to the matters to which he refers.

Mr. SIMMONS. Before I proceed, Mr. President, let me say that I do not question that there has been an increase of imports into this country, and that the increase during the last two months has been larger than it before was. If you are going to reduce the tariff so as to give the people relief from the burdens of excessive tariff taxation, you necessarily have got to reduce the duties to a point where there can be importations. The Senator from Utah seems to be enamored of the old Payne-Aldrich tariff act, which, in a great many particulars, was so high that it made importations absolutely impossible. If we were to give the people any relief from the effects of those excessive duties, we had to reduce them; and, if we did not reduce them to a point that would permit and, under certain conditions, invite importations, the reduction would have been a farce.

Mr. President, when the Democratic Party came into power there was a great outcry of protest all over the country against high prices, the high cost of living, and the high cost of nearly everything. There was a demand that these prices be brought down to a reasonable level. In response to this the tariff was revised and duties were lowered.

For months after this act went into operation we were twitted by Senators on the other side of the Chamber with the suggestion that we had not carried out our promise to reduce the cost of living, to reduce the level of prices in this country through the tariff. Now, when importations begin to come in a little bit more freely, when we are approaching a condition when the reduction of the tariff will force down these prices, these same Senators rise in their seats and charge that this tariff law we have passed is flooding the country with cheap foreign products; that the industries of the country are about to be submerged under the weight of these cheap foreign importations.

In other words, these gentlemen denounce the tariff, first, because it did not reduce prices, and then, when it begins to operate so as to force reductions, they denounce it because it is about to become an effective instrument in reducing the high cost of living.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator yield a moment? I want to ask the Senator a question in that connection.

Mr. SIMMONS. I fear I shall not be able to conclude before 2 o'clock; but the Senator from Utah may ask the question.

Mr. SMOOT. I simply want to ask the Senator from North California, Is it not a fact that the importations under the present tariff act are a great many million dollars more than it was estimated they would be?

Mr. SIMMONS. No; not for the first nine months of the year, but, as I said, they had been larger for the last two or three months.

Mr. SMOOT. The very statement of the Secretary of the Treasury has shown that there was an estimated shortage in the customs from importations of $52,000,000, and the actual results for the year show they were only about $25,000,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. I stated in the beginning of my remarks that the importations for the last two or three months were larger, but for the balance of the year they have not been very materially larger.

Mr. GALLINGER. How can we have more revenue under a reduced tariff unless the importations are larger?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; $29,000,000 more revenue.

Mr. SIMMONS. There has been a considerable increase during the last two or three months over the estimates; before that the importations were below the estimates, I think.

Mr. LIPPITT. I should like to ask the Senator from North Carolina if the last two months are not really the best indication of what is going to happen under this tariff law?

Mr. SIMMONS. I do not think so. Importations are coming into this country and importations are going to come into this country in increasing quantity until the men who have raised the price of products in this country beyond a reasonable level have made up their minds that they have got to reduce those prices to a reasonable level. If importations are increasing, it is because the manufacturers, producers, and distributers of the products of this country have not yet realized the fact that they have got to give up these high trust and combination prices, and that, if they do not, they will be confronted with larger importations from abroad. For one, I hope that these importations will grow, and that they will continue to grow until the combinations controlling the prices of food products, controlling the prices of manufactured products, and stubbornly refusing to yield to the just demand for fairer prices and lower cost of living, make up their minds to reduce the prices to the bases of fair and reasonable profits. If this tariff does not succeed in forcing them to make that reduction, it will not accomplish its purpose. When they have made that reduction, when they have reduced prices to a reasonable level, then, if there is any excessive importations, they will cease.

The discussion of this phase of the tariff question, however, Mr. President, was not the purpose for which I rose. Several Senators have called the attention of the Senate to the fact that there has been an increase this year in importations into this country, especially during the last month or two, and in a speech delivered to the Senate a few days ago the Senator from Utah referred to the fact that there had been an increase in importations in April, I believe, of $29,000,000; and he said that was a wrong to the laboring people of this country; that that was taking so many jobs from the American laboring man and giving them to those of other countries.

Mr. President, I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact, taking the first 11 months of the fiscal years 1908–9, and 1909–10, and 1911–12, and 1912–13, the per cent increase of importations under the old tariff was greater than for the present fiscal year. For the first 11 months of 1908–9 the importations were $1,187,255,095.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator deny——

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me finish this. The Senator does not want to interrupt me right in the middle of a statement?

Mr. SMOOT. I want to know, does the Senator deny that there was an increase of importations for the month of April this year over the importations for the month of April in 1913?

Mr. SIMMONS. Oh, no; I do not deny that.

Mr. SMOOT. Well, that is what I said.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Utah knows that I do not deny that he said that. The importations for the first 11 months of the year 1908–9 under the old law were, as I have said, $1,187,255,095.

For 11 months in the year 1909–10 the importations were $1,437,070,943, an increase of 20 per cent in one year in the importations to this country under the Payne-Aldrich law, or, in dollars, an increase in importations of something over $200,000,000. The Senator does not think there is anything wrong in that increase; he does not regard that increase as taking that many jobs out of the hands of American laborers.

For 11 months in 1910–11 the importations were $1,404,418,921, and for the first 11 months of 1911–12, $1,522,234,137, an increase of 8 per cent.

For 11 months in 1912–13 the importations were $1,681,762,357, or an increase, Mr. President, over the importations for 11 months in the year 1911–12 of 10 per cent under the Payne-Aldrich bill, depriving American labor of that many jobs.

For the first 11 months of 1912–13, as I have said, the importations were $1,681,762,357, and for the first 11 months of the year 1913–14 they were $1,735,885,740; that is, the importations for the first 11 months of the present fiscal year, compared with those of the first 11 months of the last fiscal year, show an increase of 3 per cent, taking the whole year.

Mr. President, the Senator from Utah has very frequently upon the floor of the Senate given expression to his great preference to the Payne-Aldrich law. I have no doubt that the Senator thinks that we will not have any prosperity in this country until we repeal the present act and reenact the Payne-Aldrich law in its essential features; but I think there are very few people in this country who will agree with the distinguished and able and industrious Senator from Utah with regard to that bill. I think the Senator will not live long enough, though he is a young man, to see the day when the American people will again tolerate any such system of tariff taxation as that imposed by the Payne-Aldrich law.

The Senator has boasted of his accuracy and of his disposition to be entirely fair. He says that he is always willing, if his inaccuracies are shown, to correct those inaccuracies. Mr. President, the Senator, in his statement made to the Senate on the 20th day of June, gave a table of imports ready for consumption, and from certain items that he selected in that table he showed that the increase of importations had been in that month 129 per cent. The first one of the items that I wish to call the attention of the Senator to is the item of laces given in his table. His table states that in April, 1914, the importations of laces and lace articles amounted, in round numbers, to $2,096,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say, Mr. President——

Mr. SIMMONS. I will ask the Senator not to interrupt me now. The importation of those articles, according to the statement of the Senator, for April, 1914, amounted to $2,096,036, while for the month of April, 1913, the value is given at $1,027,188, making an increase of 104 per cent. If the Senator will refer to page 889 of the Monthly Summary of Commerce and Finance for April, 1914, he will find this state of facts: In the bracket, including these manufactures, embracing laces he will find that the aggregate of the importation of these various articles for April, 1914, was $2,096,036, just as the Senator gives it. That includes them all. The Senator gives that correctly, but when he goes back to the importations for April, 1913, he picks out of the seven articles—there are seven articles in that bracket—"lace and lace articles, including edgings," $1,027,000; and that amount he gives as the importations for the month of April, 1913, against a total importation of those seven articles for the month of April, 1914. If the Senator, after having given the table of importations for 1914 of those seven articles, had given the total for the same seven articles for 1913 he would have found that it amounted to $2,229,000 instead of $1,027,000, and that instead of an increase of importations, as he contends, of 104 per cent for that month, there was an actual decrease of 6 per cent.

I will ask the Senator to let me have my copy of the Monthly Summary of Commerce and Finance so that I can go on, for that is not all.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not a copy of the Monthly Summary of Commerce and Finance, to which the Senator is referring, but I will endeavor to secure one.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish the Senator would; I am calling his attention to it in order that he may answer, for I want him to do so.

The Senator refers in his speech to silk and the manufactures of silk, and states that the importations for April, 1914, were $11,094,000 and for April, 1913, $2,212,000, and he finds that there was an excess of imports in the month of April, 1914, as compared with April, 1913, of $8,880,000.

Mr. President, if the Senator will turn to page 896 of the Monthly Summary of Commerce and Finance for April, 1914, to the bracket containing the manufactures of these cloths, he will find that in estimating the imports for April, 1914, he included "total unmanufactured silk" with "total manufactured," the total unmanufactured importations in that month being $8,254,000, making his statement that $11,094,000 of manufactured and unmanufactured silks were imported in that month correct; but when the Senator gave the importations for the month of April, 1913, he left out the total unmanufactured importations in that month, which amounted to $6,189,000, thus in that item making a mistake in favor of his contention, that the importations of April, 1914, were so much greater than those of 1913, of more than $6,000,000. I assume the Senator did that by inadvertence, and that he will correct it.

The Senator showed an increase of $8,881,000 by that improper calculation. The importations of silk for April, 1913, counted on the same basis that the Senator counted them for 1914, were $8,411,000, instead of $2,212,000, as given in the Senator's table. The increased importations were 24 per cent, therefore, instead of 401 per cent, as the Senator declared in this table, put in his speech, and circulated to the country.

Now, let us turn to page 889. The Senator selects a single item in the schedule of manufactures of cotton, "all other knit goods," of which the imports for 1913 were $41,090, in round numbers, and he concludes that the percentage of increase in that item was the enormous amount of 716 per cent. The old duty on this class of goods was from 50 to 63 per cent, and it was in large measure prohibitive, the consumption and production in this country being enormous, and only $41,000 being imported in April, 1913. The duty on these goods has been reduced to 35 per cent, so as to admit of reasonable competition, and so there have been reasonable importations. The total manufactures of cotton goods imported in April, 1913, were $4,796,000, in round numbers, while in April, 1914, they were $5,522,000, being about 15 per cent increase, while for the 10 months ending April, 1914, the imports were $61,773,000, and for the 10 months ending April, 1913, they were $58,262,000, being an increase of only 6 per cent.

In that case the Senator will find that he selected only a single item for comparison during the months of April, 1913 and 1914, while had he used the aggregate of all the items in that article during the months of April, 1913 and 1914, the per cent increase in importations would be only about 15, instead of 716, as stated by him.

The Senator takes up in addition to that, also, the subject of the "parts of automobiles." I wish to call attention to what seems to me to be a very remarkable oversight upon the part of the Senator when he was dealing with the subject of automobiles. The Senator makes a statement there from which it would appear—and that impression has gone out in the country from his speech—that there was an enormous increase in the importations in the automobile business that amounted to as much as 279 per cent. In order to reach that conclusion the Senator selected only "parts of automobiles," and he showed correctly that imports of these parts of automobiles in April, 1914, amounted to $94,000, and in April, 1913, only to $24,000. I presume his mathematics is correct; but right in the line, immediately above the line in the report from which the Senator gets the figures he gives to the country, on page 887, there appear the imports of automobiles for the month of April, 1913, and the month of April, 1914; and from those figures it appears that in April, 1913, there were imported into this country $106,000 worth of automobiles, while in April, 1914, the importations amounted to only $24,000.

In other words, the Senator gives the figures for parts of automobiles, which show over 200 per cent increase in April, 1914, and fails to give to the country the benefit of the facts that appear in the record from which he got his figures, in the very line above, that embrace the whole automobile business and that would have shown that the imports in April, 1913, were about 400 per cent greater than they were in April, 1914.

Of course that may have been an oversight on the part of the Senator; but as he was dealing with this subject, and as he expected his speech to go forth to the American people as indicating the great increase in imports with reference to the products of this great industry, I think ordinary fairness to the Senate and ordinary fairness to the country-wide audience to which he was making this appeal required that he should have given the facts in the column immediately above that, which would have shown the exact reverse of the condition which the Senator found in the importation of parts of automobiles.

There is much I should like to say this morning on this line and on other lines connected with this subject; but I do not feel that I can afford to do it, in justice to the Senate, in view of the present parliamentary situation.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have not the monthly report from the Treasury Department with me, but I will look at the report and at the speech of the Senator when it is printed, and I will answer it hereafter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

THE CALENDAR.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I had supposed the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] would go on with his speech. He is not present, and I ask unanimous consent that the river and harbor bill may be taken up.

Mr. BURTON. The Senator from Iowa said that he would be out of the Chamber until 1 o'clock, and I think it is his intention to be here at that time.

Mr. SIMMONS. If there is any other matter to engage the attention of the Senate, I will not call up the river and harbor bill for only 10 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. SIMMONS. I would suggest, then, that we might take up the calendar for 10 minutes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the calendar will be taken up at the point where its consideration was suspended the last time it was before the Senate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent that we may commence at the point where we left off.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has announced that, without objection, that would be done.

DOMMICK TAHENY AND JOHN W. MORTIMER.

The next business on the calendar was the bill (S. 1058) for the relief of Dommick Taheny and John W. Mortimer, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to pay to Dommick Taheny and John W. Mortimer the sum of $4,801.42, in full payment and satisfaction of their claim against the United States for loss sustained on account of the cancellation of contract for the erection and lease of quarters for the Frankford station of the post office in Philadelphia, Pa.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4601) to authorize the Director of the Census to enumerate the population of the city of Tulsa, State of Oklahoma, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

SETH WATSON.

The bill (S. 1149) to correct the military record of Seth Watson was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Seth Watson, who was a first lieutenant of Company B, Twenty-eighth Regiment United States Colored Volunteer Infantry, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 24th day of June, 1864: Provided, That no pay or bounty shall accrue or become payable by reason of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Seth Watson."

JOHN CHICK.

The bill (S. 4045) to correct the military record of John Chick was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 5, after the word "of," to strike out "Battery" and insert "Company"; in line 8, after the word "said," to strike out "battery" and insert "company"; and on page 2, line 1, after the word "act," to insert "and no pay or bounty shall become due or payable by virtue thereof," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws and the laws conferring rights and privileges upon honorably discharged soldiers, John Chick, late of Company K, Third Regiment United States Artillery, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on the 2d day of August, 1865: Provided, That no pension shall accrue prior to the passage of this act, and no pay or bounty shall become due or payable by virtue thereof.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of John Chick."

LIGHTHOUSE AT WILLAPA HARBOR, WASH.

The bill (S. 3752) to authorize the construction of a lighthouse at Willapa Harbor, Wash., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, on page 1, line 4, after the words "directed to," to strike out "construct a lighthouse" and insert "improve the aids to navigation"; in line 5, after the word "entrance," to strike out "of" and insert "to"; in the same line, after the word "Willapa," to strike out "Harbor" and insert "Bay"; in line 6, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$75,000, which amount is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," and insert "$50,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce is hereby authorized and directed to improve the aids to navigation at the entrance to Willapa Bay, Wash., at a cost not to exceed $50,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to improve the aids to navigation at the entrance to Willapa Bay, Wash."

THE PLAZA CASES.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 129) relating to the awards and payments thereon in what is commonly known as the Plaza cases was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Whereas awards for the payment of property taken in the condemnation proceedings for what is commonly known as the Plaza cases were made some time ago and have been subject to examination by the Department of Justice to be approved by it and other authority; and

Whereas the President has found it impracticable to separate the payments which are not in controversy from those which are, leaving those property owners whose claims are not attacked so that payments can not be made to them, involving great consequent hardship: Now therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the awards and payments thereon to be made in such proceedings be, and are hereby, declared to be severable, so that the Department of Justice and the President may order such awards as are not in question to be paid out of any appropriation made therefor, reserving the remainder for further consideration.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution relating to the awards and payments thereon in what are commonly known as the Plaza cases."

LANDS OF LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE.

The bill (S. 4875) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to exchange rights of way in connection with lands pertaining to the Lighthouse Service was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of Commerce, whenever he shall deem it advisable, to exchange any right of way of the United States in connection with lands pertaining to the Lighthouse Service for such other right of way as may be advantageous to the service, under such terms and conditions as he may deem to be for the best interests of the Government; and in case any expenses are incurred by the United States in making such exchange, the same shall be payable from the appropriation "General expenses, Lighthouse Service," for the fiscal year during which such exchange shall be effected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 15613.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

Mr. CUMMINS rose.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	Martine, N. J.	Smith, Ariz.
Bristow	Gallinger	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Bryan	Goff	Newlands	Smoot
Burleigh	Hollis	Page	Sterling
Burton	Hughes	Perkins	Stone
Camden	Jones	Pittman	Sutherland
Catron	Kenyon	Poindexter	Swanson
Chamberlain	Kern	Ransdell	Thomas
Chilton	Lane	Robinson	Thompson
Clapp	Lee, Md.	Saulsbury	Thornton
Clarke, Ark.	Lippitt	Shafroth	Townsend
Crawford	McCumber	Sheppard	White
Cummins	Martin, Va.	Simmons

Mr. CAMDEN. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. JAMES] is necessarily absent and that he is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. I wish this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is unavoidably detained on official business, and that he is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. This announcement will stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-one Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Iowa will proceed.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, during the course of the debate fears have been expressed that the prohibition contained in this bill against unfair competition and the interposition of the commission with its jurisdiction in working out and making effective that prohibition would in some way impair the strength of the antitrust law, and would permit offenders against the antitrust law to appeal to the commission for some kind of immunity for offenses committed against that statute.

This view, Mr. President, arises from a total misapprehension of the bill. The antitrust law is not touched by the bill under consideration. It is not amended in any way. The offenses under it remain the same. All the remedies for a violation of the antitrust law continue without any modification whatsoever.

In order to make this perfectly clear, although I think it is unnecessary, yet in order to quiet any possible apprehension with regard to this subject, I intend to offer an amendment to section 5. It is an amendment which I think was approved by the committee, attached, however, to another part of the bill when it was believed that the jurisdiction of the commission would be extended to other acts which tend to suppress competition. I hope the chairman of the committee will accept this amendment. I believe that he will, and I now offer it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). The Senator from Iowa offers an amendment to the amendment of the committee, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. Amend section 5 by adding thereto the following proviso:

Provided, That no order or finding of the court or commission in the enforcement of this section shall have any force or effect or be admis-

sible as evidence in any suit, civil or criminal, brought under the antitrust act, nor shall anything contained in this act be construed to alter, modify, or repeal the said antitrust act, or any part or parts thereof.

Mr. CUMMINS. In order that the debate may proceed, as I hope, upon the hypothesis that the section means precisely what I have said, I ask for a vote upon the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. May I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The chairman of the committee has left the Chamber for only a few minutes, and will return quite soon, having asked me to stay during his absence. It seems to me that the amendment offered by the Senator is quite in accord with what I understand to be the general view of the committee, of which we are both members, but I would much prefer that, out of courtesy to the chairman of the committee, the Senator would withhold offering the amendment, as it was not anticipated at this time, until the chairman of the committee returns.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the suggestion of the Senator from Delaware is entirely proper. When I sent the amendment to the desk I had not noticed that the chairman of the committee is absent from the Chamber. There is so large a crowd here, the Senate Chamber is so completely filled, that I did not notice his absence among the many who are present.

Mr. SAULSBURY. May I ask, then, Mr. President, that the amendment lie on the table, with others that have been offered, until we can take up the amendments in the committee and consider them by the committee or members of the committee?

Mr. CUMMINS. I intend to offer it on the floor of the Senate; but I am quite willing that its consideration shall be postponed until the return of the chairman of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that course will be taken.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I repeat that the entire argument based upon the hypothesis that we have attempted in any wise to interfere with the antitrust law is without basis. That statute, one distinguished Senator has said, needs but courage to enforce it. I agree with him. I want to see it enforced, every line and letter of it. It would be most unfortunate if the country were to lose the impetus which in 20 years we have gained through the interpretations of the statute by the Supreme Court of the United States, and courage may well be invoked. I care not how often it is invoked. The spirit of the Department of Justice can not rise too high to meet the demands of the law-abiding people of the United States.

The argument, however, falls to the ground that we ought not to go further, simply because there may have been a want of courage or of persistence in the enforcement of the antitrust law. I am not prepared to say that it has not been enforced with that diligence and zeal that might fairly be expected. The truth is, Mr. President, that the affairs of this country are so tremendous, its business interests are so vast, the complicated commerce of the mightiest country upon the face of the earth is in the hands of a department that is crowded with a vast burden of work, and it is not surprising that now and then an offender under the antitrust law escapes the attention of the Attorney General of the United States and of his assistants.

What we propose to do here is not to arrest the enforcement of the antitrust law, not to weaken its remedies, not to allow any criminal under its provisions to escape, but to add to the Department of Justice an investigating tribunal of high character, of great experience, well equipped to bring to the attention of the Attorney General those instances which may have escaped the inquiries carried on in that department, and thus secure through the Department of Justice a more efficient enforcement of that law.

But we propose to do one thing more. We propose to make it an offense. We propose to make it unlawful for any corporation, or any person, indeed, to practice unfair competition, and wherever the practice of unfair competition has not reached a point that constitutes a violation of the antitrust law, then we intend to do what we can to maintain fair, full, free competition through the intervention of the trade commission.

Mr. President, I have now concluded my review of the bill as it is reported by the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

I said in the beginning, and I repeat, that I have sometimes doubted whether a tribunal of the character described in the bill is warranted unless we add to it other powers having for their general object the maintenance of competition, other powers that will make the commission still more helpful in carrying into effect the principle of the antitrust law.

I offered in the committee certain amendments, and at one time the committee added those features to this bill. I may not be at liberty to speak with much freedom of what happened in the committee, but I can at least express my belief that had it not been for a fear that these amendments embraced subjects that might create discussion, possibly give rise to difference of opinion, and thus delay the passage of the bill, they would now be a part of the measure as reported by the committee.

I reserved when I voted to report the bill which we are now considering the right to offer these amendments on the floor of the Senate. I have proposed them; they have been printed, five of them, and are now at the disposal of the Members of the Senate. I have very serious doubt whether a half dozen of the Members of the Senate have read them. I had doubt yesterday whether that number of Senators had ever read this bill. I deplore the utter lack of interest in this great subject. We are going to pass a bill which with its companions will affect the business of the United States to a degree possibly greater than that of any other statute which has been adopted in recent years, and yet I know that there is no disposition upon the part of Senators to become familiar with the bills or to study the subject which they embrace.

I am not now speaking of the indifference or the disinclination of Senators to listen to addresses. I am an offender in that respect myself. I hold no resentment because Senators are not inclined to hear these bills debated. My regret is founded upon an entirely different reason. I am constrained to believe that we are passing these bills without the individual consideration on the part of Senators which their importance involves. We are all familiar with the general subject. We all know what we desire to accomplish, but these bills are so intricate in their composition, necessarily so, in order to meet an industrial necessity the complication of which no man can exaggerate, that every Senator should study not only the subject but he should ascertain how the evil which is generally admitted can best be overcome.

I take up, Mr. President, the first of these amendments——

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to his colleague?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. KENYON. Before the Senator passes to those amendments I wish to ask him a question purely for information, as I know he has given this problem greater study than any other Member of this body has and I think knows more about it. In subdivision (g) of section 3 there is a provision that I can not find in harmonious relationhip to the bill:

(g) If the commission believes from its inquiries and investigations, instituted upon its own initiative or at the suggestion of the President, the Attorney General, or either House of Congress that any corporation, individual, association, or partnership has violated any law of the United States regulating commerce, it shall report its findings and the evidence in relation thereto to the Attorney General with its recommendations.

There is no provision, as I understand the bill, for the President to initiate any investigation or suggest any investigation. How does the phase "or at the suggeston of the President" get into the bill, what does it have to do with the bill, what does it relate to, and how does it corelate with anything in the bill?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, as I said yesterday, I do not think the commission should act upon the suggestion of the President, and I did what little I could to eliminate that provision from the bill while it was under consideration by the committee. I think the whole subsection might well be stricken out. It does not add to the strength of the bill and probably serves no useful purpose. The truth is, and I am not betraying any confidence because I am not saying anything that anyone ever told me, I am simply giving expression to my own belief, the administration desires that part of the bill. It undoubtedly thinks that this commission should be called into activity upon the suggestion of the President or the Attorney General. I do not think so, but I have not believed that the presence of that provision was sufficiently important to change my general view of the proposed legislation.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. SAULSBURY. May I ask the Senator if he does not think it might add to the value of the bill if the commission could be called upon to assist the office of the Attorney General in a special inquiry at some time respecting the doings of some of the corporations which he may be desirous of prosecuting and possibly this power be used? It, of course, implies the power to investigate at the suggestion of the Attorney General, and could not this power be used with benefit to the administration of justice?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have not believed so. I have always thought that a trade commission, as the Interstate Commerce Commission is, should be an independent tribunal attached to no department of the Government, owing allegiance to no officer of the Government. I think it should be clothed with adequate power of investigation. I think that it should be free to prosecute an investigation whenever it believes that it would serve the public welfare to do so, and if in the course of the investigation a violation of the antitrust law or any other law of the United States relating to this subject is developed, I think it ought to report the result of its investigation to the Attorney General, whose duty it is to prosecute offenders; but I have never thought that we should put into the law a provision that would enable either the President or the Attorney General to command its activities.

The objection to it—and I am now repeating the objection to it that I made before the committee—the objection to it is that, as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] said the other day, there have been times when the antitrust law has been made the instrument, as is alleged, of promoting political fortunes. The President is a political officer; the Attorney General is a political officer connected with the policy of the administration and of the country. The trade commission should not be affected by those influences; and it is my judgment—and I submit it, of course, with great deference to that of the Senator from Delaware—that it will accomplish more—it will establish itself more firmly in the confidence of the people if it acts upon its own motion or acts upon a petition properly brought before it under certain provisions of the bill.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I only desire to suggest that if we should adopt the course suggested by the Senator from Iowa probably all of the investigations that we have been conducting through resolutions of the Senate requesting the Interstate Commerce Commission to act in matters of railroad investigation would have been entirely impossible if the situation had applied to trade or to industrial organizations. While it is not my provision—and I do not profess to uphold it—yet it seems to me it might be very desirable at some time to use the powers given here in an implied fashion to the President or to the Attorney General or to either House of Congress to investigate, through this trade commission, certain violations of what Congress, for example, or the Attorney General or the President might suppose would be the laws of this country; and it might aid very greatly in the administration of justice.

If there is an objection to this commission acting on the suggestion of the President, the Attorney General, or either House of Congress, an amendment to that provision could be very readily made by striking out only two lines and leaving it as suggested by the Senator from Iowa. I have no particular objection to that, except that I think we may be called upon to insert this very provision later on if we now strike it out.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I have not moved to strike it out. I think it ought to be stricken out, but I have not looked upon it as a sufficient objection to this bill to lead me to that course. However, when my colleague asked me what it meant and why it was there I was compelled to answer him candidly and to express my own opinion about it.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Oregon?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I should like to say a word. It seems to me that is about the best provision in the bill, for the reason that it leaves in the hands of the President the power to enforce this law. The people have confidence in the President. There are many times when the Attorney General, the House and Senate, and the commission may be so occupied with other business that they may not be able to act in a sudden emergency which may arise, so that, having an alert and honest President with the interest of the country at heart, he should be given the power to act. People never suspect him of an ill motive unless he is really guilty of one, and if you give him the power to initiate proceedings in cases where the other bodies were slow it would be of inestimable value to give that power directly into his hands. If it should do no other good, it would notify the commission that if they fail to do their duty and fail to be alert the man whom the people look to, their Chief Executive Officer, has power to enforce this law. You can get great good out of that. If the President is not honest or sincere, great harm may be done, and yet we must assume that the President is going to do his duty. It is a valuable provision in my opinion and is about the only provision in it in which I have much confidence.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I know that all the reasons suggested by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] naturally occur to the mind and have great weight; but I think the objection that I have attempted to state overcomes any advantage that might arise from putting the commission under the charge of the President of the United States. There will be no difficulty, Mr. President, in calling into exercise the powers of the commission when any respectable suggestion is made to it with regard to a violation of the law. I take it for granted that if any citizen brings to the commission reasonable ground to believe that a violation of the law exists the commission, in the performance of its duty, will pursue the inquiry. So it would be with the President of the United States, and so with the Attorney General; and there never would be a failure to investigate simply because these officers were not mentioned in the statute.

The objection to the phraseology found in this subsection is that it appears to put the trade commission into a subordinate position; it appears to subject the tribunal to the order of the President or that of the Attorney General. I do not believe that it ought to be thus subordinate; nor do I think, as I have said before, that the advantages that might be gained by expressly declaring that the commission must act at the suggestion of the President or of the Attorney General are great enough to overcome the disadvantages which I have attempted to state.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to call the Senator's attention to one word in the very clause which he has been discussing, which bears on another subject, and that is the word "individual," in line 21. What is the use of that word? As I understand, this act does not give to the commission authority to investigate an individual, yet in this particular clause there would seem to be an indication that it had that authority.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I regret to say that the Senator from Nebraska is right with regard to it. The phraseology of the subsection ought to be amended. It is not the purpose, as I understand, to give this commission the authority substantively to investigate the conduct of an individual, but an individual may violate the antitrust law and, inasmuch as it is the purpose of this subsection to make it the duty of the commission to ascertain whether there had been violations of that statute and report them to the Attorney General, if it found that there had been, it was natural to include the word "individual" and the word "partnership," inasmuch as either an individual or a partnership may be a violator of the antitrust law.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield further?

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to pursue that just a little further, if the Senator has no objection.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield, of course.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not arguing that the commission ought to have authority to investigate an individual, or that it ought not to have such authority; but I am only calling attention to what appears to me to be an inconsistency in the measure. I understand that the Senator from Iowa has said that it is the intention of this bill not to give authority to investigate an individual.

Mr. CUMMINS. It does not give it.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand that; yet in this very particular, to which I am calling the Senator's attention, there is rather an implication that the commission has such authority. Either this word ought to be stricken out, or in the other part of the bill where authority is conferred upon the commission, its authority ought to be extended so as to include the investigation of an individual as well as of a corporation or partnership.

Mr. CUMMINS. That might well be.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. CUMMINS. Allow me to answer the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], and then I will yield to the Senator from Nevada.

I hardly think there is the implication which the Senator from Nebraska believes to exist. There is some confusion, but if the Senator from Nebraska will note the first two lines he will observe that they read:

If the commission believes from its inquiries and investigations—

Whether those inquiries and investigations are initiated by or upon its own motion or whether they are initiated by the suggestion of the President, the Attorney General, or either

House of Congress, they must still be the inquiries, and the investigations which the act authorizes the commission to carry on, and the mere use of the phrase "That any corporation, individual, association, or partnership has violated any law of the United States regulating commerce," does not, in my opinion, enlarge the real power of the commission in conducting inquiries or in making investigations. The Senator from Nebraska can strike it out in a moment; and I think it ought to be stricken out.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). Does the Senator from Iowa yield to his colleague?

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, it seems to me that this is one of the most important questions in the bill, and one about which there is a great difference of opinion. I observe that, even after the caucus of last night, there are only four Senators on the other side of the Chamber. So I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The junior Senator from Iowa suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Overman	Smoot
Bankhead	Hollis	Page	Sterling
Brady	Jones	Perkins	Sutherland
Brandegee	Kenyon	Pittman	Swanson
Burton	Kern	Ransdell	Thompson
Camden	Lane	Reed	Thornton
Chamberlain	Lee, Md.	Saulsbury	Walsh
Chilton	Lippitt	Shafroth	Warren
Clapp	McCumber	Sheppard	Weeks
Cummins	Martin, Va.	Shields	White
du Pont	Martine, N. J.	Simmons	Williams
Fletcher	Newlands	Smith, Ariz.	Works
Gallinger	Norris	Smith, Ga.
Goff	O'Gorman	Smith, Md.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to say, in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] that I realize that this subsection ought to be amended, and I very earnestly hope that the Senator from Nebraska will propose an amendment to it that will render its meaning absolutely clear. I now yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa will permit me, I should like to say a word with reference to the objection urged by the Senator from Nebraska. He calls attention to the fact that in subdivision (g) of section 3 the commission is authorized, if it believes "from its inquiries and investigations, * * * that any corporation, individual, association, or partnership has violated any law of the United States regulating commerce," to "report its findings and the evidence in relation thereto to the Attorney General with its recommendations." He called attention to the fact that the bill does not apply to individuals in other provisions of section 3, but simply to corporations. I wish to call the attention of the Senator to subdivision (a), which gives the commission the power "to investigate * * * the organization," and so forth, "of any corporation engaged in commerce," and also the Senator will observe, "its relation to other corporations and to individuals, associations, and partnerships."

In the course of such investigation of a corporation and its relation to individuals or to partnerships the attention of the commission may be brought to a violation of the Sherman antitrust law, and so it is given the authority, under subdivision (g), to report that to the Attorney General with its recommendations.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator will observe that subdivision (b) employs the same language.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; the same language is used there.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, that point was very carefully gone over yesterday, and I then expressed my opinion about it quite fully.

Once more, Mr. President, I attempt to advance to the amendments which I intend to propose to this bill. The first is a prohibition against the ownership by one corporation of the stock or other means of control of another corporation, the two carrying on a business which is in its nature competitive.

Again I say, Mr. President, that this additional prohibition in nowise affects the antitrust law. Intercorporate stock holding of competitive corporations is one of the things which, taken together with circumstances which we have often seen, constitutes a violation of the antitrust law. I do not propose to in anywise limit or restrict the operation of the antitrust law; but it has been discovered that there are a great many instances in which one corporation holding the stock of another, or a part of the stock of another, will prevent that independence of action, that freedom of trade and business, which we are endeavoring to preserve. Again, it is an effort to maintain competition.

There is another reason why one corporation should not hold the stock of another, the two being competitive. I go further; I believe, as a matter of law and policy, that one corporation ought not to be permitted to own the stock of another under any circumstances. That was the common law; but that probably concerns a field which is beyond, or partially beyond, at any rate, the power of Congress to enter. When two corporations, however, are doing the same kind of business, when the public have a right to believe that they stand as competitors and rivals of each other, it is wrong from every standpoint of wise policy that one of those corporations shall be permitted to control the affairs of the other or influence the affairs of the other by holding a part or all of its capital stock.

I think there is a well-developed public sentiment upon this particular subject. There is no man of any considerable observation or experience but who himself must have seen the unwisdom of permitting two corporations engaged in the same kind of business, holding themselves out to the world as independent organizations, yet commonly managed and controlled because of the ownership of the stock of one by the other. Therefore I propose this amendment as section 6 of the bill:

It shall be unlawful for any corporation engaged in commerce to acquire, own, hold, or control, either directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the capital stock, or other share of capital, or any other means of control or participation in the control of any other corporation also engaged in commerce if the business of such corporations is naturally and by reason of character and location competitive.

This is the substantive law proposed in the section. It prohibits entirely, without any exception, the holding by one corporation of the stock of another if the business of the two is competitive in character.

I may pause here to suggest the other plan that is now before one of the committees of the Senate. In what is known as the Clayton bill there is a somewhat similar prohibition; that is to say, it is intended to cover the same subject; but the prohibition of that bill is that one corporation shall not hold the stock of another if thereby competition is substantially lessened or impaired as between the two corporations.

In my opinion, the bill as it passed the House, while it might be a terror to honest men, would be a shield and a protection for dishonest men. It might create much apprehension on the part of men who do not want to be brought under the condemnation of the law, and who therefore stand far away from the line of danger; but it would be no protection to the public against the scheming men, the men of guile and artifice, because when we are called upon actually to prove that the holding on the part of one corporation of the stock of another has actually lessened the competition as between them, we are called upon to perform a most difficult task.

I believe we ought to take the high, defensible ground that two corporations engaged in the same kind of business must be independent, and that the one must not hold the stock of another. We all know that whether the stockholding is large or small proportionately, it must influence the motives of the managers of the corporations. The stock is not acquired usually for any other purpose than to control or influence or direct the affairs of the corporation whose stock is thus acquired. Moreover, the bill now before the Judiciary Committee as it comes from the House refers only to future transactions. It is made unlawful to acquire in the future stock in this manner, but it practically legalizes and gives immunity to all the unwise, and, I was about to say, immoral relations which exist now between the thousands of corporations which are carrying on business in this country in which there is an intercorporate holding of stock or other means of control. Such is one of the differences between the amendment I have proposed and the bill now pending before the Judiciary Committee.

I have offered the amendment here, however, not so much because there is the difference I have pointed out, but because I believe that again the power and the jurisdiction of the commission can be employed wisely and beneficially to prevent this suppression of competition, this act the tendency of which must necessarily be to destroy or impair freedom of trade. Therefore in my amendment I have conferred upon the trade commission a certain power which I will now read:

The commission is hereby empowered and directed to forbid and prevent such unlawful conditions in commerce in the manner following, to wit:

Whenever the commission shall have reason to believe that any corporation so engaged in commerce has acquired or is owning, holding, or controlling, either directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the capital stock, or other share capital, or any other means of control or participation in the control of any other corporation also engaged in commerce, and that the business of the two or more corporations is naturally and by reason of character and location competitive, it shall issue and serve upon such corporation a written order at least 30 days in advance of the time stated therein for hearing, directing it to appear before the commission and show why an order should not be issued by the commission restraining and prohibiting it from such unlawful acquisition, holding, or controlling, and commanding it to bring itself into conformity with the law; and if upon such hearing the commission shall find that such corporation has acquired, or is holding, owning, or controlling the capital stock, or other share capital or other means of control, or participation in the control, of any other corporation contrary to the provisions of this section, it shall thereupon issue an order in such terms as the circumstances may warrant requiring that the said corporation shall bring itself into conformity with the law by ceasing to acquire, own, hold, or control the whole or any part of the capital stock, or other share capital or any other means of control or participation in the control, of such other corporation or corporations.

The commission may at any time modify or set aside in whole or in part any order issued by it under this section.

If, after the issuance of such an order the commission shall find that such corporation has not complied therewith, it may file a petition in the district court of the United States in any district wherein such corporation is located or carrying on business, praying the court to issue an injunction to enforce its order, and the court is hereby authorized to issue such injunction and to enforce obedience according to the law and the rules applicable in suits in equity: Provided, That this section shall not apply to banks, banking institutions, or common carriers.

I pause a moment to explain my view of the exception I have just read. I have no doubt the principle we are attempting to employ here can be used with great profit in many instances, as among banks and banking institutions; but I do not believe it is wise to draw their regulation into this measure or into any measure that we are proposing to pass at this session. Having created a Federal Reserve Board, the general purpose of which is to supervise the banking interests of the United States, I believe whatever law we pass with regard to the intercorporate stockholding or the interlocking directorates of banking institutions should be a law committed to the Federal Reserve Board for its enforcement and administration, and therefore I have excepted banks and banking institutions from the operation of this section. I have also excepted common carriers.

I will read in a moment a section applicable to common carriers. They are excepted from this section for two reasons: First, that the administration of any law regulating common carriers ought to be intrusted to the Interstate Commerce Commission instead of to the trade commission that we are now establishing. Second, the laws of some States require the ownership of railroads within their borders to be vested in corporations organized under their sovereignty; and in any regulation that we are proposing upon this subject we must remember the entire inability of complete consolidation in a single ownership as to common carriers.

The section has another exception or proviso:

Provided further, That no order or finding of the court or commission in the enforcement of this section shall have any force or effect, nor be admissible as evidence in any suit, civil or criminal, brought under the antitrust acts.

As I have already explained with regard to an amendment which I have offered to section 5, this proviso is intended to leave the antitrust law in all its strength and vigor. It is intended to leave all its provisions untouched. It is intended to leave its administration in the hands to which it is now committed; and the section simply adds a prohibition of an act which, under some circumstances, is forbidden by the antitrust law, but under other circumstances can not be reached by the antitrust law. In other words, the intercorporate stockholding, in order to come within the provisions of the antitrust law, must have proceeded to the extent and must have the effect of an actual restraint of trade or commerce before it can be prevented; and under the interpretation given by the Supreme Court of the United States it must not only have gone to the extent of a restraint of trade or commerce, but that restraint must be undue or unreasonable. I think the American people now demand, and this Congress is ready to give to the people, this further relief against the incipient stages of the war to preserve competition, so that we may prevent in the very beginning those relations which will finally lead these corporations into conflict with the antitrust law.

The second amendment which I offer——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I desire to ask the Senator a question or two about the amendment he has already read; but if he prefers to go on with the other amendment first I will gladly wait.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am quite willing to yield now.

Mr. NORRIS. I wanted to ask the Senator what would be the objection to a simple prohibition against the holding by one corporation of the stock of another corporation engaged in interstate commerce? I do not know, of course, but that there may be, and perhaps are, reasons for exceptions to the rule; but why could we not simplify it by simply prohibiting corporations engaged in interstate commerce from holding the stock of any other corporations?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am not prepared to say that we could not do it. It is, however, a doubtful exercise of power.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator thinks it is of doubtful constitutionality. Is that the idea?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do. I am of the opinion that we have the power to do it; but inasmuch as all we are trying to do is to keep the competitive force in operation, I have hesitated to go to the length that is suggested by the Senator from Nebraska, fearing that the attempt might be overthrown.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator does, in this amendment, prohibit the ownership of stock in some corporations.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely. It must be remembered that we are acting all the while under the constitutional power to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations. Everything that we do, in order to be valid, must be a regulation of interstate commerce or foreign commerce. To prohibit a corporation from owning the stock of any other corporation, even though it had no effect and could have no effect upon commerce among the States, enters a doubtful field.

Mr. NORRIS. I will say to the Senator that my question does not go to that. I have confined it to corporations engaged in interstate commerce. If we should by a simple amendment provide that no corporation engaged in interstate or foreign commerce should be permitted to hold the stock of any other corporation, is there any doubt about that being constitutional?

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the court would inquire why we prohibited it. Why do we prohibit it?

Mr. NORRIS. That question could be very easily answered. It is not difficult to answer it.

Mr. CUMMINS. We are not the sovereign creating the corporation. It is not for us to say what is wise or what is unwise for the corporation to do, except as it involves its conduct in commerce among the States.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, and we have confined it to those corporations.

Mr. CUMMINS. If we were to prohibit a corporation which was carrying on a dry-goods business from owning any stock in a corporation engaged, we will say, in buying and selling coal, we would have to point out in what injurious way the intercorporate stockholding would affect commerce. Now, when we prohibit two corporations which are doing a competitive business from owning one the stock of the other, we are able to point out at once the evident fact that the ownership of the stock by one corporation has a tendency to destroy independence of action, and therefore to impair competition. I believe Congress has the power to exclude any corporation from entering interstate commerce.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. But there are very few who are willing to go to that extent.

Mr. NORRIS. Take the illustration the Senator has given, that of prohibiting a dry goods company from owning stock in a coal company. Of course, the theory of my suggestion is to simplify the law.

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. It would be quite easy to draft the amendment. Now, what hardship could or would ever come to a dry goods company if it could not own the stock of a coal company?

Mr. CUMMINS. Personally I do not believe in laying the hand of the law upon commerce and interrupting the freedom of individual action unless it is necessary to accomplish some purpose.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course the Senator understands the purpose. The evil that he is trying to strike at is apparent to him, of course, or he never would have offered the amendment he has offered. He recognizes by his amendment that there is a great evil where one corporation holds the stock of another.

Mr. CUMMINS. When they are competitive corporations.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. CUMMINS. When they are doing a competitive business there is a very great evil, and one that is recognized, I believe, by every thinking man.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. I think everybody will concede that, and while I am not saying that there are not legitimate objections, I can not see them, and I was asking mainly for information. If we should make it the simplest amendment we could possibly get it would be to exclude such ownership entirely.

Mr. CUMMINS. There are just two objections, as they appear in my mind. The first is the inadvisability of restricting the freedom of action in cases in which it is not necessary and in which interstate commerce can not be injuriously affected. The second—and it is the one which has been most potential with me—is the doubt that many people feel and express as to our constitutional power thus to deal with corporations created by the several States.

Mr. NORRIS. We could exclude them entirely from interstate commerce.

Mr. CUMMINS. It is so asserted.

Mr. NORRIS. And we can let them enter interstate commerce on whatever conditions we please.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am inclined to think we could attach any condition which we deemed best to their entrance upon interstate commerce; but I wanted to accomplish something; I wanted to get near the evil; and I did not want to present a statute which we must fight for over a course of years before we know whether or not it can be enforced.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, I want to accomplish something, too. I thought perhaps we might be able to do it by a simple and very short amendment instead of all this machinery.

Now let me ask another question. Suppose we provide by amendment that it shall be unlawful for any corporation engaged in interstate commerce to own any of the capital stock of any other corporation engaged in a competitive business, and then provide a penalty for such ownership?

Mr. CUMMINS. The difficulty then is that the section would never be enforced.

Mr. NORRIS. That would not be so difficult to enforce——

Mr. CUMMINS. It would be impossible to enforce in many instances.

Mr. NORRIS. It strikes me it would be quite simple.

Mr. CUMMINS. I will tell the Senator why. When you come to ascertain what are competitive businesses you have entered a very difficult field. You might think the business of furnishing gas was competitive with that of furnishing electric light, or the business of furnishing coal was competitive with that of furnishing the same power by electricity; but it is not fair to ask the business people of this country to determine such matters for themselves and be held criminals if they determine the issue incorrectly.

I could give the Senator from Nebraska instances by the half hour, I believe, in which there would be inevitably great differences of opinion as to whether a corporation doing this business is competitive with a corporation doing that business, or whether a corporation doing business in New York is competitive with one doing the same business in Chicago.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator has not avoided that difficulty by his amendment. The first suggestion I made, if applied, would, of course, have avoided it entirely.

Mr. CUMMINS. Yes; I have avoided the difficulty because the trade commission takes possession of the matter at that point, and it calls the corporation involved before it and it enters upon a hearing, the inquiry being, Has the corporation violated the law? If the commission finds that the corporation has violated the law, it commands the corporation to cease; and if it does not cease, the commission then applies the most effective remedy known to modern times—the injunction of a court.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me suggest right there what, it seems to me, is one difficulty, and has been all the time, with the Sherman antitrust law. The Senator says injunction is the most effective remedy; but from the time the illegality begins until it is finally determined by the Supreme Court of the United States enough time elapses for the offending corporation to make a profit out of the business while the prosecution is going on.

Mr. CUMMINS. Unfortunately, there is no way of preventing that.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me the weakness of this amendment is that there is no provision here by which a corporation doing an illegal business or holding illegally stock in another corporation is in any way penalized. It runs no risk whatever, and in the meantime years and years elapse while the case is going on and getting up to the Supreme Court; and the corporation may lose in the end, and yet make millions of dollars by the transaction.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr President, I appreciate the position taken by the Senator from Nebraska. There are two schools of thought in this country. One school believes that we can regulate commerce by heading the whole business world toward the penitentiary. The other school believes that we can best regulate it by the interposition of the courts, or a tribunal created for that purpose, that will prevent by reaching out its arm in the way of an injunction. I do not believe there is a jury on earth that would ever convict a corporation for a violation of this statute or any similar one if there was fair reason to believe among honest men that the two kinds of business were not competitive. The result would be that the wrong would go unchecked; and, further, they ought not to be penalized if there is a fair chance for difference of opinion.

Mr. NORRIS. I would not penalize them. Let the jury permit those corporations to escape if anybody prosecutes them; but there is another line of people where that does not enter. The Senator, it seems to me, has taken an unfair illustration for his case.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator must not forget that he still has the antitrust law with all its penalties, with all its criminal provisions, under which men who do restrain trade and commerce can be convicted, can be fined, and the fines may accumulate in a very large amount. I am not trying to impair that law; I am trying to add something that will take a lesser violation of the law of competition, a condition that if permitted to exist will finally eventuate in a restraint of trade or commerce. I can not be convinced that in order to reach those instances we ought to attach a severe criminal penalty, because it always has failed, and it always will fail.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand the antitrust law still exists, and the Senator by this amendment is adding to the antitrust law. He is making something illegal that was not necessarily illegal before.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is true.

Mr. NORRIS. But he has no penalty attached. If the thing complained of is wrong and it is not right to penalize the officers of a corporation by a fine for doing it, then there should be a penalty by way of a fine against the corporation so that it would not be profitable for them to violate the law.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not say that I would resist an amendment that would attach a criminal penalty to a violation of this section. After a great deal of thought I do not believe that that is the way in which the law can be best enforced. I believe that in nine cases out of ten a fine imposed upon a corporation is simply passed on to that great company that is sometimes designated as the ultimate consumers. My idea is to stop the wrong. I do not want it to go on and accumulate fines for the corporation to pay.

Here is a summary proceeding that can be put into execution just as rapidly as the trade commission can act, and I hoped that this additional protection, additional to the antitrust law, would furnish an instrumentality that would work well for the American people.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator did not get the idea that I am asking these questions in any critical sense whatever.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know the Senator is not.

Mr. NORRIS. I am in sympathy with the purpose of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I know the Senator from Nebraska is just as much interested and as heartily in favor of anything that will open up and keep open the channels of trade in this country as I am. I do not take his interruption as hostile at all.

Mr. NORRIS. But it seems to me whatever we decide by statute is wrong we ought to make it unprofitable for any corporation to engage in. My criticism of the Senator's amendment is that so much time can elapse by a corporation paying no heed except as it has to defend in court against the order of this commission that it could continue the illegal act clear to the end, which means several years of litigation, and it may profit out of it. There ought to be a provision somewhere in the bill, it seems to me, that would make it unprofitable.

I am not one of those who believe that this kind of legislation can be extended very much. I should like to extend it if it were practicable. I agree with the Senator that it is very often impossible to get the real criminal, and that we try some stool pigeon who is put forward, who occupies some clerical position and send him to jail. Sometimes we may get the real criminal, perhaps, but not often. However, if we made by law this business unprofitable as a financial proposition corporations would not engage in it. Therefore it seemed to me that the first suggestion, to simply prohibit by law with a proper penalty, either by imprisonment or by fine, or both, the ownership by a corporation engaged in interstate commerce of the stock of another corporation, would meet it completely, unless it can be shown that it would be some hardship for a corporation engaged in legitimate business.

Mr. CUMMINS. I would not at all object; but I would not want it to take the place of the provisions that I have made here for administering the law partially through the commission. The whole end suggested by the Senator from Nebraska can be reached if he will prepare a section to be added to the bill, and, until recently, I thought it was in this bill; I know it was at the close of the bill we originally considered in the Interstate Commerce Committee; that includes all these regulations, namely, that any violation of this act shall be punished by a fine or imprisonment, and so forth. I do not think I would object to that kind of a provision. I hope the Senator from Nebraska will reflect upon it and offer it if he believes it ought to be here, although, I repeat, the efficacy, the real efficiency of this legislation, in my opinion, will lie in the prevention of these unlawful conditions rather than in punishment, either by fine or imprisonment, for their violation.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. BURTON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio suggests the absence of a quorum. Let the Secretary call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cummins	Overman	Smith, Md.
Bankhead	Gallinger	Page	Smoot
Brady	Goff	Perkins	Sutherland
Brandegee	Hughes	Pittman	Swanson
Burton	Kern	Ransdell	Thomas
Camden	Lee, Md.	Saulsbury	Thornton
Chamberlain	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	White
Chilton	Newlands	Shields
Clapp	Norris	Simmons
Clarke, Ark.	O'Gorman	Smith, Ariz.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Less than a quorum of the Senate is present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. SHAFROTH, Mr. STONE, and Mr. WEEKS answered to their names when called.

Mr. NELSON, Mr. REED, Mr. SHIVELY, Mr. HOLLIS, Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. JONES, and Mr. POMERENE entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. CLAPP. I think it should be stated for the RECORD that the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] is detained from the Senate on account of illness.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Pending that, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah moves that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. KERN. I hope that the Senator from Utah will not insist on that motion at this time. We lack but two of a quorum, and if the Senator will allow——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The motion is not debatable. I ask that the question be put.

The Senate refused to adjourn, there being, on a division—ayes 11, noes 18.

Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. WALSH, Mr. LANE, Mr. BRISTOW, and Mr. BRYAN entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). Fifty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The Senator from Iowa will proceed.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I realize the embarrassment under which Senators are laboring. I think three-fourths of the Members of the Senate are now engaged in the sessions of committees. I give notice now that I intend to-morrow morning to offer a resolution that no committee of the Senate shall sit during the sessions of the Senate without a special order. It is entirely unfair to command Senators to be in two places at the same time.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I agree entirely with what the Senator from Iowa says. I think it is a disgrace and a farce for the Senate of the United States to have its Judiciary Committee in session considering one far-reaching bill and its Interstate Commerce Committee in session considering another, and a third bill which the Interstate Commerce Committee has been considering for months, all three of the bills involving the most intricate, far-reaching, technical, obscure questions, and a corporal's guard of Senators here when the Senator who has made as exhaustive a study as anyone in this body or in the country, of all these bills, is attempting to explain one of them, to have his remarks punctured every five minutes by a declaration of one of his colleagues that he observes only four or six Senators on the floor, and therefore he suggests the absence of a quorum.

I call attention to this situation because it is a disgrace and a farce for the Senate and the Congress to attempt to foist upon the country legislation on these fundamental and grave subjects when Senators themselves will not pay any attention to them, and when Senators themselves know, with the serious differences of opinion which exist among themselves, with this method of procedure of committee hearings and Senate sessions going on at the same time, finally, under the whip and spur of party domination and White House influence, they are going to be forced uninformed to vote yes or no upon a lot of half-baked legislation, containing definitions which themselves will require years of court decisions to define, under the fake plea that the twilight zone under which business has been suffering and halting for years is going to be illuminated, when it does not take more than an alderman or a councilman who will read the bills to know that, instead of illuminating anything, they are going to hopelessly obscure every subject with which they deal, if they are passed in anything like their present form.

I am glad to hear the Senator say he will protest against committee meetings preparing more ill-considered legislation to be dumped upon this body in the heat of summer and on the eve of a country-wide political campaign until Senators can get here and consider what has been already prepared and vote upon it intelligently. It is not doing justice to the business interests of the country. If the business interests of the country realized in what a foolish, not to say contemptuous, manner their gravest affairs were being tampered with and flippantly trifled with by the highest legislative body in the country, there would be a good deal more dissatisfaction and a great deal more drooping in the business world than there is to-day.

The Senator gives notice that he will not consent that this debate shall go on when different committees shall be preparing more nuts to be cracked and more legislative problems to be solved at the same time when Senators are attempting to inform the Senate upon those already here. My suggestion to him is that these committees are already sitting under a special order of the Senate authorizing them to so sit, and those resolutions will have to be reconsidered.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not so understand it, Mr. President. It may be that they are, but——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. In just a moment. I do not agree with the Senator from Connecticut with regard to the character of this legislation. I am for much of it, and I know that he is against some of it. But that does not change our concurrence with regard to the manner in which the Senate of the United States is now conducting itself. It is a disgrace to the law of the country and to the civilization of which we are a part. I have known within the last few days of the Judiciary Committee sitting to consider one of the bills concerning this subject; at the same time the Interstate Commerce Committee sitting to consider another of the bills which constitute a part of the general program, and another still of the bills being before the Senate for its consideration. I believe in this legislation, but it is an insult to the intelligence of the people of this country that we shall debate and pass these bills without the most mature thought upon the part of those who are responsible for passing them.

I am not criticizing the Senators a particle. I know the embarrassment, as I said a moment ago, which they suffer. I know how imperious the demand is that Senators sit in the Judiciary Committee and that they sit in the Interstate Commerce Committee, and that they sit in the appropriation committees and that they sit in conference at the same time. I wonder that there are any Senators who feel free to deliberate upon the legislation and so prepare themselves for the performance of their final duty.

But, Mr. President, I did not——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

Mr. CUMMINS. I hope Senators will not think that I am objecting because I happen to be at this time discussing the bill. I am interested in the bill. I want the best legislation that can possibly come out of all this agitation, and I think it is unfair to the Senators themselves that they should be required to sit in the discharge of their duties in committees while they, at least, ought to be given an opportunity to study the bill that is about to pass.

I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I regret as the Senator does, that there is not a larger attendance in the Senate upon this debate, but I suggest that a solution can be reached that will facilitate the orderly disposition of these three bills so that the Senate may not be in session engaged in the consideration of one whilst the Judiciary Committee is in session considering another; that is, that we should fix a time for a vote on this bill. If we can fix that time within this week, Friday, or on next Monday, then the Judiciary Committee will have an opportunity, without being diverted by the consideration of a pending trust bill, to sit for two or three days upon the measure which they are now considering, and to bring it to a conclusion.

With reference to the bill that is now pending before the Interstate Commerce Committee, the securities bill, I will say that that is a very simple bill with reference to the control of stock and bond issues. The committee has had it under consideration for some time.

Mr. CUMMINS. It seems to be quite "simple" in view of the hearings we have had concerning it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I mean it is focused now where we can easily decide the question, and it is focused by reason of the careful consideration given to it in addition to that given by the committee itself, by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and by a committee consisting of Mr. Brandeis and Mr. Rublee and by a committee of the leading railroad men of the country. The whole transaction is now being focused in such a way as to enable a very easy solution by the committee if we could only have two or three hour sessions. It seems to me the way to get such sessions is to dispose of the pending bill.

Let me say that I think that the sparse attendance here during this debate is accounted for by the fact that the Senate has made up its mind regarding the bill, that it wants to vote upon it about as unanimously as did the other House and about as unanimously as the assembled boards of trade of the country have voted upon it in the recent referendum that was made and about as unanimously as public opinion seems to be made up on the subject.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon an inquiry?

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator will just permit me to be consecutive and not to be diverted, I prefer not to be interrupted.

Mr. President, this is no new subject——

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not yield for a debate on this bill. I am debating the bill. If the Senator from Nevada has anything to say——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Of course I am under the control of the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator from Nevada has anything to suggest with regard to the explosion which has just occurred, I will gladly yield to him for that purpose, but to an argument on the merits of the bill I do not yield.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I rose to suggest a solution as to the orderly disposition of this question, but if the Senator from Iowa proposes to take me off the floor, of course I will yield.

Mr. CLAPP. I simply wanted to remind the Senator from Nevada that the referendum to which he refers was taken before the bill was amended so as to give the commission the power to deal with competition.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am only going to take a moment longer. I will say to the Senator from Iowa, that I have refused to indulge interruptions simply out of consideration of the fact that I was taking the Senator's time and am subject to his indulgence regarding it.

I repeat, this is no new measure. It was considered in the latter part of the Taft administration by the then Interstate Commerce Committee and amended there. If Senators will look over the bill that was introduced by me in 1911 and was tentatively amended by the Interstate Commerce Committee under the leadership of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], they will find it almost identical with the bill which is now presented. So for over three years we have had this matter under consideration so far as the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee is concerned, and the House has had it under consideration for six months. The mind of the House and the mind of the Senate is made up on the subject. Why not have a time fixed for a vote, so that we can then hold the sessions of the Interstate Commerce Committee and dispose of the securities bill and so that the Judiciary Committee can report their bill to the Senate?

Mr. CUMMINS. I assume, Mr. President, that the Senator from Nevada is not at all serious in the remarks that he has made.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will suggest that I am absolutely serious.

Mr. CUMMINS. If I thought the Senator was serious, I might be offended; but, knowing his humorous disposition, I do not take offense.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I hope that the Senator will have no cause for offense, for I am quite sure it would be imaginary.

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly; I take no offense.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish the Senator from Iowa to understand that I have the highest appreciation of the very thorough manner in which he has been going through this bill, and I am sure that the committee is very much indebted to him for it. I have no disposition to cut short his time; but I have inquired on both sides of the Chamber as to whether there are other Senators who wish to speak. I have been able to find but a few, and they desire to speak only briefly. I think that this bill can be disposed of——

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator from Nevada is serious, then I am offended. I did not suppose he was serious. If he rose to say that I ought not to continue this discussion, I resent it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I did not.

Mr. CUMMINS. But I do not yet believe that he meant what he said.

Mr. NEWLANDS. On the contrary, I rose to disclaim any such suggestion.

Mr. CUMMINS. No matter, Mr. President, what was the object in the Senator's mind, I intend to continue the discussion until I have concluded it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I hope the Senator will.

Mr. CUMMINS. And I am just entering upon a discussion of——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. CUMMINS. I will do so in just a moment. I am just entering upon a discussion of certain amendments concerning which nothing has yet been said. It is sought to show that this is the bill which the Senator from Nevada introduced a few years ago. No one, I suppose, would debate very long the propriety of allowing investigation and inquisition; but we have added to this bill provisions which make it an effectual instrument in accomplishing some things, and those things are new, absolutely new, and were never before proposed in any bill introduced in Congress or anywhere else.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. CUMMINS. I am for those things, and I am doing my best to maintain them; and I am very sorry to see that the Senator from Nevada is so unmindful of the little service I am trying to render him and his committee. Now, I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Iowa if he has not offered several amendments to this bill which have been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary with the consent of the Committee on Interstate Commerce?

Mr. CUMMINS. I proposed those amendments, five in number, and they were referred to the Judiciary Committee, but in this miserable tangle in which we find ourselves, the bill to which they are offered as amendments comes on for a vote before there is any report or even consideration by the Judiciary Committee. So I am compelled to offer them now, and I am offering them now, and I want to have a vote upon them as soon as I have concluded my observations upon them.

Mr. SIMMONS. The amendments the Senator now offers have been heretofore offered and have been referred to the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. CUMMINS. They were referred to the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. They were so referred by order of the Senate. I want to ask the Senator from Nevada if it is his purpose to insist upon a vote on this bill before the Judiciary Committee has time to act upon those amendments? I have been advised that the Judiciary Committee have been considering those amendments, and that it is their purpose to report those amendments one way or the other back to the Senate. Does the Senator from Nevada want to take a vote upon his bill before the committee has made its report upon those amendments?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I understand that the Judiciary Committee has taken action upon those amendments. Perhaps the Senator from Iowa can inform me.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not know; unfortunately being compelled to be here during the time that the Judiciary Committee was acting upon those amendments, I could not be there even to vote in favor of my own propositions.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state, Mr. President, that the amendments offered by the Senator from Iowa cover matters that are in the bill that came from the other House called the Clayton bill, now pending in the Judiciary Committee. The Senator from Iowa proposes to transfer those matters from that bill to this bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not propose to do any such thing. I proposed these amendments to this bill before there was any bill in the House of Representatives. I think the Senator from Nevada will remember that.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Well, what I mean to say is, that the Senator proposes to put upon this bill a subject matter that is included in the Clayton bill, which is now before the Judiciary Committee. I myself was for a long time in doubt as to the practice of the Interstate Commerce Committee when this matter was first presented to us, as to whether it might not be advisable to consider those subjects in connection with this bill; but the Interstate Commerce Committee by a vote determined it was not advisable. So I feel it my duty to press this bill, notwithstanding the Judiciary Committee has that matter under consideration.

Let me say one word to the Senator from Iowa. I regret very much that he has misapprehended anything that I have said. If the Senator will look over the RECORD I think he will find that there was no reason for misapprehension. The Senator could not have heard me distinctly. I do not feel disposed at all to limit the argument of the Senator or to attempt to limit in any way his argument or the consideration of the amendments which he proposes. I am speaking simply of action after the Senator closes, with a view to fixing a time for a vote within a short period, the bill having already been under consideration for a week.

Mr. CUMMINS. So far as I am concerned, we can have a vote this afternoon——

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] said that he would at any time lay aside his discussion provided we could have a vote.

Mr. CUMMINS. Provided I finish what I have to say.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That was the disposition of the Senator from Idaho, and I assume the Senator from Iowa himself, interested as he is in this bill and a warm advocate of it as he is, would like an early disposition of it.

So far as the bill is concerned, the Senator says that it differs from the one that was introduced some years ago by myself. Well, it does differ from that bill, but the Senator will recollect that that bill was very materially changed in the then Committee on Interstate Commerce and that we had valuable suggestions and the aid of the Senator from Iowa. No one was more active in the shaping of that tentative measure than was he; and I am speaking of the tentative measure, the measure that was tentatively approved in the Interstate Commerce Committee, and the Senator will find it almost identical with this bill, with the exception that this bill has an additional section regarding unfair competition.

Mr. CUMMINS. That is the whole subject of debate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa permit me to ask the Senator from Nevada a question?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada whether he is opposed to the amendments which have been suggested by the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am not opposed to legislation on that question; on the contrary, I am in favor of it, but I think that legislation should go upon the bill that is now before the Judiciary Committee and not upon this bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The bill which is pending before the Judiciary Committee proposes to treat this matter in an altogether different way. That bill simply proposes to prohibit these particular things—intercorporate stockkholding, and so on—by substantive legislation, leaving it to the courts to enforce the prohibition. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa to this bill proposes that the interstate trade commission shall deal with the subject. I asked the question in entire good faith, because, I will say to the Senator from Nevada, that, as between the two propositions, if we are to have a trade commission—and I am not in favor of the trade commission proposed by the bill of the Senator from Nevada—but if we are to have such a body, I think the method proposed by the Senator from Iowa is the preferable method of dealing with these questions. The Senator from Nevada is chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee and has given this matter very great attention. I should be very glad to learn whether the Senator is in favor of these amendments as they are proposed to this bill or opposed to them; and if opposed to them, very briefly why the Senator opposes them?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will state to the Senator that I have amendments now pending before the Judiciary Committee that cover the ground of interlocking directorates and holding companies and which cover my views of the legislation that should be enacted upon this subject. I hope that this bill will be passed and that the Judiciary Committee will, in legislating upon that subject, submit the enforcement of the law to the interstate trade commission. That is one reason why I should like this bill to go through as early as possible, so that we could have an interstate trade commission in existence, which could be charged with certain duties under the legislation on this subject in the Clayton bill.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me just for a moment?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, I have felt very strongly that this bill ought not to be disposed of until there has been a report from the Judiciary Committee upon questions that have been submitted to that committee and which are closely related to the subjects that are being discussed under the bill that is now pending before the Senate. What the Senator from Nevada has just said, I think, is a very good illustration of the desirability of at least having a report before this body that will give the views of the Judiciary Committee as to what legislation the Senate ought to pass in regard to the whole subject of trade legislation before we undertake to deal with a part of it. The Senator from Nevada says he hopes that when the Judiciary Committee reports the trade commission may be in existence, so that there can then be referred to them certain duties in regard to certain questions that are not now included in the bill before the Senate; in other words, he has in his mind, almost before this bill is dry from the printer, to suggest further amendments to be made to it and to suggest further duties that shall be given to the commission. It seems to me that on a question which is one of the most fundamental questions that has ever come before this body, a question which is going to rearrange the entire relations which the Government of this country bears to the people of this country, which deals with the largest and the most important matter in which the people of this country are interested, namely, the question of how they are going to earn their living from day to day, that it should not be taken up in any partial and haphazard method, but that we should have laid before us the whole field of operations which it is proposed to cover before we attempt decisively to commit ourselves to any particular part of such a measure.

The Senator from Nevada has referred to the securities bill as being a very simple bill. I do not regard that bill as being a simple bill in any way. We have had before our committee for the last month or more some of the ablest men in the United States, discussing that bill for hours and disagreeing with each other as to its most important features. We have had representatives of the Interstate Commerce Commission; we have had representatives of the people; we have had representatives of the railroads; and they have substantially been discussing simply one section, one idea contained in that bill.

In addition to that, there is another feature of it which has been discussed to much less extent, which proposes to give the most extraordinary powers to the Interstate Commerce Commission, powers which they do not now have, powers which would enable them to go into the papers and into the houses of private individuals under certain circumstances—a most far-reaching measure.

It does not seem to me that there is any necessity for haste about these matters. The Senate sat here for two months and discussed a question in connection with the Panama Canal, in which at the outside not over $2,000,000 was involved. Here is a question in which billions of dollars are involved, and the Senator suggests that he thinks we ought not to take much time in discussing it. I really think the Senator is not looking upon this question from the right standpoint, and I think it is very important and necessary really to a proper understanding and proper disposition of these measures that we should await the report of the Judiciary Committee on the correlated subjects that have been committed to them.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, the pathetic interest of Senators on the other side that the amendments offered by the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] to the trade commission bill shall be considered by another committee than the one which has had the trade commission bill under consideration, and that something else shall be done before anything is done, has very greatly appealed to me. I have tried to obtain the amendments to which the Senators on the other side have referred, which have been offered by the Senator from Iowa, because I wanted to convince myself if such a great exigency existed. To one of these amendments—I have only been able to obtain three—I want to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa. I refer to the one prohibiting interlocking directorates in connection with common carriers. There is not a word——

Mr. CUMMINS. If the Senator will allow me, I have not yet reached that amendment, and I prefer that there should not be a speech made against it until I have proposed it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not propose to make a speech. I simply want the Senators on the other side to indicate whether they wish this amendment, which is proposed to the interstate trade commission bill, to be considered, when it has absolutely no connection with that bill, before we do anything with the trade commission bill. We are trying to get something done in the Senate on the trade commission bill, and why an amendment regarding the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is now in the hands of the Judiciary Committee, although offered in form as an amendment to the trade commission bill, should be considered or should be so pathetically alluded to I do not understand.

Mr. CUMMINS. Possibly I will be able to tell the Senator, if he will allow me to present the amendment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I shall be delighted to hear the Senator.

Mr. CUMMINS. But the Senator's zeal ought not to outrun the orderly procedure here. I am now presenting the amendment relating to intercorporate stockholding, and I will give the Senator from Delaware abundant opportunity to interrupt me when I reach the amendment to which he has just referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it is always difficult to determine just how far one should comment upon his general observation of matters which do not constitute a part of the record of the Senate. I have been somewhat disappointed in the course of the preparation of this bill, and, in view of what the Senator from Nevada has said, I intend to state what I recollect with regard to it.

A subcommittee, consisting of seven Senators, took up this subject on behalf of the Interstate Commerce Committee. I happened to be one of the subcommittee. By a unanimous vote of all the Senators present—and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] was one of those Senators—it was resolved that all legislation that was to be presented to the Senate for consideration at this session should be included in a single bill; that is to say, the subject matter of the commission bill presented in the House, the subject matter of the Clayton bill presented in the House, and the subject matter of the Rayburn bill presented in the House should be included within a single measure. Thereupon we deliberated, not only as to the formation of a commission, but as to the powers of that commission with regard to interlocking directorates, trade practices, holding companies, and other things of that kind; and the subcommittee reported to the full committee a bill which contained in substance the very sections that I am now offering. The procedure before the commission provided in that bill was not just the same, but it was substantially the same, and in so far as there has been a change, that change was made to meet the views of the Senator from Nevada.

At that time the section with regard to unfair competition was not a part of the bill. When we reached that point the Senator from Nevada, and very properly—I did not object to it at all—thought that we ought to report the commission bill pure and simple, a bill simply creating a trade commission and giving it the power of investigation, and hold in the committee the other sections for future report as amendments to the commission bill, if the committee thought it proper to do so.

Just about that time there appeared what is now known as the "unfair competition" section in a bill introduced by Mr. STEVENS, a Representative from New Hampshire, in the House. There was no more reason for attaching that section to this bill than for attaching to it the sections relating to interlocking directorates and holding companies, for the relation of the commission to unfair competition is exactly the same as its relation to the other conditions which we desire to prevent. But there came an influence, as I believe, from the President of the United States, that was sufficient to insert the unfair competition section. I was glad to see it inserted; I am thoroughly in favor of it; but that same influence prevented the inclusion of the sections with regard to interlocking directorates and intercorporate stockholding, because, as I assume, the power that determined both the form and substance here concluded that the prohibition contained in the Clayton bill before the Judiciary Committee was better and more efficient upon those things than a reference to the commission, as had been provided in our original bill.

I am not proposing any new subject; I am proposing sections that have been formulated in the Interstate Commerce Committee and have received the approval from time to time of a majority of the members of that committee. I do not mean that the precise phraseology in which these amendments are now found has been approved by the members of the Interstate Commerce Committee, but the principle that these subjects should be dealt with by the commission has the approval of the Interstate Commerce Committee, and it is keeping the promise to the ear and breaking it to the hope to now refer it to the Judiciary Committee and to suggest that they may become parts of the bill which that committee has under consideration. They will come from that committee without any reference to the trade commission, for I believe—I am not disclosing any confidences—that a majority of the Judiciary Committee are opposed to a commission in any form, to the establishment of a commission, to the conferring of any power upon a commission, especially the power to deal with conditions like unfair competition, interlocking directorates, and the like. Now, that is the history, Mr. President, of these things.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Senator's statement is in the main correct, and I will not say it is incorrect in any particular so far as I know. I have nothing to say about the influences to which he alludes. I will simply say that as an original matter, unsuggested by anybody, when I saw the state of legislation in the House regarding the three matters to which the President's message was directed—namely, a trade commission, supplemental legislation on the trust question, and railway securities—I thought there might be a time when it would be advisable to join them all in one bill in the Senate with a view to expediting action. With that view I acquiesced, so far as I was concerned, in the consideration of all these questions by the committee, taking the view that if we did not include all this legislation in one measure at all events we would be receiving education upon most important matters that were coming before the Senate for its consideration.

While I acquiesced in the consideration of all these three questions by the subcommittee to which the Senator alludes, I stated again and again—and the Senator will bear me out in that assertion—that I reserved to myself the right at any time, according to my judgment, to move their segregation, and the confinement of our legislation, so far as our committee was concerned, to subjects strictly relating to a straight commission bill.

Subsequently the legislation took such shape in the House and here that I became satisfied that it would be better to present to this body a purely trade-commission bill, for I feared that if we connected with the bill other matters concerning which the supporters of a trade-commission bill differed, we would diminish the support given to it, and so I adhered to a trade-commission bill.

It is true, as the Senator says, that a suggestion was made with reference to including unfair competition by Mr. Stevens of the House, Mr. Rublee, and Mr. Brandeis. That matter was presented to me, as it was to other members of the committee of both parties. I thought it was eminently a matter that should be covered within the jurisdiction of the interstate trade commission. It was presented to the President, and that was his view, and the matter was presented to the committee later on and was accepted.

Mr. LIPPITT and Mr. GALLINGER addressed the Chair.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to say that one reason why I was entirely satisfied that we could do without any legislation whatever with reference to interlocking directors and intercorporate stock holdings was that I believed that those conditions could be reached through this provision regarding unfair competition.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator just one question.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I believe those practices constitute a part of the numerous practices that relate to unfair competition.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator right there——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. CUMMINS. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. Did I understand the Senator to say that Mr. Brandeis was the author of the suggestion concerning unfair competition?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Not the author of it. Mr. STEVENS, in the House, was the one who originally presented it.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa will yield to me for just one moment, I was much interested in the statement which the Senator from Nevada has just made. As I understood his statement, it was that the proviso that is now in the bill in regard to unfair competition was drawn up under the direction of Mr. Brandeis.

Mr. NEWLANDS. No; it was drawn up by Mr. STEVENS and presented in his bill in the House.

Mr. LIPPITT. I understood the Senator from Nevada to say——

Mr. NEWLANDS. It, however, had the support of Mr. Rublee and Mr. Brandeis.

Mr. LIPPITT. I understood the Senator to say that Mr. Brandeis had something to do with drawing up this proposition——

Mr. NEWLANDS. It certainly had his support.

Mr. LIPPITT. And that it was submitted to the President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. LIPPITT. That the President then approved of it, and that it was then added to the trade commission bill. Is that the way in which the Senator meant to state the matter or is that a correct statement of the matter?

Mr. NEWLANDS. It was also presented, both before and after the President was interviewed regarding it, to members of the Interstate Commerce Committee—members of both parties—by Mr. Rublee and by Mr. STEVENS, and was in its general course also submitted to the President, and I understood that the President favored such a provision.

Mr. LIPPITT. This amendment or addition to the bill was presented to the committee and passed and accepted by the committee within a few hours of its receipt, was it not? Was more than one meeting held in regard to it?

Mr. NEWLANDS. My recollection is that it was under consideration for some time by individual members of the committee of both parties.

Mr. LIPPITT. I say this, as long as the matter has been brought up on the floor of the Senate, only because I was considerably interested to discover how that addition happened to be made to the bill. I had intended to inquire into it, and neglected to do so. We had been discussing in the committee for some time the trade-commission bill, and it had been very elaborately considered at several different meetings. There had been a subcommittee appointed to consider it, and many meetings of the subcommittee. It was then reported to the full committee, and the whole language of the bill was gone over in great detail. Many suggestions were made in regard to changing the form and the details of the bill, and it was then, as I understood, accepted by the committee and reported; but at that time it had not this provision in regard to unfair competition.

I happened to be away on important matters in Rhode Island for a week or a little over—10 days perhaps—and when I came back I found this provision in regard to unfair competition attached to the bill. It is a very vital provision. It changes the whole effect and meaning and importance of the trade commission bill. Such subjects as unfair competition and interlocking directorates, and a great variety of other subjects had been discussed with great detail and most carefully in the committee for two or three years; and while there has been a majority of the committee in favor of some things, and another majority in favor of some other things, and so on, there has been such disagreement among members of the committee, and, if I may put it so, such hesitation with regard to the real necessity of legislation of this kind, or of the kind of legislation if any is had, that it has prevented any positive action by the committee.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. LIPPITT. I was very much surprised——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it must be remembered that I have the floor.

Mr. LIPPITT. I beg the Senator's pardon. I will not be more than a minute.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not taking the Senator off the floor, but I simply want other Senators to remember that and to limit their speeches within reasonable bounds.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is just as good a time as any to announce that no Senator can take the floor and keep it and pass it around.

Mr. CUMMINS. That has been said to me once before. I am not attempting to pass it around. I yielded to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], and I had a right to yield to him, I assume, for a proper purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CUMMINS. If he abused that purpose, I am not to be criticized.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not criticizing the Senator from Iowa; but the habit has grown up in the Senate of farming out the floor. The Senator from Iowa did take his seat. There is not any dispute about that.

Mr. CUMMINS. I supposed I had a right to rest myself for a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Undoubtedly.

Mr. CUMMINS. However, if the Chair desires——

The VICE PRESIDENT. How is the Chair to know when a Senator is keeping the floor if he takes his seat?

Mr. CUMMINS. Very well; I submit myself to whatever ruling the Chair desires to make.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair does not desire to make any ruling, except that the business of the Senate is not being transacted in accordance with the rules of the Senate.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, from time immemorial—if such length of time as four years may be considered as time immemorial—it has been the custom of the Senate to carry on a running debate on subjects of this kind when it was the desire to do so and when it was agreeable to the Senator who had the floor. I was not aware that I was in any way transgressing any of the rules or customs of the Senate. The Senator from Iowa, as I understand, has a perfect right to yield to me for a few minutes, or for several minutes, or for an hour, if he chooses, to enable me to discuss some subject that he is talking about.

On this particular matter, however, I had almost completed what I had to say. Perhaps I had completed it. What I rose to say was merely that, considering the great differences of opinion that had existed in the committee and the long time they had devoted to the discussion of such subjects as unfair competition and similar subjects without arriving at a definite conclusion that they were willing to report, I was rather surprised to find this particular amendment engrafted on the bill in such a very short time, and I was very much interested in the statement of the Senator from Nevada that in order to bring the minds of the committee to a focus it was apparently necessary for Mr. Brandeis, of Boston, to give his authority and permission to the particular kind of amendment that was to be drawn, and then that the President of the United States advised the committee that it should be passed; whereupon, without any further or very elaborate consideration, it becomes a part of an important bill of this kind.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, in order that I may not be again brought under the implied censure of the Chair, I will say now that I decline to yield for any interruption until I shall finish what I have to say.

I had presented and explained as best I could the proposed amendment relating to incorporate stock holdings of ordinary corporations. I propose, as section 7, an amendment relating to the same subject, but applying to common carriers. Its substantive part is as follows:

It shall be unlawful for any common-carrier corporation engaged in commerce to acquire, own, hold, or control, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the capital stock or other share capital, or any other means of control or participation in the control of any other common-carrier corporation, if the business of such corporations is naturally and by reason of character and location competitive.

I shall not read further from this amendment. It is not necessary to do so in order to understand it. It gives to the Interstate Commerce Commission the same authority with regard to the administration and the enforcement of the law as is given to the trade commission in respect to ordinary corporations.

The difference between this and the former amendment lies, first, in the submission of the authority to the Interstate Commerce Commission, and, second, in this proviso:

Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to those cases in which one of such common-carrier corporations could acquire and hold the property of the other without a violation of the antitrust acts.

This provision is necessary for the reason that there are some States which forbid any railroad property within their borders to be owned by corporations organized under the laws of other Commonwealths. These laws make it impossible, in some instances, to consolidate the ownership of the property itself in a single corporation, although it is entirely possible, and indeed it ought to be required, that the ownership should be consolidated in ordinary industrial corporations one of which holds the stock of the other, so that with regard to common carriers wherever there could be a consolidation of the properties themselves without a violation of the antitrust law one may hold the stock of another.

The third amendment which I propose to offer as section 8 deals with the holding company. The amendment as to intercorporate holding proper covers those corporations which are themselves engaged in commerce and prohibits them from holding the stock of other corporations engaged in commerce; but there are instances—and the authorities are, I think, quite definite in regard to some of them—in which corporations which are not themselves engaged in commerce acquire and hold the stock of two or more corporations which are so engaged, and in that way prevent or stifle competition as between them. The third amendment relates to those cases. I need not read it. The commission performs the same function in regard to them that I have attached to it respecting the other two.

The fourth amendment forbids community of directors or officers as between corporations engaged in commerce and carrying on a competitive business. The same reasons which seem to me sufficient to restrain one corporation from holding the stock of another will operate to forbid a community of directors as between competing corporations. What we are trying to do is to preserve each one as an independent unit in business, so that they will act in their affairs without any regard to the interest of the others; and in this amendment the commission is given the authority to determine just one question, namely, whether the business of the two or more corporations in which there is a community of directors or officers is competitive. If found to be competitive, the commission is given power to prevent such an unlawful condition; and if the corporations or persons involved do not obey the order of the commission, then appeal to the courts is provided for.

The fifth and last of these amendments—and they constitute parts of a whole—relates to interlocking directors among common carriers. The substantive part of the prohibition is this:

> It shall be unlawful for any person to be at the same time a member of the board of directors, or other managing board, or an officer of two or more common carrier corporations, either of which is engaged in commerce, the business of which corporations is naturally and by reason of location competitive.

It is a counterpart of the provision relating to ordinary corporations, save that it has in it the provision to which I have already referred, namely:

> That the provisions of this section shall not apply to those cases in which one of such corporations could acquire and hold the property of the other without a violation of the antitrust acts.

These, Mr. President, are amendments which, in my judgment, ought to be made to this bill. It is more essential that the commission be given power to deal with such subjects than that they be given power to deal with unfair competition. It may be that as each of them is voted upon I shall have occasion to explain it at greater length and to defend it against any assaults that may be made upon it.

I may, before we reach a final conclusion upon the bill, express my views with regard to the several theories of regulation now engaging the attention of the American people. There is one large body of philosophers and statesmen who believe that our regulations of commerce should be made effective through the criminal or civil processes of the courts alone, and that a commission or any other function of the Government can not be helpful in the enforcement of such regulations. There is another widespread view entertained by many men of eminence and distinction that we ought to administer our regulations of commerce solely through commissions; that we ought to permit combination and monopoly, and protect the people from their avarice and power through a commission authorized to fix the prices which the people shall pay for the commodities in which these combinations and monopolies deal.

I do not stand for either of these proposals. I believe the wise course is to maintain both the courts and the trade tribunals in the administration of our regulations of commerce. I believe that the antitrust law and its enforcement, however imperfect, have conferred infinite advantages and benefits upon the business of the United States. I think they have trained the thought of the people so that they now understand better than they understood before their true relations to each other. I think they understand now, as never before in the history of this country or of any other, what business may lawfully do and what it ought not to do and must not do. So far as I am concerned, I would not by any act of mine limit, restrict, or modify the antitrust law in any possible way so far as it relates to commerce in commodities. I want it to stand, as I believe it is, a monument to the wisdom and patriotism of the men who framed it and the men who have interpreted and enforced it.

There are, however, certain forms of activity, certain forms of combination, certain relations that do exist and have existed in business, which tend toward the suppression of competition, which, if allowed to grow and develop, become a menace to the welfare and freedom of trade, which are not malum in se but malum prohibitum, or ought to be malum prohibitum; and the law relating to the regulation of these things, in my judgment, should be submitted to a commission or other tribunal for administration and enforcement.

I close, as I began, with the assertion of a confident belief that the business men of this country are honest, faithful men. I believe that they intend to obey the law; I believe that they do not desire to encroach upon the rights and privileges of their fellow men, and, as for me, I am willing to stand for the proposal that we should erect or constitute a tribunal to which such men could repair—men who have a real desire to uphold the law, men who have a real purpose to carry on their affairs in a lawful and honest way—to which such men could come and be advised by a Government tribunal before they are branded as criminals.

I would not give immunity to any man. I shrink from any sort of immunity. When one has violated the law—consciously violated the law—he should pay the penalty for his wrongdoing. But when it becomes necessary in order to preserve competition that we shall prohibit acts which have heretofore been regarded as moral, which have heretofore prevailed in every industrial society in the world, I am unwilling that the failure to obey these regulations, which must necessarily be somewhat uncertain and vague, shall make the men who conduct our business affairs criminals, without consciousness of moral turpitude or moral dereliction.

I stand, therefore, for the commission in the sense in which I have attempted to describe. I do not stand for it as a substitute for the antitrust law, illuminated as that law is with 24 years of interpretation and learning, but I stand for it in the application of these new rules which we find it necessary to impose upon a great and growing industrial life.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hopes that the Senator from Iowa will not imagine that there was any implied rebuke in what the Chair said. The Chair simply desired to call attention to the rule of the Senate. The Chair does not believe that any Senator can suffer and permit other Senators to occupy the floor without unanimous consent. The interruption is not an interruption to take the floor and hold it; it must be an interruption for the purpose of some sort of an inquiry. It is the rule of the Senate also that no Senator shall speak more than twice in debate on the same question on the same day without unanimous leave. The Senator from Iowa had taken his seat when the Chair made his statement, and it was not intended to be personal. Beyond any doubt the rules of the Senate do not permit one Senator——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it is true I had for the moment taken my seat, but, of course, the Vice President knew that I had not concluded my address, for it was interrupted in a way which must have necessarily left that impression. I was doing precisely what occurs here at every day's session of the Senate, and I did feel that the Chair had rather selected me as the object of the remark, for I have never heard the remark made with regard to any other Senator, and it was made twice in its application to me. I do not hold——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair states that it was not personal to the Senator from Iowa, nor intended to be so.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am quite willing and shall hereafter attempt to obey the rules of the Senate so that there shall be no interruption of what I have to say that might lead to the conclusion that I had abandoned the floor.

Mr. LIPPITT. Mr. President, in the rule which the Vice President has read, interruptions are allowed unless they are objected to; in other words, they are allowed by unanimous consent. If there is no objection from the floor and there is unanimous consent. I do not think the Vice President would undertake to say that in every such instance it was necessary to ask if there was unanimous consent to the interruption being permitted. There have been times when Senators have objected to interruptions and refused unanimous consent where a single Senator has objected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator from Rhode Island will just pardon the Chair, it is not that the thing will occur or that it has occurred, but it is the possibility of its occurrence in a time of some stress of discussion. Under the construction of the rule the Senator from Rhode Island insists upon, the Senator from Rhode Island can take the floor, and yield to whomsoever he pleases and keep the floor as long as he pleases.

Mr. LIPPITT. Only by unanimous consent. Any Senator could object at any moment. I am quite sure that not long ago, within the present year, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE], on a certain occasion, if my memory is correct, did object to the interruption of the Senator on the floor, and thereupon the Senator who wanted to interrupt was obliged to take his seat. I think it is a matter which is clearly within the power of the Senate when any individual Senator at any time may choose to exercise it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I think I was unconsciously the cause of the suggestion from the Chair. I turned around and saw that the Senator from Iowa had taken his seat, and I supposed that for the time being, at least, he had completed his remarks. The Senator from Rhode Island was addressing the Senate, and I rose and asked permission to interrupt the Senator, thinking that he had the floor. I quite agree with the Chair that it is necessary to exercise care in those matters, or else we will get into interminable debates, which, of course, are not to be desired.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just so there is an understanding that it was not personal; that is all the Chair cares for now.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I wish to state that I am much troubled about this section No. 5. I do not understand how it can be carried out. It looks to me as though it would not be practicable, and that it would be an impossibility for any commission or anyone else to decide between fair and unfair competition. It seems to me that it weakens the measure and puts a problem before the officials who are detailed to ascertain those facts that it will be impossible for them to solve.

On looking in Webster's Dictionary, and confirming it by a reference to the Century Dictionary, I find competition to be defined as "the act of seeking to gain the object which another is endeavoring to gain at the same time"; "common strife for a single object." There is every inducement in such a struggle to be unfair; there is no inducement for anyone to be fair in competition with another who is attempting to gain the same object. Both being intent upon acquiring the same object, the advantage lies with the person who is unfair. The man who plays fair and uses no foul means, takes no advantage, and plays an open game of simple-minded honesty in his method of doing business, is inevitably bound to lose.

I think it is going to be very difficult to define or to arbitrate between the two. I consider the provision as one that will baffle the wisest of commissions or the most scrupulously honest; to a careful individual who attempts to ascertain what the facts are, the dividing line is so slight.

In a struggle for the same object, if the fight is to a finish, the hardiest or the most cunning will win; and in such a struggle there is every inducement to use every means available to win, and fairness is not the best resource to fall back upon. To plot, to employ stratagem, to use every device that will outwit or overcome one's antagonist, becomes the keynote to success. The bill is intended to keep alive a system of competition in carrying on the business affairs of this country.

Of course, it is my personal opinion that it will not do it and that it can not do it. Competition in carrying on business affairs of great importance is practically dead in this country and all over the world, and efforts to revive competition by such galvanizing efforts are futile, and in a highly civilized community would not be undertaken. The very fact that a measure is introduced into this body, in apparent good faith, which attempts to provide means by which competition may be carried on in fairness proves that competition as an economic feature in business affairs has been a failure.

If competitive methods were followed to a logical conclusion in any line of business, they would inevitably result in the weeding out of all of the weaker competitors and everything in that line would go into the hands of the winner in the final struggle.

"Many are called, but few are chosen." There can be but one victor in a contest where all seek one object. None of the men of large means in this country will any more voluntarily invest their capital in an enterprise where they will have to engage in a life-and-death struggle to retain possession of it, and all the commissions that could be named to stand by and umpire the game would be no inducement. In fact, they know that any business which requires a commission to stand guard over and umpire it in order that it may be played fair is a hazardous one, for mayhap the commission might go to sleep at a critical time in their affairs. Men of large business affairs do not any more compete with one another. They combine and cooperate and fat upon their less fortunate brothers, who, by force of circumstances, are compelled to compete with one another. Competition, which is "common strife for the possession of a single object," develops cunning and cruelty and hardens human nature. It smothers down all kindly and generous impulses; it turns brother against brother and nation against nation. We have an example of what men will do and get others to do in order to "gain their object" in Mexico at this time and in Colorado, in the coal mines, where men killed one another in the "common strife—the competition—for a single object," which single object was an opportunity to work in a coal mine, which ever so often is liable to blow up from the ignition of its foul gases and land the miners in eternity.

In order for one man to succeed under the competitive system, another man, perhaps many men and better men, must fail. In fact, under it about 90 per cent of all business enterprises do fail in less than 20 years. Success under the fairest methods of competition is gained through the misfortune of some less alert or less heartless person.

If children are to be educated in a manner to fit them to succeed under the competitive system, they must be taught to be avaricious, to be selfish, to be without pity, to smother every generous and kindly impulse, to demand and take every advantage and benefit for themselves. No parent would be doing his duty by his offspring if he did not teach them to do these things. It is the creed and the guiding principle of the devil.

If all persons were governed by the standards that are necessary to make a success under a system of close competition, the world would not be fit to live in. All of the good and the unselfish and the kindly folk who make life worth living would perish off the earth. To buy where and when one can buy cheapest, to sell at the highest price that can be extorted, to take quick advantage of the necessities of others, to be remorseless and fatten on the miseries of the helpless are all necessary in order to be successful.

Did any of you ever see a band of coyotes competing for a jack rabbit? You never did, and you never will. The coyote has too much sense to do it. If ten coyotes got after one jack rabbit on the plains in competition for a breakfast or dinner or supper, as the case might be, there would not be one coyote that would get anything to eat that day. The jack rabbit can outrun all of them. But take two or more coyotes, and they are plenty smart enough to do this, and they do it all the time: They will get between that jack rabbit and the burrow in which he lives. One of them will start out to chase him. He will throw on the high gear and will run him around in a circle. The jack rabbit always circles around his burrow. That coyote will chase him around as fast as he can drive him, and the other coyote will cross a segment of the circle and there will lie in wait to take up the chase when it reaches him. The other coyote will lie down and rest until the jack rabbit comes back to that point again. The jack rabbit can run faster than the coyote; but when he goes up against two of them cooperating against him it is merely a matter of time until those coyotes have their dinner, and it does not take long. But there is no band of coyotes that can do it if they compete with one another.

Now, the business men of this country are as wise as coyotes, and successful business men, the men who control the affairs of this country, do not compete with one another. They have grown too wise to adopt that plan.

Mr. HUGHES. Does the Senator think the jack rabbit is entirely satisfied?

Mr. LANE. No, I do not think he is any better satisfied than are the people of this country with the present business methods. They have to compete with people who are combined and they hold to these the same relation that the jack rabbit does to the coyote. That is why I am entering my protest against this particular section.

Then, again, it creates another commission. We have enough of them now. There is too much divided responsibility in the management of the affairs of this country. If Congress would create and appoint a commission to squeeze the water out of the bogus stocks that are floating around through the country and turn some hundreds of millions of stolen money back to the people that would be a good thing to do; or if we were to create another one to furnish a reasonable supply of backbone to the officials who are already in existence, whose duty it is to stop such work and who have the power to do it without the creation of this commission, that would be another good thing to do. But to create a commission of this sort, to place espionage upon all the business affairs of this country, in an effort to revive competition, is futile. In my opinion, it is too late for us to undertake any such task. It is everlastingly too late to do any good. It would be kept busy, I have no doubt, nosing into the affairs of small business men, irritating every little business man in the country, while big business and the crooks—they who bear their heavy hands down upon the country, and say whether or not it shall be prosperous or whether or not an administration shall succeed—will escape, as they do now, by some subterfuge or other. We have laws against restraint of trade and larceny, petit and grand; yet no man can hope to compete with the large trusts, and the very Government itself is forced to pay heed to their wishes, under penalty of having a panic precipitated upon the country. This condition could not exist if they were dealt with as are smaller and lesser malefactors, and it is only through the usurpation of special privileges and a failure to enforce the law against them that they can or do occupy so anomalous a position.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS], I noticed in his speech yesterday, paid a tribute to the Steel Trust and said he found a sort of rough fairness in its methods of dealing with its competitors in that having the power to do so it had not entirely squeezed them out of business. Some time ago, you may remember, I harrowed up the feelings of some worthy Members of this body by my insistent demands for an investigation of the charge that the aforesaid Steel Trust had been unfairly competing with its rivals by demanding and receiving rebates from the railways, and finally, with the aid of my good friend the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], I succeeded in getting an investigation of the matter by the Interstate Commerce Commission. It may interest some of the Members of this body who took an interest in the matter at that time for me to read to them an excerpt from an article which was published in the New York American on April 27 of this year, wherein reference is made to this same investigation. I have not seen it published anywhere else. I do not know whether it is true; yet it makes a statement regarding the commission hearings. It is under a heading of a general political item aimed in an unfriendly spirit at the present administration, I think. I have not read it all, but my attention was attracted to this particular matter. It says:

The commission hearings are under the Lane resolution, which directed an investigation to determine whether facts or evidence exist justifying the Government in proceeding against the Steel Trust for the crime of rebates.

In its opinion in the Industrial Railways case the commission said the amount paid by the railroads east of the Mississippi River to industrial plants was estimated at $15,000,000 a year. It had been discovered that the Steel Trust was doing two-thirds of the business, and therefore gets $10,000,000 a year.

Commissioner Harlan ruled that the Lane resolution would be interpreted as directing the commission to ascertain the amounts and dates of all payments amounting to rebates received by the Steel Trust in the last six years.

EVIDENCE OF HUGE REBATES.

A rough estimate of the total of such rebates is $60,000,000. The interstate-commerce act provides that a corporation found guilty of receiving rebates shall pay a fine amounting to three times the amount received. This would be $180,000,000 in the case of the Steel Trust.

Evidence was also offered that the Steel Trust had received an additional $75,000,000 in unlawful rebates during the last six years. This would make the Steel Trust liable to an additional fine of $225,000,000, or a total of $405,000,000.

It goes on further to say:

The evidence tended to show that the Steel Trust had received the $75,000,000 unlawfully through its operation of the Duluth, Messaba & Northern Railway, the Duluth & Iron Range, the Union Railroad, the Elgin, Joliet & Eastern, and the Pittsburgh, Bessemer & Lake Erie.

It seems to me that the Senator from Iowa is a bit unfortunate in his reference to the magnanimous manner in which these large interests do business when they have the opportunity to squeeze down on a competitor. It is my opinion that they will go along and do likewise so long as they are allowed to do so.

I do not believe too strongly in penal sentences; I have not that idea in my mind; but I do believe in dealing out justice to all citizens alike, be the citizen the most powerful millionaire or be he the humblest tramp, and that only when we do that, and not until we do that, will this country be in a condition in which there will be universal prosperity or fairness of dealing among either the large business or smaller business classes of the country.

There are too many laws now, in my opinion. One citizen of Oregon suggested to me the other day that this Government would be some hundreds of millions of dollars ahead each year if Congress were to pass a law by which it would hold a session but once in 10 years, and that its powers be confined to the repealing of laws. I think he was pessimistic; but we have plenty of laws now and plenty of authority under the laws already in existence to put a stop to dishonest methods of carrying on business.

As to the Steel Trust, for instance, which was accepting rebates, that fact has been known for years; it has been complained of for years, and the complaints have been filed; yet they continued and they bore down with heavy hand on every honest competitor and unnaturally increased the cost of all buildings throughout the United States in which structural steel was used.

I was interested this morning in the discussion on the tariff and the statements from one side of the Chamber about idle mills and from the other side of the Chamber the statements that the mills were working overtime. I thought then, as I do now, that it might not be an unmixed evil if the people are receiving their supplies of clothing cheaper than they did before—people who need the clothing and who have none too much money to expend on the purchase of it, even though that clothing came to them by importation. It would not be an unmixed evil if some of the large cotton mills which I saw as I came here, which work little children by the hundreds, were deprived of that kind of competitive labor. Little children who were peeking out through barred windows at us and the train to see it go by, with their little faces pressed against the bars to see the choo-choo cars; little children who ought to be out in the fresh air or at school and in the sunlight gaining health and strength instead of being cooped up in stuffy cotton mills on a hot day attending to that kind of work. I would prefer that those children should be set free rather than to see "business" thrive at their expense. Let other nations sacrifice their childhood if they wish to do so, but it is worth more to this country to keep its children healthy, to grow up into healthy men and women, than it is that some men should, by exploiting their labor, grow rich by such methods of competition, or that their mills should run at full blast, manned by the labor of such tiny hands.

It is my opinion in regard to this particular provision that it is illogical; that it is unworkable. I do not think that fair competition does exist or can exist outside of heaven, and the man who believes it can is too good for this world and heaven is his home, for he will be grievously disappointed as long as he stays here.

The provision in the bill which allows the President, when there is a failure upon the part of the commission to execute the law, himself to take action is a wise one and a good one. It is the surest provision in the bill. In the President lies individual responsibility and direct action. Commissions walk slowly. Commissions are composed of a body of men; they are not all of a single mind; they can not be brought to decide upon speedy action; they are cumbersome. The President is unfettered by the views of others. He represents more nearly what the people want; they look to him as the head of the Government, and they have confidence in him. They have confidence in commissions dependent upon their worth, and not so much in Congress nor a great deal in the Senate. Give the power, then, in the last resort, at a time when it is necessary, into the hands of the President, to say to the commission, "Get busy upon this line; here is a wrong being done." That is a good provision, and if you will eliminate the ill-advised attempt to establish "fair competition," I think the bill will be improved. The provision in regard to fair competition is, in my opinion, against all the laws of nature and common sense.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Nevada if he will not consent to have the unfinished business laid aside temporarily and allow us to go on with the calendar under Rule VIII, beginning at the point where we stopped this morning? It is now half past 4.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I have been hoping all day that speeches might be concluded on the unfinished business, so that we might take up the river and harbor bill. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] is in the midst of his speech. He has been making that speech for three days, and he has not yet had an opportunity to finish it. I hope the Senator from Nevada will allow the unfinished business to be laid aside, so that we may take up the river and harbor bill for the remainder of the afternoon.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I am exceedingly anxious to press the pending bill to a vote. I wish to know whether there is any Senator who would like to proceed with the debate? I wish to say, Mr. President, that I have been hoping that this bill would be disposed of by to-morrow night, and that we would, if necessary, hold a night session for that purpose. There are, however, two or three members of the committee who have expressed a desire to speak on this bill. I have canvassed both sides of the Senate and have not found others who seem desirous of speaking, so I should like to get a vote at as early an hour as possible.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am not going to insist upon the request to consider the calendar under the circumstances.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will again ask unanimous consent that we proceed to vote upon the pending bill and all amendments thereto at 4 o'clock to-morrow afternoon. I think it very desirable that we should dispose of this matter before the holiday, which will be more or less demoralizing, and then proceed to the presentation of the other trust bills. I have no doubt that if we could dispose of this bill the Interstate Commerce Committee would be able to present the securities bill by next Tuesday, and I am told that the Judiciary Committee will be likely to present its report within the next week. It does seem to me that we should dispose of this bill first and clear the way for the other bills.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I had hoped that there would be no vote upon the pending bill until the Judiciary Committee had made its report upon the bill now before it. I believe that that course would promote intelligent consideration of the entire subject. We are sure to pass the bill or vote upon it before Congress adjourns, and there is abundant material, as I understand, for discussion in the river and harbor bill. Why would it not be well to defer a vote upon the pending bill until the Judiciary Committee has made its report? I submit that as the course that ought to be followed.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I certainly can not consent to that, because that is an event over which the committee that I represent has no control whatever, and it might mean the indefinite postponement of this measure. Besides that, we realize that the members of the Judiciary Committee are desirous of being present during this debate. They have been compelled upon several occasions to give up their deliberations in order to listen to this debate, and yet they have not been able to listen to as much of it as they would wish. Doubtless the debate would be instructive to them in the consideration of their bill. If this bill shall run along in discussion and debate until their report comes in, it will not give them the opportunity for consideration and deliberation regarding that bill unless they entirely absent themselves from the debates upon this bill.

So it is with the Interstate Commerce Committee. I am unable to bring that committee together until we dispose of this bill. As soon as it is disposed of we can then take up the securities bill and settle it quickly, I think.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator from Nevada that he might let the river and harbor bill go on this afternoon and to-morrow, and he might have to-morrow for his committee to take up the other bill. I do not believe we are saving any time by trying to get a vote on this bill to-morrow. There are a number of amendments to it, and as they are reached there will be short but pointed discussion on those amendments. There are several amendments, I am sure, that some of us want made before we vote upon the measure, although we are in perfect sympathy with the measure. If the Senator will arrange to devote to-morrow with his committee and take up the other bill to which he has referred and perfect it, and let the river and harbor bill be considered by the Senate this afternoon and to-morrow, I really believe that we would be advancing this bill as well as legislation generally.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I wish to express the hope that the Senator will not give way to the river and harbor bill. The trust bills are surely as important as the river and harbor bill. A good many of the streams provided for in the river and harbor bill can not become any drier by reason of this weather than they are now, and so it does seem to me that we ought to proceed with the trust bills. I do not care to see them give way to something else, and I enter my protest against them giving way to the river and harbor bill.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, I have been giving a good deal of attention to this trust legislation. I think it is very important. I have been considering it, however, rather as a whole, covering these three bills and treating the matter as if it were really one, because I think it is intended to be one general scheme of trust legislation, if I may use that term without offense.

I expect to address the Senate in general upon the subject, covering these different bills, their objects and purposes, and their probable effect; but I should not want to take up the time of the Senate in making any extended remarks about this particular bill. I should be glad to see all these bills before the Senate in their completed form as they come from the Senate committees, so that we might consider them all together, and the effect that will likely come out of the passage of all of them, and not simply a single one of them. Indeed, I think it would have been much better if all of these bills had been included in one, as they are all intended to reach the same object. For that reason I should be sorry to see the bill pressed to a vote to-morrow.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I should be glad to hear a suggestion as to a time when we can agree upon a vote upon this bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I make this suggestion: I shall make no objection to taking up the bill on Monday or Tuesday to the exclusion of everything else, and continuing its consideration until a vote is reached; but I do not believe it is wise to fix an hour for the vote, and I shall feel compelled to object to any proposed agreement fixing an hour at which the vote is to be taken. I shall not object, however, so far as I am concerned, to taking up the bill on any day of next week and continuing its consideration until we do reach a final vote. I except to-morrow from that suggestion because I understand it is the desire to adjourn over Saturday, and we might not be able to conclude to-morrow. But if the Senator from Nevada will ask that it be taken up Monday morning or Tuesday morning and continued as we did on one other bill—I think the tolls bill—we will get a vote just as soon as it can possibly be had by asking for a definite hour.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator that if he will give notice now that on Monday or Tuesday or Wednesday, just as he sees fit, he will call up the bill at 2 o'clock each day and insist upon its continuous consideration until there is a vote, that will give Senators who desire to speak upon the subject time to get ready, and give them notice that they must be ready to speak at that time or not at all. I think that is the course we pursued, as the Senator from Iowa says, with reference to the tolls-repeal bill. It certainly was the course we pursued with reference to the tariff and currency bills, and I think it is a very good method of procedure.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Would the Senator be willing to yield the exclusive right of way to this bill next week, or would he insist upon going on with the river and harbor bill?

Mr. SIMMONS. At 2 o'clock; yes. This is the unfinished business. It is in order at 2 o'clock, and after 2 o'clock each day after Tuesday, say, of course it would be entitled to the right of way.

Mr. GALLINGER. It can not lose its place if a single objection is made. It has the right of way absolutely.

Mr. SIMMONS. It can not; no.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, it seems to be impossible, therefore, to make any arrangement with reference to the river and harbor bill.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I desire to say that a very important bill will be in here on Monday—the sundry civil bill. It is very important that that bill should pass promptly; and I know it will be the desire of the chairman, who is not here at this moment, to take up that bill next week for consideration. I believe it ought to have the right of way.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We can take it up in the morning hour.

Mr. OVERMAN. We can not finish it in the morning hour, however. We will have the report in here by to-morrow or the next day; certainly by Monday, and probably by to-morrow.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I see no other course to pursue than to proceed with the bill to-morrow, giving notice that on Monday I shall press the bill for consideration, and with the hope that the Senate will have night sessions until the bill is disposed of. I should like to ask whether there are any Senators present who would like to address the Senate on this subject to-morrow. I believe the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is desirous of addressing the Senate. I should like to ask whether or not he will be ready to-morrow.

Mr. REED. I can not be ready to-morrow. I have been engaged all day on the Banking and Currency Committee, and that has made it impossible for me to get any data together. I could not be ready until a later time.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Then I will ask the Senate to proceed with the consideration of the bill to-morrow.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I rise simply to say that I anticipate addressing the Senate briefly on the trade commission bill when it comes before the Senate to-morrow.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I suppose the Senator from Nevada will now temporarily lay the bill aside?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; I will ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. KENYON. I should like to inquire, if this bill is laid aside, whether it is intended to take up the river and harbor bill? If it is, I will object.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask to have the bill laid aside with a view to the Senate taking such order as it pleases regarding legislation.

Mr. KENYON. I think under those circumstances I would not be warranted in objecting.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. REED. Before the Senator makes his motion, I just want to make an inquiry of the Senator from Nevada. I did not understand the remark of the Senator from Nevada about pressing the bill to-morrow. Did the Senator mean that anyone desiring to say anything upon it must be ready to-morrow?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I shall ask that the bill be taken up and considered to-morrow.

Mr. REED. The Senator has no desire to force it to a vote to-morrow?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am desirous of pressing it to a vote at the earliest moment.

Mr. REED. The Senator would not be willing to let it go over even one day to give another Senator an opportunity to get his data together?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I asked the Senator from Nevada, when I was recognized by the Chair, if he would not lay aside the bill temporarily for the consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII, beginning with Order of Business No. 326.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I had recognition from the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is the question, and it ought to be thoroughly understood: Is the Senator from Nevada asking unanimous consent to lay the bill aside?

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator had asked unanimous consent, and it had been granted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator asked it, but there was an objection if the request was for that purpose.

Mr. SIMMONS. I understood the Senator to withdraw his objection.

Mr. KENYON. I withdrew the objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator did withdraw it? Then the bill is temporarily laid aside, and the Senator from North Carolina has the floor.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 13811, known as the river and harbor bill.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I think there should be a quorum here to consider that motion. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Gallinger	Norris	Shively
Bristow	Hollis	Overman	Simmons
Bryan	Hughes	Page	Smith, Ga.
Burleigh	Jones	Perkins	Smith, Md.
Burton	Kenyon	Pittman	Smith, Mich.
Camden	Kern	Poindexter	Smoot
Catron	Lane	Pomerene	Sterling
Chamberlain	Lee, Md.	Ransdell	Swanson
Chilton	Martin, Va.	Reed	Thomas
Clapp	Martine, N. J.	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Clarke, Ark.	Myers	Shafroth	Works
Cummins	Nelson	Sheppard
Fletcher	Newlands	Shields

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] moves to take up the bill commonly known as the river and harbor bill.

Mr. NORRIS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH]. Because of his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CATRON (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. In his absence I withdraw my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. Therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I inquire whether the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I withhold my vote.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (after having voted in the affirmative). In the absence of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER], with whom I have a general pair, I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and let my vote stand.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas (after having voted in the affirmative). I observe that the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is not present and has not voted. I transfer my pair with that Senator to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. WHITE] and let my vote stand.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] on account of illness in his family. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN].

I wish also to state that the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] is paired with the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON], the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], and the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] with the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

Mr. BANKHEAD (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. CHILTON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], but under the terms of it I have a right to vote, and I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. STONE. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 12, as follows:

YEAS—34.

Bankhead	Kern	Pittman	Shively
Bryan	Lane	Poindexter	Simmons
Camden	Lee, Md.	Pomerene	Smith, Ga.

Clapp	Martin, Va.	Shafroth	Vardaman
Clarke, Ark.	Martine, N. J.	Sheppard
Crawford	Myers	Shields
Cummins	Nelson	Shively

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the roll of absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. KERN, Mr. SAULSBURY, and Mr. WILLIAMS answered to their names when called.

Mr. POMERENE and Mr. HOLLIS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13297) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SHIVELY. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. SHIVELY, Mr. BRYAN, and Mr. SMOOT conferees on the part of the Senate.

R. 15692) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. SHIVELY. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, agree to the conference asked for by the House, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. SHIVELY, Mr. HUGHES, and Mr. STERLING conferees on the part of the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. STONE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate adjourn until to-morrow at 11 o'clock a. m.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, July 3, 1914, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, July 2, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, Infinite Spirit, for every sacrifice which has come down to us out of the past, leaving in its wake the world a little better, faith a little stronger, hope a little brighter, love a little warmer. May we work and faint not, strive and despair not, trust and doubt not, for though the way may be long, our path rough, each well-directed step brings us nearer the goal. Every victory brings its joy, every defeat its lesson; for Thou hast planned, and planned well. Thou art infinite and Thy love is behind all. Thus lead us on and at last give us the victory. In Christ Jesus our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

PENSIONS.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bills H. R. 12914, 13542, 14234, 14738, 15692, granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that he may be permitted to call up omnibus pension bills of the numbers specified, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bills.

The Clerk reported the titles to the bills.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees: Mr. RUSSELL, Mr. ADAIR, and Mr. LANGHAM.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. Under the order previously made, although this is Thursday, the business in order to-day is business in order on Calendar Wednesday.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, before the House resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of the unfinished business I would suggest that when the campaign-contribution bill, the unfinished business, was last under consideration unanimous consent was granted that there be two hours of general debate. I will ask the Chair how much of that time has been used?

The SPEAKER. All except 19 minutes, which belonged to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, during the debate I inadvertently used more time than I ought to have used, agreeing with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] that I would ask for an extension of time and grant that extension of time to him. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the time for general debate be extended for 15 minutes, so that I may return to the gentleman the time which he gave me last Wednesday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend the time for general debate 15 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PUBLICITY OF CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

The SPEAKER. The business in order to-day is the bill (H. R. 8428) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to publicity of contributions and expenditures made for the purpose of influencing the nomination and election of candidates for the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States, limiting the amount of campaign expenses, and for other purposes, and the House will automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the further consideration of said bill.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 8428, with Mr. HOUSTON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] is recognized for 43 minutes.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. ROBERTS].

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BOOHER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. J. Res. 157. Joint resolution requesting the President of the United States to invite foreign Governments to participate in the International Congress on Education.

PUBLICITY OF CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. ROBERTS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, with apologies to all prosaic Members of the House and the tender feelings of the renowned author of that beautiful poem entitled "When the Cows Come Home," I respectfully submit the following:

WHEN THE OLD GUARD COMES HOME.

With klingle, klangle, klingle,
Not far down the dusty dingle,
The "old guard's" coming home;
Now sweet and clear, now faint and low,
The airy tinklings come and go,
Like chimings from a near-by tower,
Or sprinklings of an election shower
That makes the voters grow;
Ko-ling, ko-lang, kolinglelingle,
Not far down the dusty dingle,
The "old guard's" coming home.

And old-time friends, and "quiet" plays,
And good old nights and good old days,
Come trooping up the misty ways
When the "old guard" comes home.
With jingle, jangle, jingle,
Love songs that sweetly mingle,
The "old guard's" coming home.

McKinley, Hartman, and Barchfeld,
Humphrey, and Greene, and Frank Mondell,
Our Dick and Dyer, and "Uncle Joe,"
Across the fields I hear him "lo-oo"
And clang his old cowbell;
Go-ling, go-lang, golinglelingle,
With good sweet sounds that mingle,
The "old guard's" coming home.

Hinds and Focht, and son-in-law "Nick,"
And Kahn and Focht will do the trick;
Austin, Lafean, and Fordney, too,
Across the woods I hear him "boo,"
And clang his wether bell.
Go-ling, go-lang, golinglelingle,
With good sweet sounds that mingle,
The "old guard's" coming home.

And campaign songs of bygone years,
And youthful joys and boyish fears,
And business hopes without the tears,
When the "old boys" come home.
With ringle, rangle, ringle,
By twos and threes and single,
The "old guard's" coming home.

Through old-time specs we see the town,
And the Democrats a-sliding down,
And the "old guard" basking in the shade,
All "dolled" up in clothes "home made,"
And the hills are growing brown.
To-ring, to-rang, toringlelingle,
By threes and fours and single,
The "old guard's" coming home.

The same old times of prayers and psalm,
The same sweet days of rest and calm,
The same sweet smell of "punk" and balm,
When the "old boys" come home.
With tinkle, tankle, tinkle,
Through fern and periwinkle,
The "old guard's" coming home.

Knee deep in the Progressive stream,
Where the sun rays glance and gleam,
Rodenberg, Payne, and J. C. Needham,
And scores of others when we need 'em,
In a happy dream.
To-link, to-lank, tolinklelinkle,
The "old guard's" coming home.

And up through memory's deep ravine
Comes the old "war whoop" in its old-time sheen
And the sad, sweet words "It might have been,"
When the "old boys" come home.
With klingle, klangle, klingle,
With loo-oo and moo-oo and jingle,
The "old guard's" coming home.

And over here on Capitol Hill
Sounds the plaintive cry of the whip-poor-will,
And Democrats lie in the tangled vines,
And over their corpses Venus shines,
And over many a silent mill.
Ko-ling, ko-lang, kolinglelingle,
With a ting-a-ling and jingle,
The "old guard's" coming home.

Let down the bars; let in the train;
Let "the boys" walk up to the crib again,
For good old times come back again
When the "old guard" comes home.

[Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN].

Mr. BRITTEN. Mr. Chairman, it is my intention to offer an amendment to the Rucker campaign publicity bill, designed to prohibit lecturing for pay by Members of Congress when Congress is in session. The amendment follows along the lines of a bill recently introduced by me which is intended to prohibit lecturing for pay, other than actual traveling expenses, of any Member of this House or of the Senate; also Cabinet officers and department heads.

Since the introduction of my bill I am in receipt of hundreds of letters from prominent business men in all parts of the United States, complimenting its intent and suggesting that they are ready and willing to do everything in their power to assist in its passage on the general ground that Members of Congress are paid a liberal salary to perform certain duties, and that their neglect of this work for the lecture platform while Congress is in session is a rank injustice to the country and a deception to the district or State which has honored them.

I also am in receipt of a great many newspaper editorials which, I feel, express the sentiment of the principal journals of the country, which evidence should be in the hands of every Congressman who will, sooner or later, be expected to vote upon a bill prohibiting this abuse of public office.

There can be no argument against the statement that the title "Member of Congress," "United States Senator," or "Secretary of State" conferred by the will of the people or by the President of the United States adds materially to the drawing qualities of a lecturer to whom people will flock and pay their quarters and halves because of the advertising he has received at public expense through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and the franking privilege.

Members of Congress and Cabinet officers, however, are not the only performers who have capitalized a gift of the people or a stroke of good fortune in lieu of real ability.

Gaby Deslys, the vaudeville actress, is quoted as receiving $2,000 a week, but anyone who has seen her $5,000 worth of clothes and $50 worth of talent will readily agree that she is capitalizing her association with King Manuel of Portugal and not her ability to act.

Evelyn Thaw, whose theatrical ability has faded beyond recognition, is kept constantly before the public at a high salary because of the capitalization of her association with the famous Thaw case.

I merely cite these instances to show that Members of Congress and Cabinet officers are not the only imitation performers, and the sooner it is stopped the better for the dignity of the office.

Capt. Jack Crawford, "the poet scout," writes:

* * * Indeed, I believe there are hundreds of men and women possessing real talent who are to-day crowded out by these men whose services have already been paid for by Uncle Sam.

Lawson V. Moore, who signs himself ex-United States Consul under the great Grover Cleveland, writes:

As a plain American citizen, I want to congratulate you on the introducing of a bill to prevent Federal officials from going on lecture campaigns for pay.

G. Britten Lyttle, professor of Spanish, Young Men's Christian Association, at New Orleans, and a brother of Judge C. B. Lyttle, Manchester, Ky., a delegate to the last Democratic national convention, writes:

* * * I am writing just a line to express my very hearty approval, as a citizen of this great country, of your proposal to make it a penal offense for employees of the Government holding high and important positions for the proper conduct of business in which all the people are interested and upon which the thousands of lives and the millions of money sacrificed in every war may depend, to engage in any other gainful occupation that may call their attention away from their official duties during their term of office for which they are paid already at remunerative rates.

John H. Davis, banker, 10 Wall Street, New York City, writes:

* * * I have read what you said with deepest interest, and I find that practically every statement and point which you made coincide with the views which I have repeatedly expressed. I was in Europe last year when Mr. Bryan was delivering his lectures and, as I cabled home at the time, his performances not only destroyed the dignity of the American Government in the eyes of Europe, but made our Nation a laughingstock there.

The Constitution, of Atlanta, Ga., July 16, said:

* * * Members of the House and Senate, and of the Cabinet, are altogether too prone to take money from the Government and money from lecture promoters while Congress is in session or important departmental business is pending. None of them go into office unless they are familiar with its compensations, and whether or not they can afford the luxury of being a public servant. If it is beyond their means, no one is begging them to display patriotism at a sacrifice. But when the people pay a salary they are entitled to as full services as the corporation that does so. As a business principle, it is difficult to evade that fact.

The Tacoma (Wash.) News of July 9 said:

* * * The bill, of course, is directed at Bill, who, in spite of the delicate difficulties in connection with Mexico, is proposing to leave the Secretary of State's office in the hands of subordinates while he Chautauquas awhile for the edification of his growing purse. However, there is a large and growing population which feels a greater sense of security when William is away than when he is there.

The Tucson (Ariz.) Citizen of June 11 said:

It is true that tens of thousands of American citizens feel indignant and mortified when they see or read about the Secretary of State "doing his turn" at the Chautauqua gatherings and vying with yodlers and vaudeville performers in efforts to win popular applause. In the end the Secretary of State will find that he has lost more of popular favor than he has gained by those Chautauqua "stunts," and that the applause that greets them does not represent the sober judgment of the American people in reference to his conduct. All that he needs is plenty of rope—and the result is not in doubt.

The Gazette, of Reno, Nev., said in its issue of June 11:

THE BILL SHOULD PASS.

There has been many a speech delivered in Congress and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that was prompted by the needs of the lecture syndicate and vaudeville managers much more than by the needs of the public.

If it is true that Mr. Bryan can not thrive on the $1,000-per-month salary of his office, he should either ask Congress for an increase or vacate his office for the public good. The people have come to believe that there are a good many men in the United States whose services are available, who are better equipped by temperament and training for Mr. Bryan's office than Mr. Bryan. When he insists on taking the lecture platform during times like this, he strengthens this belief.

The Tacoma (Wash.) Ledger of June 10 said:

The people elect public officials, and thus give them the prominence which they capitalize on the lecture platform.

The Virginian, of Richmond, Va., of June 10 said:

The place for Cabinet officers and Members of Congress when Congress is in session is in Washington.

The Truth Seeker, of New York City, in its issue of June 20 said:

The measure is directed at William J. Bryan, Secretary of State, whose neglect of public duty, in order to scoop in a little more money to add to his already large fortune, has become a public scandal.

The Philadelphia Evening Bulletin of June 9 said:

No one thinks it necessary or desirable to enact a law prohibiting any Government official or Member of Congress from seeking other sources of income while drawing salary from the Treasury, but when Mr. BRITTEN generalizes and says that public officials ought to stick to their jobs and leave the Chautauqua field to yodlers, tumblers, and other performers, and specifically declares that the public interests have suffered through the repeated absences of the Secretary of State, the public opinion of the Nation is in full agreement with him.

There was a distinct disappointment that Mr. Bryan last year showed so little regard for the traditions of his office—not to speak of its actual requirements—as to enter upon his lecture engagements, and that he was so heedless of public opinion as to continue that practice, apparently self-satisfied with the lame excuses which he offered for his course. But the renewal of the contract for the coming season is to be condemned even more severely. Not only is the affront to a definite and clearly indicated public opinion so deliberate as to be without excuse, but the situation in the affairs of his department ought to command not only all Mr. Bryan's time but all his ability and energy. Mr. Bryan should stick to his job or leave it. The "gentle" hint which Congressman BRITTEN drops can be taken either way, with full approval of the public.

The Galesburg (Ill.) Republican of June 11 says:

The Britten bill is good as far as it goes, but it does not go quite far enough. It ought also to provide a penalty for those Members of Congress who are in the habit of leaving the sessions for the purpose of making Chautauqua addresses, while at the same time accepting pay for being in Washington to attend to their duties there. Nor is it seemly that the President himself, while the President not of a mere party but of the whole people, should run about over the country engaged in a political warfare.

Washington is a good place for all these people while Congress is in session and while great issues are before that body.

So an air brake may do some good. The Congressmen and the administration can all get their views before the country without appearing on the lecture platform to the neglect of congressional and official duties.

The Detroit Free Press of June 12 said:

Why forcibly assist Mr. Bryan to reform and maintain an appearance of dignity when every lecture he delivers along with bell ringers and sleight-of-hand artists is but emphasizing the completeness of his misfit as Secretary of State.

The Terre Haute (Ind.) Tribune of June 13 said:

Most people would consider it an exhibition of poor taste for the head of the State Department to go off on a lecture tour while this Government was engaged in critical diplomacy with a foreign nation. Similarly the place of a Senator or Representative while Congress is in session is at Washington. The constituents of a Member who should desert his post at such a time to lecture ought to resent his action; doubtless they would.

The Zanesville (Ohio) Courier of June 10 said:

The following paragraph, taken from a Chautauqua press agent's story, shows the close relation existing between the lecture platform and modern statesmanship:

"Many reform movements which have swept the country have had their real beginning on the Chautauqua platform. At one time there were no less than 40 Members of the two Houses of Congress who were giving part or all of their time to the Chautauqua."

Forty Members of Congress giving part or all of their time to the Chautauqua. Where would the Chautauqua be without these 40 eloquent orators and where would they be without the Chautauqua?

The Savannah (Ga.) News of June 10 said:

It must be admitted that it is rather undignified for the Secretary of State to travel around the country as a part of an entertainment combination, and there is a pretty general feeling, without regard to party affiliations, that the good name of the American people suffers somewhat in the estimation of other peoples because of the exhibition, but there is no doubt that the lectures of Mr. Bryan are very much appreciated by those who hear them and that he himself gets a good deal of enjoyment as well as money out of them. * * * But it is a question whether it wouldn't be a good thing to prohibit Cabinet officers, and Members of Congress while Congress is in session, from lecturing for pay. The Government pays them a good salary for their services, and it is therefore entitled to all of their time. Instead of writing and delivering lectures they should be studying questions with which Congress has to deal.

The Springfield (Mass.) Union of June 11 said:

Representative BRITTEN, of Illinois, surely must be a man of hard heart and wholly lacking in the qualities of human sympathy and compassion. On no other ground can we explain the introduction by him of a bill to curb the Chautauqua activities of Secretary of State William Jennings Bryan. * * * According to Mr. Bryan's own statements, he has averaged to save only about $10,000 a year for the last 18 years, and the income from this, together with his meager salary of $12,000 a year as head of the State Department and his little pickings on the Chautauqua circuit, are his only means of support.

The Post-Express, Rochester, N. Y., June 11:

A somewhat curious situation leaves him free to act as he sees fit in this respect. A word of public criticism from the President would constrain him either to give up his office or his tent-show stunts; but no such criticism has been given out or allowed to leak out at the White House. It does not take a mind reader to fathom the President's motives. He can not afford to break with Mr. Bryan at this juncture. The break may come later, and probably will, when the Secretary begins to lay emphasis in his political speeches on the Baltimore convention platform plank against second terms.

The Philadelphia Inquirer, June 14:

For certain it is that Mr. Bryan drops the mantle of dignity of office when he steps out of the dignified Department of State, which deals with our relations with countries all over the world, and appears on the lecture platform, frequently under a tent, with all sorts of other performers. He then drops diplomacy for mere money-making.

The Age-Herald, Birmingham, Ala.:

The Secretary of State is lowering the dignity of this Government when he engages actively in platform work along with "Tyrolean" yodlers, contortionists, and sleight-of-hand artists. * * * But the most serious thing in regard to the head of the State Department engaging in the lecture business is the breach of propriety.

The Journal, Kansas City, Mo., June 9:

* * * Members of the Cabinet receive salaries sufficient to maintain themselves according to the standard befitting the office. In a majority of instances they receive more pay than they could command in their private capacities. The importance of their views is very largely increased by the official position they occupy, and for that reason it is palpably little short of downright graft for them to receive double remuneration for their "services."

The Times, Bath, Me., June 10:

* * * The shining mark at which this Republican measure is aimed is no less a person than Secretary of State Bryan, whose neglect of official duties and systematic campaign of lectures for pay have been a public scandal since the very beginning of the present administration.

The Standard, Bridgeport, Conn., June 9:

* * * Certain Government officials, as a matter of fact, are paying too little attention to their work and too much to remunerative side-lines. * * * The President can and should restrain his official family from their undignified and improper course.

The Herald Transcript, Peoria, Ill., June 9:

As for Mr. Bryan, the silver-tongued one has already explained that he is a lecturer by profession and that he can not live in Washington on $1,000 a month. If he could he wouldn't have done his own marketing at the Capital, and carried his lunch to the State Department. Against necessity there is no law.

As for Senator LA FOLLETTE, he recently read a speech of 900,000 words into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, at an expense to the Government of about $9,000. * * * The Chautauqua is performing both a distinguished and a timely public service in removing from Washington men who know nothing about government. However distressing it may be to the yodelers and contortionists, the public always is a gainer when its Democratic statesmen "hit the trail," and leave Washington in the hands of subordinates who remember how the Government was managed when it was prosperous.

The Trenton (N. J.) Times, June 10:

The country would be benefited, by reason of their giving their entire time to the business for which they were elected or appointed and for which they are all liberally paid.

The Times Herald, Waco, Tex., June 17, 1914, said:

"* * * Doubtless Congressman BRITTEN is a humorist, and his bill is only designed to poke fun at these unhappy souls." That's it; BRITTEN is having his little joke. At the same time he sees in this lecturing business on the part of public officials a lowering in the tone of American life. There is a cheapness about it which is bound to have a demoralizing effect.

Times, Chattanooga, Tenn., June 10, 1914, said:

* * * Mr. BRITTEN'S measure will hardly pass in its drastic form, but it would seem that if public men will not voluntarily recognize their public responsibilities, something should be done to discredit their activities directed toward private gain while in the service of the people.

The Morning Telegraph, New York, June 10, 1914, said:

* * * He has an old-fashioned idea that when a man is elected to office and accepts it, or when a man is appointed to fill an office, he should do a day's work for a day's pay. It is Mr. BRITTEN'S idea, for example, that if a man is appointed Secretary of State he should be on the job and not be doing monologues at county fairs and yodels at Chautauquas.

The Oregonian, Portland, Oreg., June 20, 1914, said:

Representative BRITTEN'S making it a penal offense for any Cabinet officer, head or clerk of a department to lecture for pay is not likely to pass, but it will drag Secretary Bryan's Chautauqua perquisites into the public eye, and will teach others to preserve the dignity of high office. He has given color of truth to the foreign jibe that the dollar is king in America, and he should be so pilloried that none will dare to imitate him.

[Applause.]

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I now yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, the other day the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], when I was not upon the floor—and I am not condemning him for that—submitted some remarks that could at least be said to be slightly tinged with personalities. The gentleman seemed to be considerably "peeved" because I had made some remarks about the psychological prosperity that was blessing the land. The sedate gentleman, noted for voice, vocabulary, and voluptuous verbosity, proceeded to make one of his characteristic speeches. It was riotous in adjectives, rich in redundancy, magnificent in its inflated pomposity, and unmarred by a single thought. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, it is especially fitting that the textbook statesmen who now misdirect the destiny of the Nation should have come to their defense the brave and gallant Alabama warrior who has won world-wide fame for bravery fighting women. I can conceive how it is possible for a mentality that thinks that the great tide of woman suffrage can be stayed by stilted oratory to find something good in this Democratic administration. I can conceive how it is possible for one who believes that "the hand that rocks the cradle" will pollute the ballot box to find something to praise in the universal business depression that now curses this country.

Mr. Chairman, it is an inspiring sight to see this full-rigged windjammer from the suffrage seas sailing to the defense of this discredited, discouraged, and already doomed Democratic administration. [Laughter on the Republican side.] Why, we would suppose that with such a brave man at his back the President would find courage to tell the people of this Nation where he stands on the question of woman suffrage. But perhaps Great Britain and the transcontinental railroads prefer that he wait until it is written into a Democratic national platform, until it is voted for by a Democratic Congress, until it is praised by a Democratic candidate for President, and then show again the power of patronage and fear of defeat by compelling a panic-stricken Democratic majority cowardly to repudiate it.

But I do not blame the gentleman from Alabama or any other of the White House favorites for defending the administration. They do what they are told; they think as they are told; they vote as they are told; and they talk as they are told. This administration that has sent out of the country more gold in the last six months than any other administration in the same length of time, that has turned the balance of trade against us, that has increased our imports, that has decreased our exports, that has closed more mills and factories, thrown more men into idleness, destroyed more business, and made more beggars than any other administration in the same length of time, will find it takes something more than the "sound and fury" of the fierce fighter of females from Alabama to save it from the wrath of a betrayed people.

Mr. RAGSDALE. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No. Now, Mr. Chairman, referring to the peculiar oratorical style of the distinguished gentleman from Alabama, one of the ardent admirers of the quiet and placid gentleman has given him some advice, and I will ask the Clerk to read it. I trust that the gentleman will receive it in the kindly spirit in which it is offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

"We would suggest for the consideration of the gentleman that in promulgating his esoteric cogitations or articulating superficial sentimentalities he well might beware of platitudinous preponderosity.

"That he might better let his conversation possess a classified conciseness, compact comprehensibleness, and coalescent consistency.

"He should eschew all conglomerations of flatulent garrulity.

"In all his extemporaneous discantings and unpremeditated expectations he ought to elucidate intelligibility with veracious vivacity, but without rodomontary or thrasmodical vociferation.

"He sedulously should avoid polysyllabic profundity and pompous prolixity as well as voluble vacuity, ventriloquial verbosity, and venial vapidity.

"He should remember that the enunciation of a concatenation of evolutionary, evanescent, metaphysical aphorisms does not conceal the translucent exiguity of the precipitant panjandrum.

"If he will do that, the people of the United States may really think he knows, and may be able to understand him."

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask if it killed him?

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no more general debate, the Clerk will read the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, there is no one else who desires time on this side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That an act entitled "An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected," approved June 25, 1910, as amended by an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act providing for publicity of contributions made for the purpose of influencing elections at which Representatives in Congress are elected' and extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States and limiting the amount of campaign expenses," approved August 19, 1911, and all acts amendatory thereof, be, and they are hereby, codified, revised, and amended so as to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That the term 'political committee' under the provisions of this act shall include the national committees of all political parties and the national congressional campaign committees of all political parties and all committees, associations, or organizations which shall in two or more States influence the result or attempt to influence the result of an election at which Representatives or Senators in Congress are to be elected."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. As I understand, the only change made in this section from the existing law is to put the words "or Senators" after "Representatives." Is that correct?

Mr. RUCKER. I think that is correct.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That every political committee as defined in this act shall have a chairman and a treasurer. It shall be the duty of the treasurer to keep a detailed and exact account of all money or its equivalent received by or promised to such committee or any member thereof, or by or to any person acting under its authority or in its behalf, and the name of every person, firm, association, or committee from whom received, and of all expenditures, disbursements, payments, or promises of payment or disbursement made by the committee or any member thereof, or by any person acting under its authority or in its behalf, and to whom paid, distributed, disbursed, or promised. No officer or member of such committee, or other person acting under its authority or in its behalf, shall receive any money or its equivalent, or expend or promise to expend any money on behalf of such committee, until after a chairman and treasurer of such committee shall have been chosen.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like the attention of the gentleman from Missouri in charge of this bill, and call his attention to this provision and also to section 6, which provides that only the treasurer of the political committee shall make an affidavit showing the amounts collected and expended. I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not he took into consideration, or whether his committee considered, requiring a statement of the chairman of the committee or that the statement required to be made by the treasurer be verified or corroborated by the chairman and also the secretary of the committee? I want to say to the gentleman that if he wants to have the law disclose all moneys that may be received and disbursed by a political committee, he ought to require somebody besides the treasurer to make the affidavit. It is usually the custom of political committees to designate some person to act as treasurer who does not have an active connection with the committee. It may be same official of a bank or clerk of a bank, who receives the money turned over to him by the secretary or the chairman of the committee, and at the close of the campaign he makes an affidavit accounting for all moneys that he receives. There is not anything in this bill, as I understand it, that requires anybody to make a statement of moneys that may have been received and expended by the chairman or the secretary of the committee—which might be expended and the treasurer have no knowledge whatever of the receipt or expenditure of such moneys. So I again ask the gentleman from Missouri whether or not the committee considered this question and considered whether it ought to require a statement that shows the moneys received and the expenditure by requiring a sworn statement from the chairman and secretary of the committee as well as the treasurer? Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman I would have attempted to answer the question as first propounded, without having it repeated to me, if I could have had the opportunity. Replying to the gentleman's question, I will say the committee did consider that. The treasurer of the committee, like the treasurer of all bodies, is supposed to take care of the finances. The law provides the committee shall not through anyone collect any money until a treasurer has been appointed, and then requires the treasurer to keep an accurate account of all moneys received by himself or by others, and I assume, and the committee assumed, that a political committee which delegates the authority to a cashier of a bank or other person to collect moneys must under this law ascertain from that official, whoever he may be, at the time that his statement must be made and filed what money and from whom it has been collected and account for it in such statement.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes; but is there really anything in this bill that requires that official to make any statement under oath, and may not the treasurer be limited in what he may know about what has been collected and expended by what the chairman or the secretary may tell him?

Mr. RUCKER. The treasurer is the custodian of the fund.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Now, let me illustrate——

Mr. RUCKER. I will say to the gentleman, Mr. Chairman, I believe this is the existing law, as the gentleman well understands——

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. I understand it is.

Mr. RUCKER. And I believe the law is as broad as we can safely make it; but I will say to the gentleman now, and to all gentlemen on the floor, if anyone can suggest concrete language which will make this law more effective than it now is, or as proposed in this bill, so far as I am concerned, I will accept it.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Let me ask this question: Suppose a chairman of a political committee receives $1,000 as a campaign contribution and he takes to the treasurer $500 and hands it to him, and states that it is a contribution he has received, and the other $500 he says nothing about, but he spends that in the conduct of the campaign; what is there in this bill to prevent that being done or that requires a statement to be made showing such contribution and expenditure?

Mr. Chairman, I ask for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. Section 5 requires everyone who receives money, whether a member of the committee or not, to make account of it to the treasurer?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Yes. But suppose he does not; suppose he does not account for it?

Mr. MAPES. Then he violates the law, does he not?

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. What is the penalty?

Mr. RUCKER. There is a penalty attached to it. There is no question about that.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. But why do you not require the treasurer to make the sworn statement and also have it corroborated by the chairman and secretary?

Mr. RUCKER. I thought this would be absolutely effective. If the other plan would improve it, as the gentleman thinks, I am willing that he should offer an amendment to that effect. I am ready to do anything that will carry out the idea.

Mr. BURKE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That no political committee as defined in this act shall distribute, disburse, contribute, loan, advance, give, or promise in any one State any sum whatever in notes, checks, drafts, or money in excess of or greater than the aggregate amount contributed, promised, loaned, given, or advanced to such committee by actual residents of such State: Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to limit the amount which such political committee may expend in good faith in employing campaign speakers, in defraying actual expenses of campaign speakers sent out by such committee, the expense of printing and distributing literature, and the cost of newspaper advertisements, plainly marked as such, ordered by such political committee.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. RAKER. I would like to inquire of the chairman just what his interpretation is of the "actual residents"? How far will that go? Can not a man go into a State and be there only for a day or two and be an actual resident, and thereby indirectly violate the law that you are trying to make? Why not make it "actual bona fide residents" of that State?

Mr. RUCKER. I hardly think so.

Mr. RAKER. Suppose a man went into an adjoining State and said he was going to live there and stayed only three days; he could contribute all the money he wanted to, and thereby defeat the very purpose of this section.

Mr. RUCKER. Well, I suggest to the gentleman if he knows any way by which that would be made more effective, I have no objection to his offering an amendment to that effect.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, on page 3, line 14, after the word "actual," insert the words "and bona fide."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 3, line 14, after the word "actual," by inserting the words "and bona fide."

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the gentleman that I have no objection to the insertion of this new language at all, but I can not believe it will add to the bill. This is a political committee. How could a committee determine, when the contribution is received by it, whether the party from whom it was received was a bona fide resident or not?

Mr. RAKER. So that there will be a law on the statute books that a man must be an actual bona fide resident of that State; that is, as soon as the campaign comes on a man can not go to some other State and remain there only a few days and contribute all the money he wants to. It would thwart the very purpose of the bill.

Mr. RUCKER. I have no objection to the amendment, but I do not believe it helps it a particle.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to discuss the amendment. I do not think it is a matter of any consequence; but I do want to get the interpretation of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] of this section. If I understand the section correctly, construing the proviso in connection with the other part of it, a committee may spend any amount which it chooses for the payment of speakers and for defraying expenses of speakers and for defraying the expenses of printing and distributing literature and the cost of newspaper advertisements. It can expend that amount, no matter from what source or from what State it is received.

Mr. RUCKER. That is my construction of it; yes, sir.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. But under the other part of it, that part before the proviso, it can not make an expenditure exceeding the amount which may be contributed by the actual and bona fide residents if the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] prevails—the actual and bona fide residents of the State. Now, what are they supposed to be able to contribute for that would be legitimate beyond that which is contained in the proviso?

Mr. RUCKER. I will say to the gentleman that common experience teaches us all, at least teaches me, that these great campaign committees, political committees, have from time to time sent money in bulk to the committees in the States—for instance, to the State committee or the congressional committee—to use as they see fit to use it; and the purpose of this section is to prevent the sending of large sums of money on the eve of election into doubtful States or close States, to be used by local authorities in a way that might be injurious to public morals.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will understand the question that rises in my mind, and that is, What is there that there can be a legitimate expenditure for, besides that which is contained in the proviso?

Mr. RUCKER. I think it is perfectly legitimate for a national committee of any party to make a donation to a State committee of any party to be used for political purposes. I think it is universally done.

Mr. RAKER. It is done quite frequently.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am talking about the final expenditure of the money.

Mr. RUCKER. After the national committee has put the money into the control of the State committee the national committee has no further control over its use or expenditure; that is, the national committee has not.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then, under those conditions almost every phase of this law can be avoided?

Mr. RUCKER. That is true, I take it, of practically every penal statute. Sometimes they are violated.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. Is there no provision, then, for a report by the committee using this money after the expenditure of it?

Mr. RUCKER. I will say to the gentleman that this is intended to be national legislation, and not intended to be applied to individual States. The hope is by the friends of legislation of this sort that the States will cooperate with the National Government, as many States have already done, and require political committees acting within the States to make reports, and in that way the whole matter would dovetail together.

Mr. BURNETT. Would it not be competent for this bill to require a report by the receiving committee when the expenditure was in aid of any Federal election?

Mr. RUCKER. I think it would be. But, as the gentleman will notice, the trouble is that the committee in the State to which the money is likely to be allotted and would be allotted has no particular function so far as the election of Federal officers are concerned, Members of Congress or the Senate. They are selected for the purpose of carrying on a State campaign. The other election is incident to it because our election happens to come at the same time theirs do.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from California, in reference to his amendment, what is the difference between an actual resident of a State and an actual bona fide resident of a State?

Mr. RAKER. I think with a little time, possibly more than the House would desire to give me, for a presentation of the authorities describing what is a bona fide resident and what is an actual resident, I might make it sufficiently plain that there is a distinction and that it ought to be included in this language. A man might be an actual resident by simply going into a State, and if he is there two days and says, "I am going to live in California and I am living here; I have changed my residence from some other State," he is an actual resident.

Mr. MANN. And he is a bona fide resident.

Mr. RAKER. He may and he may not be.

Mr. MANN. Suppose I move from Chicago to California, do I not become a resident the moment I land there?

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman might move out there with that purpose and that intent, with the intent to become a bona fide resident of California, and the moment he landed there he is a resident of that State and he loses his residence in the State of Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Unless I do that I do not become a resident at all. I may be there, but not a resident.

Mr. RAKER. But if a man goes there with the mere purpose of evading this law, for the purpose of carrying a large amount of money that he may put into the State and then have it turned over to the national committee, for the purpose of avoiding this law, he is not a bona fide resident, and it seems to me the clearer the language can be made the better.

Mr. MANN. I must confess that I do not see any distinction between an "actual resident" of a State and an "actual bona fide" resident of a State. A man may be a resident of a State and not be in it for 10 years. He may be a bona fide resident and not be in it 10 minutes.

Mr. RAKER. A man may have his residence in a State and not be there at all; he may be in Europe on official business, but he has a residence in that State. He is not an actual resident unless he is actually and personally there. There is the distinction in that matter.

Mr. MANN. Take the case of an ambassador—and they have been known to make campaign contributions, either before or after appointment—would actual residence shut out a rich ambassador from making a contribution or not?

Mr. RAKER. If he is at the port of Siam, I imagine it would.

Mr. MANN. What is the difference between being at Siam or London?

Mr. RAKER. I do not know that there is any except that he may not have so much to do.

Mr. MANN. Or across the border in Canada. How long has the gentleman been away from home?

Mr. RAKER. Except for a few days, about three years and a half.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman considers himself an actual and bona fide resident of California, I suppose?

Mr. RAKER. I am a bona fide resident of California and am actually residing now in Washington, as I am here on official business.

Mr. MANN. Then, as I understand, under the gentleman's theory he could not contribute to a campaign fund in California which could be expended anywhere else.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, I will be there in time to make some contribution.

Mr. MANN. Not the way it looks now.

Mr. RAKER. I think so.

Mr. MANN. We are going to keep the gentleman here. The gentleman from California is endeavoring to make a distinction which does not exist. The gentleman is living in Washington, but he is not a resident, either an actual resident or bona fide resident of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. After all, would it not be better to use the word "citizen"? The word "citizen" has an entirely different meaning than that of "resident." A citizen means one thing and resident another.

Mr. MANN. That would prevent a man who had not applied for citizenship from making any contribution to a campaign fund. I do not say whether that is right or wrong.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. There is a well-known distinction between citizen and resident.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I believe "citizen" would come nearer to reaching what it is sought to reach in this bill than the word "resident." I think the contention of the gentleman from California is technically correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. I think that all election laws in every State in the Union provide for a length of time during which a person must reside in the State, in the county, or in the voting precinct. Now, a man may reside there and not be there during that time at all. If he is in the Government service, he is still a resident of his district, and the election laws do not usually say "actual and bona fide residence." That term "reside" or "residence," meaning the same thing, has its meaning pretty well established through the election laws of the country, and if that is the purpose, why not use the ordinary well-known language?

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I am not positive as to the exact language, but my impression is that the law of California requires a residence of 1 year in the State, 90 days in the county, and 30 days in the precinct, and he must be a resident of the State. It does not say that he must physically reside there.

Mr. MANN. No; but that covers the case. In some places it says that he must have been a resident in either case, and he must have resided there, but that language is well construed as to its meaning. To be a resident or reside as used in election laws has been well construed. If that is the purpose, why not use language which has a well-defined meaning instead of using language which no one will know just what it does mean? A man who walks into a State without the intention of making it a permanent residence, does not acquire a residence in the State. A college student who goes to college in a State, unless he intends to make it a permanent residence, does not acquire the right of being a resident.

Mr. RAKER. The man that goes into a State and resides there, although he does not intend to make it his home, is a resident of that State, and it has been so held by the courts many times in civil as well as in criminal cases.

Mr. MANN. I do not think that is possible. Of course there is always a controversy as to where a man intends to reside. It is a question of intent, as the courts have always held, but if a man fraudulently comes into a State for the purpose of making a contribution, he does not acquire residence there.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. What is the purpose of the word "actual" there?

Mr. MANN. That is what I am trying to find out—the distinction between a residence, an actual residence, and an actual and bona fide residence.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Does not an actual residence mean the place where the person is actually staying at the time?

Mr. MANN. I do not think so.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. And does not the residence mean the place where his permanent residence is?

Mr. MANN. I will ask my colleague a question. He is actually in the city of Washington, and he is likely to be here all summer.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I am very sorry to hear that.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that he is a resident of Washington or a resident of the State of Illinois?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I think that I am a resident of the State of Illinois, and, according to the gentleman's statement, an actual resident of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no; the gentleman is not a resident of the District of Columbia. He is sojourning in Washington on official business. He is a resident of the State of Illinois.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The word "actual" has no force or meaning, then, at all?

Mr. MANN. I do not think it has.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, while, to my mind, I think it is proper, there are some technical features about it; and to avoid discussion, if I may obtain unanimous consent, I will withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: Supposing the political committee has its headquarters in Chicago, where most of them go. Here is a provisio that no political committee, as defined in this act, shall distribute, disburse, contribute, loan, advance, give, or promise in any one State any sum, and so forth, greater than is contributed by the residents of that States, with certain exceptions, which are enumerated in another place in the section. Do I understand from this bill, as the language states, that a political committee with headquarters in Chicago would have to pay all or its officials, all of its employees not engaged in speaking or distributing literature or making newspaper advertisements, out of moneys received in the State of Illinois and keep an account showing that fact?

Mr. FALCONER. A national committee?

Mr. MANN. A national or a congressional committee—either one. That is what this says.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I confess that is a meritorious criticism. I do not believe the language used clearly expresses the intention of the committee.

Mr. MANN. Oh, undoubtedly I think it was not intended. It had not occurred to me before.

Mr. RUCKER. I think it would be better if we would exempt the actual current expenses of the committee in carrying on its work.

Mr. MANN. Has the gentleman an idea of what the expenses of campaign speakers would consist? Suppose the Democratic national committee in the next campaign should send the Speaker of the House out in a special train. There would, of course, be various people accompanying him. Would the expenses of those people be a part of the expenses of the campaign speaker?

Mr. RUCKER. The party that accompanies a speaker?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. I take it so. I will say to the gentleman that this section is drawn to incorporate in the law the principle embodied in a bill introduced and passed through the Senate, and now pending before the committee of the House of which I am the chairman; and leaving out some words which I deemed unnecessary, I have gotten, as I think, the exact principle involved in the Senate bill in this provision.

Mr. MANN. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. RUCKER. The purpose is to limit the amount of money which may be donated or allotted by great committees to the State committees, but not in anywise to cripple those committees in anything that is a campaign along educational lines, either through the press or by campaign speakers, and I say that in my opinion the language referred to would include the expense of all who might constitute the party of the gentleman engaged in the campaign.

Mr. MANN. Take the expense of printing and of distributing literature. Of course that would cover speeches which were being sent out. Would it cover the expense of the editorial writers, which I believe various committees at times employ, or always employ, to send out items for newspapers, and so forth?

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I will say frankly to the gentleman, speaking for myself—and I believe I am justified in speaking for the entire committee—our purpose was to put no limitation on any effort to reach the judgment of men through whatever channel it may be made.

Mr. MANN. I am asking these questions so that the gentleman will be on record upon the subject.

Mr. RUCKER. That is my construction of it.

Mr. MANN. Because the gentleman can readily see, I think, that with language of this sort, when it is to be first construed, it might be construed by one man in one way and by another man in another way, and the gentleman's own construction would have great weight.

Mr. RUCKER. I confess the suggestions the gentleman is making are meritorious, and I think the language "the expense of printing and distributing literature" means everything connected with that literature—the preparation of it, the printing of it, and the distribution of it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows there is a great deal of what is called plate matter sent out for the country press.

Mr. RUCKER. Yes; I think that would be included in this.

Mr. MANN. And often the plates themselves.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that he has made one suggestion here that appeals to me so strongly that I think the section ought to be amended in that respect, and I will ask unanimous consent that we pass this section over until later, so that I may endeavor to frame an amendment which will meet the difficulty to which the gentleman has called attention.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to pass this section over, to be returned to later on. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I desire to call the attention of the chairman to another feature of the section, commencing with the proviso on line 15, page 3:

Provided, That nothing in this section shall be construed to limit the amount which such political committee may expend, in good faith, in employing campaign speakers, in defraying actual expenses of campaign speakers sent out by such committee, the expense of printing and distributing literature, and the cost of newspaper advertisements, plainly marked as such, ordered by such political committee.

Now, what is to be marked as such?

Mr. RUCKER. The newspaper advertisements.

Mr. RAKER. Does not the gentleman believe there ought to be something in there to say that this printed literature, newspaper advertisements, should be marked so as to avoid any question?

Mr. RUCKER. It says plainly "marked as such," and that has reference to newspaper advertisements.

Mr. RAKER. That runs back to the speakers as well.

Mr. RUCKER. I do not think it is necessary to label the other, because I think everybody who receives it would know it is political literature.

Mr. RAKER. I simply suggest that to the gentleman, as he is going to allow this to go over. Suppose you add after "advertising," "all of such printed matter and newspaper advertisements shall be"? I call that to the gentleman's attention.

Mr. RUCKER. I will suggest to the gentleman there will be some difficulty along that line. For instance, in sending out your speech or mine, or any gentleman's speech, would you want to mark it "political advertisement"? Suppose we send out——

Mr. BRYAN. Or a copy of the platform.

Mr. RUCKER (continuing). Public documents of Congress, would they have to be taken by some one and marked "political advertisement"?

Mr. RAKER. What I mean to get at is this: There ought to be some definite designation of this matter. If a fellow is trying to come in in the dark, undertaking to send out his literature and his stuff, or somebody else for him, without any designation, without any name or without any address, there ought to be some designation of that material as to the name and address of the sender.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I know the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] knows there is nothing I am trying to do that will permit any man to work in the dark; it is absolutely the other way. I want to turn the light on every transaction regarding the election of any gentleman of this House or to the other House, and I will say to the gentleman I will consider that matter and if I conclude the suggestion made would be an improvement of the bill, why we may incorporate it.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I understand the gentleman purposes to pass this matter temporarily for the purpose of considering amendments. I wonder if he will not consider the feasibility and advisability of placing some limitation on the amount that can be expended by way of newspaper advertisements. I notice this proviso here which says:

That nothing in this section shall be construed to limit the amount which such political committee may expend.

Does not the gentleman think there ought to be some limitation upon the amount which can be expended, even though it be marked as political advertisement? Otherwise it will put a man who does not have very extensive resources at a tremendous disadvantage, and it seems to me in the interest of the public service and fairness to men of this country of all means, whether they be rich or poor, there ought to be some reasonable limitation, and I would ask the gentleman to consider an amendment of that character.

Mr. RUCKER. I will state to the gentleman in reply that the section we are now considering has no reference to the individual candidates at all.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand that.

Mr. RUCKER. It refers simply to political committees.

Mr. WILLIS. It seems to me that a proper limitation ought to be possible——

Mr. RUCKER. I will say to the gentleman further that whether right or wrong, I am never quite sure—at least, I am not quite sure as to this—but my thought has been all the time that Congress ought not to place any limitation on the expenditure by the committees or by individuals in their effort to reach the judgment of men; that any appeal that goes to men's judgment ought to be permitted. The gentleman suggests that it gives a man who is rich an advantage over a man of poverty. Well, that is an advantage we can not equalize.

Mr. WILLIS. But we can prevent abuses growing out of it, can we not?

Mr. RUCKER. The fact that a man has money should not bar him from reaching the judgment of men if he desires to do so, and can do so in a proper way by publication of letters, circulars, or in any proper way he wants to do it. That in itself is not blamable.

Mr. WILLIS. Take the case of where a candidate or committee might buy up a whole page of a paper or the whole paper; does not the gentleman think there ought to be some reasonable limitation? It seems to me there ought to be some limitation.

Mr. RUCKER. I will say the thought involved in this section is this, that when newspaper articles are marked as advertisements, regardless of the cost, every reader who reads it will know it is a political advertisement put in by some political party or representatives of some political party, and it is not in the interest usually of one man, but generally is in the interest of some political party, and my judgment is a great deal of money is not used that way. The bulk of the money that contaminates and demoralizes is not used that way.

Mr. WILLIS. I hope the gentleman will consider such an amendment.

Mr. RUCKER. I will be glad to consider it.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. I will.

Mr. FESS. I understood a moment ago the gentleman said this pertained to the committees and not to the individual.

Mr. RUCKER. I think so.

Mr. FESS. Well, now, is there anything in the bill that would forbid an individual who is undertaking to finance a great campaign from operating through his own forces? That is not a political committee at all. Does it touch that?

Mr. RUCKER. Does the gentleman mean candidate or individual?

Mr. FESS. Individual.

Mr. RUCKER. We touch that where we require an individual who contributes more than $50 to make an accounting of it.

Mr. FESS. Suppose he does not contribute to the committee, but simply apportions it out himself?

Mr. RUCKER. If he used as much as $50 outside of his State, he would, under this act, if it becomes a law, or under existing law, be required to file a statement showing where the expense was incurred and for what purpose the money was expended.

Mr. FESS. Whether he expends it through a committee or by paying it to a committee?

Mr. RUCKER. Unless he spends it through a committee, and in that case the committee must charge itself with its receipt.

Mr. FESS. If he does not spend it through the committee, but makes the application himself, then what?

Mr. RUCKER. Then he must report under oath.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HOUSTON). The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] asks unanimous consent that this section be passed over, with the privilege of returning to it later. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman if he has made any provision in this bill for the renting of halls? I notice under your limitation it provides for speakers and other things that the committee may do, but you do not provide for hall rent. I suggest that in redrafting the section you take that into consideration.

Mr. RUCKER. I think the actual expenses of campaign speakers would include the payment of hall rent for actual campaign speakers, and the reason we use that language is that no political party under pretense of employing speakers could give a sort of subsidy to individuals. They must be actual campaign speakers. I take it that that language is broad enough to cover hall rent.

I wish I could make it clear to everybody here that, so far as I am concerned, I have no purpose or desire to place any limitations on any efforts made by any political party or any individual to reach the judgment of men. The only thing I have tried to do in this bill is to curb men in those things which are in themselves censurable and which might tend to demoralization.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. I catch the thought of the chairman, and I think it is a worthy one; but I believe you ought to add to the language here the privilege of paying hall rent, because men may construe this differently.

Mr. RUCKER. I will say to the gentleman that if this section is passed over I will consider it.

Mr. RAKER. When you pay hall rent, what are you going to do with the band? What are you going to do with 15 or 20 men in a precinct to control the precinct, to hire this hall? Are you going to have 10 or 15 men to escort the speakers to the hall? Are you going to allow every man in the community under this bill to come in and try to corrupt the voters, instead of permitting as now, under State laws, the employment of bands and the payment of rent? Are you going to allow the employment of rounders and hundreds of men to follow the speakers to and from the hall and to absolutely thwart the wishes and interests of that community?

If you are going to give men an unlimited amount of money to hire bands and halls, and men to attend the speakers, and rigs for getting the speakers there, a man can come along with $10,000 and practically buy up the town under pretense of trying to affect the judgment of the people. That is what the people of this country are against—the men who have means enough to go out and buy every man in a community. Let the people use their judgment from what they read and from what they hear from the speakers, and make up their judgment on that. Then you will get honest elections. But if you permit a lavish expenditure of money, you are making this bill—instead of curtailing those things—a bill to legalize and to license the corrupting of voters in the various districts.

Mr. RUCKER. I believe I have answered the gentleman's questions.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. A word more, Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]. If the mere renting of a hall is corrupting the electorate, then, following out the same line of reasoning, all we have got to do is to go into a community and hire all the people and call them "speakers" and pay them as "speakers."

Mr. RUCKER. That is what this bill prohibits. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have my request submitted—to pass that section and return to it later.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That whoever, acting under the authority or in behalf of such political committee, whether as a member thereof or otherwise, receives any contribution, payment, loan, gift, advance, deposit, or promise of money or its equivalent shall, on demand, and in any event within five days after the receipt of such contribution, payment, loan, gift, advance, deposit, or promise, render to the treasurer of such political committee a detailed account of the same, together with the name and address from whom received, and said treasurer shall forthwith enter the same in a ledger or record to be kept by him for that purpose, which ledger or record shall plainly show the items or sums contributed, paid, loaned, given, advanced, deposited, or promised by citizens of each State separate from other States.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. RAKER. I would like to call the attention of the Chairman to line 8 of page 4, to those words "on demand, and in any event." Ought it not to be mandatory, within five days after the man receives the money, to pay it over?

Mr. RUCKER. It says "on demand, and in any event within five days after the receipt of such contribution."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WILLIS. I notice in this section 5, as compared with section 4, there is a discrepancy. I wondered what the reason was. In section 4 it is provided:

That every payment or disbursement made by a political committee exceeding $10 in amount shall be evidenced by a receipted bill stating the particulars of expense, and every such record, voucher, receipt, or account shall be preserved for 15 months after the election to which it relates.

In other words, it is not necessary that the amounts disbursed be accounted for unless they exceed $10, but in the receipt they are to be accounted for as paid to the treasurer, and so forth, without regard to the amount. What is the reason for that?

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman will find on reading further along that in the rendering of accounts required by this act the committee is not required to go into detailed account of any item under $10; indeed, under $100.

Mr. WILLIS. What section is that?

Mr. RUCKER. I do not remember the number. When he goes to make his affidavits of receipts and expenditures he groups those amounts under $100 into one total unless the contributions from one individual in any item reaches $100. In that event, he has to give that individual's name. I believe the gentleman's question is fully answered in the next section of this bill. If not, then in the next section after that.

Mr. MANN. This is a new provision, I believe, this section. How much of this is new?

Mr. RUCKER. Beginning with the word "which," in line 14, of page 4, and continuing down to the end of line 17.

Mr. MANN. I did not catch what the gentleman said—where it commenced to be new.

Mr. RUCKER. I will repeat: Beginning with the word "which," at the end of line 14, and continuing to the end of line 17 is new language. I would say to the gentleman that the purpose of this new language is to make the bill articulate—this part of it—with section 3 that we have just been discussing.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That the treasurer of every such political committee shall, not more than 15 days and not less than 10 days next before an election at which Representatives in Congress or Senators of the United States are to be elected in two or more States, and not more than 15 days and not less than 10 days next before any general or special election for Representative in Congress or Senator of the United States, in any one State, if such committee shall attempt to influence the result of such election or in any manner participate therein, file in the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives, at Washington, D. C., with said Clerk, an itemized detailed statement; and on each sixth day thereafter until such election said treasurer shall file with said Clerk a supplemental itemized detailed statement. Each of said statements shall conform to the requirements of the following section of this act, except that the supplemental statements herein required need not contain any item of which publicity is given in a previous statement. Each of said statements shall be full and complete, and shall be signed and sworn to by said treasurer.

It shall also be the duty of said treasurer to file a similar statement with said Clerk within 30 days after such election, such final statement also to be signed and sworn to by said treasurer and to conform to the requirements of the following section of this act. The statements so filed with the Clerk of the House shall be preserved by him for 15 months and shall be a part of the public records of his office and shall be open to public inspection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out of line 22, page 4, the words "in two or more States."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 22, strike out the words "in two or more States."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I think there is an inherent weakness in this bill, in that it limits its effect to the national and congressional—the national party committees. If we are going to scrutinize the expenditures of campaign committees connected with the election of Congressmen, whether Representatives or Senators, I can see no reason why we should not extend the scope of this bill to committees operating within a single State. Otherwise there can be all kinds of fraud practiced by committees which are engaged exclusively in the election of Congressmen in one State. There is no denying that we have ample authority over the subject; and yet running all through this bill there is this limitation, that it shall not apply to the returns of committees unless they are concerned in the election of Congressmen in more than one State. How few there are. Why, there are none. It is merely a guise to prevent these State committees from making any returns and conforming to this law. It is used as an excuse to enable State committees and organizations not to make any returns. It will be of no practical value. If the National Government is going to take jurisdiction, then I believe it should extend to all. Congress has the right to supervise the elections of its representatives. The country is demanding some proper supervision of these committees, no matter where they may be located. It is no hardship. Individually we are obliged to make a return. How easy it is for the interests which might be concerned in the election of Representatives and Senators to contribute any amount of money to elect some Representative or Senator. This bill will not prevent it. No State law may prevent it. You are throwing the whole burden upon the States. If you are going to throw the whole burden upon the States, then acknowledge that this law will only apply to national committees.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman answer this question: What provision is there in this bill to require an individual to file a report? That is where the mischief is done—through individuals. An individual gathers up money and spends it for a political candidate. Is there any provision in this bill by which he can be reached?

Mr. STAFFORD. He can be reached if he is associated in any way with the national committee.

Mr. BUTLER. But if he is not?

Mr. STAFFORD. But if he is not there is nothing by which you can reach him. Furthermore, this bill is severely lacking in its punitory provisions.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Punitive.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will stand on the word "punitory."

Mr. BUTLER. It is a good word. It is big enough so we can all stand on it.

Mr. STAFFORD. This bill provides that where any person fails to comply with the provisions of this law the returns shall be sent to the United States district attorneys in the various States throughout the country. We have had in the State of Wisconsin a similar provision, but it was absolutely without any force and effect. We have put on the statute books of Wisconsin recently a live law that compels the observance of its provisions by every candidate, and disqualifies him from being a candidate or holding office unless he conforms to the corrupt-practices act.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. RAKER. Section 1 already contains a provision the same as the one which the gentleman is trying to strike out—that is, the words "in two or more States"—and to strike out those words here would not strike them out there.

Mr. STAFFORD. I was temporarily absent when section 1 was read. There were several similar provisions in the bill; and I presume if the words are stricken out here it will be the desire of the committee to make the bill harmonious, and to strike out the words wherever they occur. I am testing the sense of the committee whether they want to make this a live law or merely a law to cumber up the statute book.

Mr. RAKER. The question I should like to ask the gentleman is whether there are any national committees that conduct campaigns in one State, or have there been within the last 20 years?

Mr. STAFFORD. National committees?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. In case of a vacancy the national congressional committee would interest itself in the election.

Mr. RAKER. We have national committees of the various parties at the present time that relate to the various States. Does the gentleman know of any national organization that has been formed within the last 20 years that conducts a campaign in any one particular State?

Mr. STAFFORD. In the hearings conducted by the House lobby investigation committee it was brought out that there are business associations that take an interest in the election of Members in more than one State. But here is the point I am making: That this law can easily be evaded by the organization of committees for work exclusively within one State, thereby not requiring any account whatever under this law, though they may be directly instrumental in the election or defeat of Members of Congress by the use of large sums of money to which the candidates make no contribution whatever.

Mr. RAKER. Each State has a State committee.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. So this law can not affect them.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the National Government is taking jurisdiction over this matter, I want to reach these voluntary associations that may be formed for the secret purpose of defeating or electing men by fraudulent means, and the language of the bill does not cover that case at all.

Mr. RAKER. Is it the gentleman's idea that there should be a law to wipe out all the organizations in the several States?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Reserving the right to object, I want to say that just as soon as the gentleman gets to a place where he will let me answer one or two of his numerous questions, I shall be glad to do so.

Mr. STAFFORD. In reply to the last inquiry of the gentleman from California, my purpose is not to wipe out these State committees. It is to bring these various State committees within the purview of this bill so far as they do anything toward the election of Members of Congress. Now, Representatives in Congress and Senators are obliged to make returns. Why should not the committees engaged in their election be under the same supervision as national committees?

Mr. RAKER. In the State of California we have purity of election laws, containing drastic provisions relating to the committees and to the publication of contributions. You would not want to wipe out those laws?

Mr. STAFFORD. No. This law as proposed to be amended would only supplement the State laws. By merely eliminating the words "in two or more States" you will make it applicable to every committee that affects in any way the election of Members of Congress.

Mr. RAKER. Can the gentleman name any State where a national committee has been organized to conduct a campaign for Congressmen in any one particular State?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not trying to reach national committees. The bill covers them. I am trying to bring the committees in the States in anywise concerned in the election of a Member of Congress under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. I want to make this suggestion: If the gentleman would not find by embodying in the national law the provision he has in his mind, he might get into endless confusion on account of the conflict that might exist between the national statute and the various State statutes?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; there is a provision in the bill which says it shall not in anywise conflict with the State laws. You will find there is no conflict whatever. This is merely supplementary to State legislation. Take the case existing in my district. The Socialistic Party, that has a close corporation, contributed thousands upon thousands of dollars for the election of my predecessor. When he made his return, not one cent was returned as having been expended by him, and yet Congress knows nothing, nor am I in a position to ascertain how much was expended by that organization. There was an organization concerned in the election of a Representative to Congress, and why should not Congress have some scrutiny over that transaction?

Mr. SISSON. That does not answer the question, because if you undertake to regulate the State committees, which are now under the control of the State laws, and extend this law over them, then you would come in conflict with that jurisdiction, and under this bill that would not occur, because the only effort here is to control those committees which are under the control of the functions of the various committees concerned in a national election.

Mr. STAFFORD. The bill also provides that every candidate for Congress shall make his return. Why should we not extend it so as to make it apply to committees connected with their elections? There are many States that have passed strict laws, and the National Government, if it is to take jurisdiction, should extend it as I have indicated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for recognition for the purpose of pursuing the inquiry of the gentleman from Wisconsin a little further, so that I may get what is in my own mind before the House. If this law was broad enough to make regulations in reference to the State committees, some regulation made by Congress might be in direct conflict with the regulations made by the State. Therefore you would get into endless confusion. Now, this law, as I understand it, is not to interfere with the State election laws, and it is not for the purpose of adding to or taking from the election laws of a State, but for the purpose of reaching those evils, reaching the wrongs which might be perpetrated at an election and which could not be reached so well by State laws. It is true that in the election of Representative or Senator it does require of him certain duties which are regulated also by the State, but that individual merely complies with the regulations here and has the additional duty of complying with the regulations of the State. Therefore the two may harmonize without being in conflict. But if you extend it as the gentleman desires, I can not help but think that there would be endless confusion and trouble.

Mr. STAFFORD. Without extending it we would have no control over the election of Members of Congress, except when those transactions are participated in by a national committee.

Mr. SISSON. I will state frankly that I may be too much alarmed over Federal control of elections, because I lived as a child in a State where we had Federal control of elections, and during that time we had the most dishonest, the most corrupt, and most vicious government that ever existed in a civilized community.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. SISSON. Just a moment. Everybody had a chance to vote except those people who owned property and were bona fide residents and ought to have had the right to vote. The people who were disfranchised were the intelligent property owners, the patriotic people of the section; and those that were permitted to vote were people imported there, ignorant, vicious, purchasable, and corrupt. But I do not care to go into that now. I want to explain that, living where I do, where there was so much abuse of Federal control of elections, that I may be somewhat prejudiced about it. I know I am afraid of Federal control.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has no objection to the Government taking jurisdiction and supervision over national committees and making them conform to the provisions of this law, and he should have the State itself conform to the same rules as the national committee.

Mr. SISSON. I do not think that is a function or ought to be the function of the Federal Government to invade the States and regulate elections.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman will admit that Congress has the authority to determine the means and method by which Members of Congress are elected. Otherwise there is no security for a popular government.

Mr. SISSON. It may be true, but I think it is unwise to exercise it. You have authority under this law, and the reason you can exercise the authority is that you are taking jurisdiction of the man who becomes a Member of this body. This law extends that constitutional authority which has always been in the Constitution of the power of Congress to pass election laws.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, the right to control is unquestionably in Congress, so far as Congressmen are concerned, and has always been so, but the wisdom of exercising that control has been such that in the past, at least, Congress has declined to take control of the election. In this primary election law I do not believe the Federal Government ought to have any sort of jurisdiction over primary elections which are institutions organized in the various States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired.

Mr. RUCKER and Mr. MILLER rose.

Mr. RUCKER. Does the gentleman desire the floor in his own right?

Mr. MILLER. I wanted to ask a question of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], who has just taken his seat, but I will defer. I would like to have five minutes in my own right later on.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I am already confused, because the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] has asked me so many questions in a 15-minute discussion that I probably can not answer them all, though I would very gladly do so if they had been put one at a time. I will say, I hope very much that the motion he made will find no support among the friends of this measure. My notion is that the most effective thing that could be done in this House to kill this legislation would be to adopt the motion made by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes; if the gentleman will make his question short.

Mr. STAFFORD. Even if we did that, the law as it now stands would be on the statute books. The law as it exists on the statute books is largely the bill as stated here, as this is largely a codification of that law.

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, it is very much more.

Mr. STAFFORD. And if you adopt what I suggest, we would give life to the bill.

Mr. RUCKER. It is very much more than a codification. I regret very much the gentleman felt called upon to use some language he has used. I disclaim for myself and my colleagues on the committee, both sides of it, absolutely, unconditionally, any purpose to destroy publicity. We are trying to make publicity effective. I say to the gentleman that this bill is not existing law. There are many features in it that are an improvement over existing law. The pending motion is to strike out the words "in two or more States." That motion, if carried, defeats the bill, because I tell you it can not pass the two legislative bodies with that language out of it. It might pass here, but it can not pass elsewhere; and, besides, this applies to great committees, to committees which obviously from their very nature operate and only operate in more than one State, or never operate otherwise than in more than one State. Hence, it applies to them, and we must use the language used in this bill.

But let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that experience, after the current law was passed, suggested to Members of this House that the law needed amendment, because it sometimes happens that a vacancy occurs in a congressional district, necessitating a special election to fill the vacancy.

It may be in only one district in the United States, and the two congressional campaign committees, or, as we have now, three, each anxious to gain a victory in that district, each contesting every inch of ground, with nothing to divide its attention, may concentrate its entire energies in that one district, or, in the case of a Senator, in one State; and under existing law it would have to make no accounting, because existing law only requires the committee to account where it participates in elections in two or more States, but this bill proposes to amend existing law so as to require the committee to make an accounting of its transactions in connection with any election for Senator in a single State or for Representative in a single district, provided the committee participates in the election. I think it is a vital improvement, a very decided benefit to the legislation, and ought to pass, and I think it will pass.

I conclude, Mr. Chairman, by expressing the hope that no friend of publicity will vote to strike out that phrase where it occurs in this bill, because I say to you it is the life of the measure and absolutely essential.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I am certainly very friendly to the purposes of this pending measure, and do not wish to be classed in any other category, notwithstanding the fact that I do not quite agree with the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I will say that I will not classify the gentleman as an enemy of the bill.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, there has been an evolution in the laws governing campaign contributions and expenses, and properly so. As I recall, the first act passed by Congress simply provided that committees engaged in influencing the elections in two or more States should keep an accurate account of their receipts and expenditures and file that with the Clerk of this House. That was subsequently amended so that candidates themselves had to make such a statement, and I was most heartily in favor of that change. The proposed measure embodies the good provisions of the past laws and contains some additional ones that I think are good; but it seems to me that the measure, if it is going to be perfected, ought to go a step further than this bill now goes and require that campaign committees in the respective districts file a statement just the same as the candidates themselves are required to file, and I can not see the conflict which the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] suggested might exist between the National and the State laws. There could be in that case no greater conflict than now exists in respect to the requirement that candidates shall keep an account of their receipts and expenditures and file them with the Clerk of the House or the Secretary of the Senate, as the case may be. No one will question but that we have full authority, and properly should exercise it, to require candidates to file these accounts. It seems to me that if there is merit in that, there is equal merit in requiring that local campaign committees in the respective districts shall keep such a statement and file that, the same as the candidates are required to do. I do not believe the measure when finally enacted should contain any loophole along that line. It should be air-tight and water-tight, and I do not believe that can be secured unless we do require that the campaign committees in the respective districts make and file these statements.

If the law finally is to be such that the candidates shall make and file the statement, and that the great national campaign committees shall do the same, but that the campaign committees of the respective districts do not need to do so, it seems to me that we leave an opening that certainly ought to be closed, in order that full and complete publicity can be had, to cover all the features incident to elections.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota to strike out the last two words, and therefore I think I am entitled to the floor. I want to take the floor for the purpose of asking my friend from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] some questions. I am most heartily in favor of this bill, and I only wish the committee had reported one wider in its scope. I wish the committee had reported a bill that would have included every bag holder, the men who gather from saloon keepers, agriculturists, manufacturers, and others money to expend in behalf of candidates for office. As I understand, this bill includes nothing except expenditures made by committees.

Mr. RUCKER. This section, the gentleman means.

Mr. BUTLER. The bill itself. Is the bill broad enough to catch all of these bag holders?

Mr. RUCKER. The section we are now considering is with reference to the actions of committees, not of individuals.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it not so with the whole bill?

Mr. RUCKER. I think not.

Mr. BUTLER. Is it broad enough to catch the individual?

Mr. RUCKER. The candidate?

Mr. BUTLER. It will catch the candidate, but——

Mr. RUCKER. I will say to the gentleman, I realize the necessity that has suggested itself to his mind of a great deal of legislation up in that great State he comes from, but I doubt the propriety of Congress trying to regulate all wrongs that may exist in Pennsylvania or Mississippi——

Mr. SISSON. There are none in Mississippi.

Mr. BUTLER. Or Missouri——

Mr. SISSON. None in the world in Mississippi.

Mr. RUCKER. We are attempting to leave something for the States themselves to do, and I am sure——

Mr. BUTLER. I have observed that offenders are afraid of national laws, they are afraid of United States courts——

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman will bear in mind——

Mr. BUTLER (continuing). I would very much like to commend the gentleman and his committee, for their work is in the right direction, and a good law will come out of it, and the work will bear fruit, and he and his colleagues will be commended for the work that they have done; but I wish that they had gone further and reported a measure so broad as to impose a penalty, and a heavy one, upon any man and upon any organization or set of men who would use money in behalf of a political candidate or a candidate for office and who did not account for the money collected and the money expended.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; I do.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, when we see a gentleman from the grand old State of Pennsylvania and a gentleman from the grand old State of Michigan so anxious to pass a publicity law, something that has teeth in it to make every wrongdoer fly to cover, I have great hopes for the future of this country and that elections will be purified.

Mr. BUTLER. I am glad the gentleman has hopes for the future but I care more for the present and for a statute that will fix a penalty upon these men. I think the future will largely take care of itself. I am very sensitive at this time and I would like to have an opportunity to vote for a law that would catch these corrupt bag holders.

Mr. RUCKER. I will say to the gentleman that the purpose is a very commendable one and I share with him the desire that certain limitations surround it, but we can not do all the things we would like to do. We want to pass a law here which we hope will impress itself upon the minds of State legislators and that State legislatures will enact such a law or laws along this general line in cooperation with this, and I believe that will be done in the near future, and such laws will do much to purify and clarify elections.

Mr. BUTLER. Let me continue the colloquy with the gentleman for a moment. We have a good statute in Pennsylvania; the corrupt-practices act of that State defines specifically (no doubt the gentleman has had the pleasure of examining that law before his bill was reported) the expenditures that may be made, makes them lawful and other expenditures it makes unlawful, and provides a penalty to be imposed upon the offender.

Mr. COX. Does it limit the amount the candidate can expend?

Mr. BUTLER. No; it does not. In answer to the gentleman from Indiana, it seems impossible to enforce a limit of the amount of money which a candidate may expend. Thousands upon thousands of dollars may be expended for him and not be accounted for, as required by law. It is the fellow who does such spending that I am after, not the candidate—the law covers him. I am after those who spend it for him, but I appreciate that the gentleman and his colleagues could not include any form of corruption in this bill. But is it as broad as it ought to be——

Mr. RUCKER. I will say to the gentleman the committee is conscious of the fact that many improprieties may be committed which we do not believe Congress can or should attempt to regulate or control, but which we would be glad to reach if we could properly do so.

Mr. MONTAGUE. May I ask the chairman of the committee a question?

Mr. RUCKER. Certainly.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Does this bill fix any limit upon the amount the committee is to expend on behalf of any candidate for Congress?

Mr. RUCKER. These committees?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. That may be expended for any candidate for Congress?

Mr. MONTAGUE. Of course that means Members of the House of Representatives as well as the Senate.

Mr. RUCKER. No; it does not fix any amount.

The theory upon which this bill is drawn is that the committee never spends money in behalf of the nomination of any candidate nor for the election of any particular candidate, but for all candidates in the State, and that it must account for the money it uses.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more to answer the question propounded by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MONTAGUE].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understand there is no limitation on the amount of money that the national committee may expend in the political campaigns contemplated in this bill?

Mr. RUCKER. There is no limit placed on the amount that the committee may expend, but a limit is placed upon the amount a candidate may expend and on the amount that is spent for him. He has to charge himself with it and show the amount of money received from the committee.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Suppose the candidate receives no sum of money from the committee?

Mr. RUCKER. If it is expended for him, with his knowledge and consent, he must account for it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am deeply interested in the purposes of this bill.

Mr. RUCKER. I will say to the gentleman, if he will pardon me, that the section we are now dealing with is not the one that his question refers to.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I appreciate that, but the underlying purpose of this whole bill is to have clean elections in the United States?

Mr. RUCKER. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The great trouble that confronts us is this, that the dishonest man will subscribe to any oath for the purpose of tying the hands of his honest competitor. I do not say that we should not legislate for this reason. On the contrary, I say we should.

Mr. RUCKER. I will say this to the gentleman—and I have said it in private conversation and publicly everywhere—that if any gentleman on either side of the House can suggest a single thought that will make this bill more effective within the scope of the power that I think we have, we shall be glad to accept it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I appreciate the gentleman's purpose. I do not intend to impugn his purpose.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. TAGGART. Is it not the theory of this bill, and is it not a fact, that the object and purpose of the bill is simply to secure publicity? Is it not a fact that it does not matter what the committee has done, and it does not matter what a candidate has done, and it does not matter how much either has spent, under the limitations on a candidate for Representative of $5,000 and $10,000 for Senator, if a correct account of it is made out and filed with the Clerk of the House of Representatives? Is not that the purpose?

Mr. RUCKER. That is the purpose of the bill.

Mr. TAGGART. The bill has no penalty for anything else except filing an incorrect return of the campaign expenditures?

Mr. RUCKER. That is so; yes; and for the reason that every candidate for Congress is a citizen of some State, and every State has an election law; and if any candidate violates the election laws of his State, he is amenable to those laws; and the Federal authority ought not to invade the States and undertake the control and punishment of either the misdemeanors or felonies. Let the State take care of that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr STAFFORD. So far as the national committees are concerned, the intention is publicity. What objection can there be to extending it to any State committee that is instrumental in promoting the election of Members of Congress?

Mr. RUCKER. I will answer the gentleman in this way: We have no control over State committees. The gentleman should remember, too, that no State committee would come in and say they expended money to elect you or me or to defeat you or me. They spend money to elect their State ticket.

Mr. STAFFORD. I know of instances where committees have been organized to defeat Members of Congress—not the regular party committees, but voluntary committees—and yet they would not be obliged under the terms of this bill to make any returns whatsoever, and the Member of Congress might be defeated by unlawful means. Yet we are not doing anything to protect Members of Congress who pursue the righteous course.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman is mistaken. I think we are doing all that is lawful for us to do to protect Members against the improper and corrupt use of money. What we do not do here can easily be supplemented by State laws if the States will only pass them.

Mr. STAFFORD. Congress is trying to protect its Members. I am speaking of the necessity of requiring any committee instrumental in election to make returns, so that we may have real publicity.

Mr. RUCKER. Those are purely State matters. I say that not because I am as rigid about State rights as some others are, but because I am not in favor of going so far as to jeopardize wise Federal legislation.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. TAGGART. Would the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Missouri, hold that Congress would not have jurisdiction and power to fine and punish a corrupt use of money at an election in which Members of the House and Senate are elected?

Mr. RUCKER. I do not think there is any question about it. I think it has been determined that Congress has that power. But this bill does not seek to do that.

Mr. TAGGART. Would it not be competent and germane in this bill to insert a section defining and punishing the corrupt use of money at any primary election or at any general election?

Mr. RUCKER. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will say we are entering upon dangerous seas when we begin that. Whenever we undertake to pass Federal laws to punish men who violate State election laws, then we invade the rights of the States to punish their own criminals. The States all have or will enact such laws as are desired by their citizens.

Mr. TAGGART. I do not mean that Congress should take sole control of elections, but inasmuch as we expel Members from the House and declare that they are not elected when an excessive amount of money is used at an election, we should have some law whereby parties who do that can be reached. At present we have no such law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have three minutes' more time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. A question was asked the chairman a moment ago, to which he responded to the effect that no national committee is selected out in the congressional districts for the purpose of spending money in those districts with a view to influencing the electors of those districts. Does the gentleman mean to state that?

Mr. RUCKER. I do not think I stated that.

Mr. RAKER. Then I misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. RUCKER. Because I am quite sure those things are done, and if I stated that they are not done, I stated something which I did not intend to say. But I will refresh the gentleman's memory. I think I stated that these great committees primarily do not seek to control the nomination of the party candidates; but after their nomination they do seek to elect their party candidates.

Mr. RAKER. Where does the gentleman get the idea that these committees do not seek to nominate men as well as elect them?

Mr. RUCKER. I would spurn as an impertinence the action of a congressional committee which came into my district and sought to secure either my nomination or the nomination of my opponent.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman might spurn it, but nevertheless the fact is supposed to exist.

Mr. RUCKER. If it is true, I will say to the gentleman it is something I never heard of before.

Mr. RAKER. I hold in my hand a newspaper clipping—I do not think it is necessary to read any names—in which it is stated that the Republican congressional campaign committee are offering $5,000 to secure a man for a candidate in a certain district.

Mr. WILLIS. I think, if the gentleman is making charges of that kind, he ought to read names. That is a serious charge.

Mr. RAKER. No; not at this time.

Mr. WILLIS. I think it is a serious charge. I think the gentleman owes it to himself and to the Members of the House to be specific.

Mr. RAKER. I have not read anything.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman said he had a clipping.

Mr. RUCKER. I want to pour oil on the troubled waters by saying that if it is necessary to offer $5,000 to secure a Republican candidate in any district, Republicans must be awfully scarce in that community.

Mr. MANN. Nobody would seriously make such a statement, and nobody but an erupting volcano would think of it.

Mr. RUCKER. In my district there are always plenty of men who are anxious to run for Congress without paying them anything at all.

Mr. GARNER. May I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that he can pour oil on the troubled waters by declining to yield further when he gets through with his statement. That will keep these gentlemen from further disturbing these volcanoes.

Mr. RUCKER. If the gentleman will make that suggestion to his colleagues on the floor, I will be obliged to him. I would like to have the bill read.

Mr. RAKER. I move to strike out the last three words. I am in hearty accord with the purposes of this bill in every provision. The only question as to a number of these provisions is whether they are drastic enough and whether they carry out what ought to be done. There are matters that ought to be discussed and called to the attention of the committee. I was calling the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that this ought to apply—and I do not believe it does—to a national campaign committee in spending money for the nomination as well as for elections. I believe this covers that feature of it. I may be mistaken.

Mr. RUCKER. I think it would, if they spent any money for that, but I did not think they spent it for that purpose.

Mr. RAKER. Then any money expended by the committee for that purpose would be required to be included in the statement of the committee.

Mr. RUCKER. If it was with the knowledge and consent of the candidate. I do not think it ought to be within the power of any committee or any individual to place a blot on your title or mine by sending money into our districts against our will.

Mr. RAKER. No; I agree with the gentleman fully on that; but when money is given to a committee to be used for campaign purposes, and when the committee expends it in any State or in any district, as I understand under this bill they are required to account for it. That is correct, is it not?

Mr. RUCKER. The committee would be required in its account to show that it did use the money thus and so, and the candidate would be required in his account to show that he received money from the committee.

Mr. RAKER. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Suppose a national campaign committee sent $10,000 to a State.

Mr. BUTLER. For the whole State?

Mr. RAKER. Just a moment. And suppose that money was used in one particular congressional district. Is there anything in this bill that would require the national committee to show that this money was used for the purpose of influencing the election, for instance, in one particular district in that particular State, or could they say, generally, "to the State of Alaska," for instance?

Mr. RUCKER. I do not know that I quite understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. RAKER. I will make it plainer. In other words, there are 15 candidates to be elected to Congress from a State. The national campaign committee sends out $20,000, and all of that money is expended in one district to defeat one particular candidate. Does the law require the committee to state that this $20,000 was used in the one particular district, or can they state generally that it was used in that State?

Mr. RUCKER. The law requires the committee to state for what purpose it was used and to whom it was distributed; but the law does not in express terms say it shall show into what district it goes, although the other provision would accomplish the purpose the gentleman has in mind. It would cover that point, it seems to me.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, in considering these matters that gentlemen have talked about, I think it might be well to read the Constitution of the United States, although I am aware that some people think it ought never to be referred to. The Constitution says:

> The times, places and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the place of choosing Senators.

Now, it is under that provision and under that provision only that we claim to exercise any authority over elections or over campaign contributions or anything of the sort that is referred to in this bill. I myself have never been satisfied that the publicity act was constitutional, or that it could run the gantlet of a prosecution in court. I thought possibly, when it originally passed, Congress itself would refuse to admit either as a Senator or a Member of the House a man who had violated the law, because we have that power over such matters in the House, and the Senate has a corresponding power over its own Members; but we have already decided that that was not cause for refusing a Member a seat, and I do not say that that was an improper decision. I think we ought to be a little careful of this legislation about our constitutional prerogatives. I doubt very much whether Congress has the power to go into a State or a community or a city or a precinct and require a political committee, or any other committee, to report to Congress just what money it has raised or expended, and how. I do not see where we get any such constitutional authority.

Mr. TAGGART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. TAGGART. Would not the word "regulate" be construed as fully as the word "regulate" in the clause of the Constitution giving Congress power to regulate commerce between the States, which seems to be very ample?

Mr. MANN. I think that is not a parallel case at all. In the commerce between the States we regulate the commerce, and the Supreme Court held, in the Sugar case, that you could not regulate the manufacture within the State. While I do not know whether they will adhere to that opinion when it comes up again and is shown that the article manufactured is for the purpose of being transported to another State, yet that is the law as it stands. We undoubtedly have the right to regulate elections of Members of Congress.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the gentleman from Illinois have any doubt about the power of Congress to regulate primaries?

Mr. MANN. I have very grave doubt about it. I do not think, on the face of it, that we have any jurisdiction over primaries, but we have assumed that jurisdiction, and it is not at all unlikely that the court may hold that primaries are a part of the election of a Member of the House. It would not require the most difficult reasoning to apply it to the primary election of Members and to the nomination, although some of the Members of this House—one gentleman in particular, who is now lying on his back in the hospital recovering from the effects of an operation, the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. BARTLETT, who is a rather strict constitutionalist, and, after all, one of the ablest constitutionalist lawyers in this House and, I think, in the country—are very strongly of the opinion, frequently expressed, that we have no constitutional authority over primaries. However, I doubt very much whether we have the constitutional authority over a member of the committees in the States which have been referred to.

You can not differentiate the support of a Member of Congress from a common treasury and the candidate for State treasurer, county, or precinct officer. I doubt whether we have the jurisdiction to require everybody who has anything to do with the election of any official elected at the same time a Member of Congress is elected, to report to Congress all their contributions and expenses. They do not differentiate—they can not—the expenses that go to elect the Members of Congress and the expenses that go to elect State or county officials. It seems to me that we had better proceed along as sure lines as we can until we get some decisions from the courts.

The main purpose, of course, of this law is its moral effect on candidates for these offices, and its moral effect on the political committees. No national committee dares to openly refuse to comply with the law. They must endeavor to comply with the law because the moral sentiment of the country requires it. The candidate for Congress must endeavor to comply with the law because the moral sentiment of his district requires it.

Mr. TAGGART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. TAGGART. It seems from a reading of the law, which is copied in the bill, that the candidate or committee simply makes the statement that certain sums of money were given to certain individuals, but there is no requirement of any statement as to what the money was given to the individuals for. A candidate simply says that he paid $100 to this man, $50 to another man, and so many dollars to the committee, and swears to it, and that is the sum of the information Congress gets.

Mr. MANN. I think not; they are required to file vouchers for their expenses.

Mr. TAGGART. But he does not say what he has spent it for, whether he bought votes with it or not. It all looks well on paper, as though it was a contribution to a charitable enterprise.

Mr. MANN. If you put in such a requirement, no one would say that they spent the money for buying votes.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, the section of the Constitution governing this subject has just been read by the gentleman from Illinois, and it provides that—

> The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

It seems to me a very interesting and very important question as to whether or not the Congress under that clause of that section of the Constitution has the authority to regulate or control the primaries and nominating conventions. My own opinion is that it does have such right. I notice a decision cited here in the Manual, in which it is stated that—

> Congress has in fact fixed by law the time of elections and has controlled the manner to the extent of prescribing a ballot or voting machine.

Now, surely, Mr. Chairman, if the Congress has the power, as it undoubtedly has, to prescribe the time for elections, if it has the authority to prescribe the form of the ballot, if it has the authority to say whether or not a voting machine shall be used, it has power to regulate the nomination of the candidate.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Where have we ever provided anything in a national law for a voting machine?

Mr. WILLIS. I do not know. I took this citation from the Manual. It cites here Hinds' Precedents, volume 2, 961. I take it from the Manual, from the very same section from which the gentleman himself read.

Mr. MANN. I think I have been here ever since the voting machine has been in existence, and I do not think there is any law on the subject.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not know anything about it except what I get in the Manual, and the gentleman is responsible for the citation.

Mr. MANN. I think it is a State law and not a Federal law.

Mr. WILLIS. No. It says here that Congress has done it; that Congress has control. Hinds' Precedents, volume 2, is cited.

At any rate, Mr. Chairman, if it does not have the power—and I am confident that it does have—it ought to have. It surely would be an amazing proposition to take the view taken a little bit ago by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], when he said, as I understood him—and I regret that he is not in the Chamber at this moment—that he was in favor of a law regulating the purity of elections, but that the matter of primaries or conventions was something that belonged exclusively to the States and ought not to be subject to the Federal regulations. Think what that would mean.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman, without undertaking to cite any authority, that I believe it has been held—and if it has not, I am quite sure that it will some time be held—that political nominations, primary elections, are so conclusive in their effect as to be the real election, and therefore, under powers we have to regulate elections, we will have power to control the nomination, because it is an essential part of an election. If the gentleman will bear me out, I am sure that in my own district, not only in the South, but in the gentleman's State and mine, the nomination by a political party is equivalent to an election in many instances.

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. RUCKER. And I want to say to the gentleman that if I am fortunate enough to be nominated in my district——

Mr. WILLIS. And I hope the gentleman will be.

Mr. RUCKER. Though I might even after that vote with my Republican friend on some political questions, I would still be elected.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for the suggestion. Without doubt the primary or the convention is an essential part of an election, and if we have the authority to regulate an election, then, because the whole includes the part—because the greater includes the less—we have authority to regulate the primary, and if we did not have it, it would be an amazing state of affairs, as the gentleman from Missouri has just pointed out. There are districts in various States where the nomination is equivalent to an election, and it would put the gentlemen in those districts in the position of being able to spend any amount of money that they pleased, if we can conceive of such a thing, even corrupting the voters, so far as the Federal law is concerned, and yet that being done at the primaries, where the real vote occurred, and not at an election, there would be no recourse whatsoever under Federal law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of a law which will guarantee not only the purity of the election but the purity of the primary, so that the voters of the several congressional districts may have opportunity to express their untrammeled choice in the matter of their representation in Congress. I wish, before the vote on this amendment is taken, somebody either in favor of it or opposed to it would give us some information as to what the real effect of the amendment will be. As I understand, the real amendment pending, leaving out of consideration the pro forma amendments, is that offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin, to strike out, in line 22, page 4, the words "in two or more States." I submit the adoption of that amendment at that place will not accomplish anything one way or the other. If the gentleman desired to accomplish what the gentleman from Missouri says ought not to be done, the place to offer the amendment would be in lines 13 and 14, page 2, in section 1.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I stated in my remarks that I was inadvertently absent when section 1 was considered, and I am moving this to test the sense of the committee, to see whether it is in favor of extending this law to all committees that have any connection with an election of Members of Congress.

Mr. WILLIS. Then the gentleman would contemplate, if his amendment is adopted, asking unanimous consent to go back to section 1?

Mr. STAFFORD. There are several other clauses where the phrase occurs.

Mr. WILLIS. But the important phrase is in section 1?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. Because that defines a political committee; and then the bill in several places refers to "such political committees," referring back to the committee defined in section 1, and therefore the place to vote on this amendment is in that section, because adopting it here, it seems to me, will not have any material effect one way or the other.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the pro forma amendment just offered. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] raises the constitutional question as to how far Congress has the power to legislate regarding the election of Senators and Representatives. The very reading of the clause which he cites is a sufficient answer as to whether or not we have that power. Section 4 reads that the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof, and then follows the important and governing clause that Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators. So that there is no question but that Congress can legislate as to the times and the places and the manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives, and it is under that authority that this bill is drawn. I congratulate the chairman of the committee for his splendid work in preparing and bringing this bill here. I know that he is entirely sincere when he tells us that this bill goes as far as it is safe to go. I am quite sure he would desire, if he thought he could do so, and secure the passage of the bill, to go further and require the same publicity given to State or district congressional committees that is now given by this bill to the national committees. I desire to suggest to him and to other Members of Congress, and especially to those who are primarily responsible for this legislation, that if this bill shall pass in this incomplete form it will go out to the country not with the approval that the gentleman hopes and which it should have, but with the reservation and criticism that this bill does very little in extending the present law. In my judgment, it is our duty now while this bill is before us to make it what it ought to be. Men do not need to be told the danger that comes from thus leaving the congressional committees absolutely free from reporting the contributions that they receive and the expenditures that they make. This bill leaves it open for all these corrupting influences we deplore if we do not put into it the requisites of publicity as to district and local committees that we have with regard to national committees.

Mr. HELVERING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. HELVERING. Does the gentleman think the very proposition that the Clerk of the House shall publish these campaign contributions and expenses is a very material improvement over the old law?

Mr. TOWNER. Why, very slight, I think. I believe, gentlemen, that we will be held responsible for negligence in the performance of our duties if we pass this bill in such incomplete form. I believe that it will leave us open to the charge of having ourselves left a loophole by which elections of Members of Congress may be corrupted. I now yield to the chairman.

Mr. RUCKER. Has the gentleman in mind any amendment which he thinks will help the bill?

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, I am supporting the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD].

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman thinks that would improve it?

Mr. TOWNER. I think we ought to add the requirement suggested. I do not believe, gentlemen, that there is any question whatever about a conflict of jurisdiction. Why, the proposition involved in this bill or the requirement in this bill required of committees of any kind is merely publicity, merely a declaration and a statement of the amount they have received and the expenditures that they make. Such provisions can in nowise raise a conflict of jurisdiction between the States and the Nation. It only requires the local committees in each congressional district to do what is required with regard to the national committee.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman's idea is that the bill ought to apply to State committees and to congressional committees in the various congressional districts?

Mr. TOWNER. To congressional committees, not to State committees.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. To congressional committees in congressional districts.

Mr. BUTLER. To local committees and whatever organizations——

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, it is not necessary to do that.

Mr. RUCKER. Does the gentleman believe if the House would assert the power to write into this bill a requirement that congressional committees in every congressional district in the United States should make publicity of its transactions that hereafter the congressional committee would be absolutely like Othello, with its occupation gone?

Mr. TOWNER. The national committee?

Mr. RUCKER. No; the congressional committee. Does not the gentleman think it would go out of business absolutely?

Mr. TOWNER. No.

Mr. RUCKER. And the money be expended through some other medium?

Mr. TOWNER. Oh, no; not to my mind; I think the exact opposite is true, and I would like to have the people of our respective districts know what has been done.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, let me say to the gentleman—I am not going to object, I have no intention of objecting—but I do want to say this to all gentlemen, and I take advantage of this opportunity to say to both sides, that there are a great many other important measures which committees are very anxious to get up and I hope gentlemen will regulate themselves accordingly, and not consume any more time than can possibly be avoided.

Mr. TOWNER. I appreciate, Mr. Chairman, the position of the committee. I believe that the committee and its chairman both sympathize with this proposition, this amendment, and I am sure every man who has given the question careful study must hold, if we expect to have an adequate corrupt-practices act, we should have it include the amendment that is suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin. I can see no harm that will come to it. I do not think any other body would dare take the responsibility of defeating this legislation upon a proposition so self-evidently just as this is.

Mr. HELVERING. Mr. Chairman, the bill now under consideration is fully in line with Democratic pledges and is an amplification of the legislation passed by the Democrats of this House in the Sixty-second Congress. The publicity bill passed at that time was in answer to a public demand for purer elections and for publicity which would show the influences behind the candidacy of every man who aspired to a seat in this House or in the one at the other end of the Capitol, and as such it was hailed as a needed and a progressive piece of legislation.

Since the time of the enactment of that legislation experience and practice have shown to us wherein it was faulty and wherein it could be amended to advantage, and it is to remedy these defects that the present legislation is proposed.

What will the enactment of this bill mean?

It will prevent any committee from sending into any State more money than has been contributed by the people of that State. The enforcement of this provision will prevent the pouring in of money for the purpose of influencing debatable States, and the importance of this can not be magnified in so far as it affects States where the population is largely urban and where there is a purchasable vote—a vote which holds allegiance to no party principles, but which is on the market and at the disposal of the highest bidder.

That is a most important provision in the proposed law, but in my judgment it is not the most important one. In the first session of this Congress we heard a demand from a certain political entity of this body for the publication of the expense statements of the candidates in the election of 1912. Personally I was in sympathy with that demand, for while the law did not require it, nevertheless I believe that the intent of that law recognized the need of publicity and paved the way for the fullest measure of publicity, and nothing was to be gained by raising technical objections to prevent the turning on of the strongest searchlight.

However, we have in this bill remedied that defect, and now, in section 12, we provide for a report from the Clerk of the House and for its publication as a public document.

This leads up to what I consider to be the strongest safeguard provided in this legislation for the purity of elections. I refer to the provision which requires every candidate to furnish each of his opponents, preceding the date of the primary and general election, a copy of the statement of receipts and disbursements as filed by him with the Clerk here.

The importance of that provision can not be overestimated. Statements published here after an election is over will do but little good. But when each candidate knows prior to election day the exact receipts and disbursements of his opponents, it is human nature to presume that he will give to each statement the most careful scrutiny. He will do so for the reason that he has a personal motive in finding something to criticize, and therefore, by this provision, we not only secure enforcers of the law without expense to State or Nation, but we also arrange that the evidence shall be placed in their hands.

Mr. Chairman, the need of all such legislation is obvious. It is often said that in this body we have a standard of individuality far above the average, and rarely is there a suspicion on this floor that any Member is acting from venal or unworthy motives. But because we have this confidence in each other it does not necessarily follow that suspicion is not to be found abroad in the land, and I believe that all legislation along the lines of the present bill is to be welcomed for the reason that the people of the country have the right to know what influences are behind every public servant, and we are but protecting ourselves and raising the reputation of this body when we court the fullest publicity.

We are legislating not in response to any demand from a new conscience, but rather to the demand of the awakened conscience, which sees the train of evils which have followed the "deeds done in the darkness" and now demands that men shall work in the full light of public knowledge and that merit rather than money shall dominate in our American public life.

Mr. RUCKER. By way of apology let me say that I did not see the gentleman at the time I asked for a vote, or I should not have made the request.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, may we have the amendment reported again; it has been some time since the amendment was first reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

There was no objection, and the amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. RUCKER), there were—ayes 11, noes 34.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That the statements required by the preceding section of this act shall state:

First. The name and address of each person, firm, association, or committee who or which has contributed, promised, loaned, given, or advanced to such political committee, or any officer, member, or agent thereof, either in one or more items, money or its equivalent of the aggregate amount or value of $100 or more, and the amount or sum contributed, promised, loaned, given, or advanced by each.

Second. The aggregate sum contributed, promised, loaned, given, or advanced to such political committee, or to any officer, member, or agent thereof, in amounts of less than $100.

Third. The aggregate amount contributed, promised, loaned, given, or advanced by citizens of each State, respectively, together with the total sum of all contributions, promises, loans, gifts, and advances received by such political committee or any officer, member, or agent thereof.

Fourth. The name and address of each person, firm, association, or committee to whom such political committee, or any officer, member, or agent thereof, has distributed, disbursed, contributed, loaned, advanced, given, or promised any sum of money or its equivalent of the amount or value of $10 or more, stating the amount or sum distributed, disbursed, contributed, loaned, advanced, given, or promised to each, and the purpose thereof, together with a true and accurate statement of the items or sums distributed, disbursed, contributed, loaned, advanced, given, or promised to persons, firms, associations, or committees in each State separate from other States.

Fifth. The aggregate sum distributed, disbursed, contributed, loaned, advanced, given, or promised by such political committee, or any officer, member, or agent thereof, where the amount or value of such distribution, disbursement, loan, advance, gift, or promise to any one person, firm, association, or committee, in one or more items, is less than $10.

Sixth. The total sum disbursed, distributed, contributed, loaned, advanced, given, or promised by such political committee, or any officer, member, or agent thereof.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. RAINEY. I may not need that much time, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman certainly will not need any more than that?

Mr. RAINEY. I think not.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee has just expressed a desire to finish the consideration of this bill this afternoon, and I assume, from the form of the request, that the gentleman wishes to speak on something outside of the bill.

Mr. RAINEY. Yes. I will endeavor to finish as soon as I can.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman be willing to inform us on what subject he desires to speak?

Mr. RAINEY. I desire to answer a speech made awhile ago by the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. If it will not take any longer than 15 minutes, I will not raise any objection.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to state to the committee that I will have to object to any extension beyond the 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Illinois is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, a short time ago, during my absence from the Chamber, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] made a characteristic speech which has now been written up by the stenographers and which I have just read.

My friend from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], who has been attacked by the gentleman from Washington, will be able to take care of himself when the time comes. If I were he, however, I would consider that the best sort of a reply to make to an undignified attack of that kind would be to treat it with silent contempt. At the present time the gentleman from Washington is perfectly safe. He selected an opportune time for his assault on my friend from Alabama. The gentleman from Alabama is a thousand miles from here and can not reply to-day or perhaps in the immediate future.

The gentleman from Washington continued his remarks by attacking the administration—referring to it as a discouraged, discredited, already condemned Democratic administration. By referring to the membership of this House as a panic-stricken, cowardly, Democratic majority who do what they are told to do; by saying that the present administration has thrown more men into idleness, destroyed more business, and made more beggars than any other administration in the same length of time.

Now, I could reply in kind to an attack of this kind on the Democratic majority and on this administration if I cared to descend to the level of argument used always by the gentleman from Washington on this floor in his attacks upon a successful administration, which has placed upon the statute books more remedial legislation in half a presidential term than his party ever placed upon the statute books in 50 years of time. [Applause on the Democratic side.] But the best sort of an answer to make to such an argument as the gentleman from Washington made to-day is to call attention to the evidence throughout the country—the evidence of reviving prosperity—that there is no such thing as a business depression throughout the country at the present time. We are emerging just now from the Republican panic of 1907, and this afternoon I want to call attention to conditions in the steel industry and in those other large industries throughout the country closely allied with it. In the near future I propose to take up the question of the textile trades and the revival there and in the other big business enterprises of this country that can be classified under other heads.

Now, the best evidence of conditions is not the unsupported partisan statements made by the gentleman from Washington here upon this floor. He does not prove, or attempt to prove, by evidence of value, anything. The best evidence does not consist of the statements that come from the private offices of the heads of great law-defying corporations in the United States. The best evidence should always be produced, and it is easily found in the indications throughout the entire country of reviving business conditions. It is indicated by the journals throughout the country which feel the public pulse and record the business temperature every day.

The Springfield Republican of June 18, 1914, in an editorial, said:

STEEL TRADE AND PROSPERITY.

That the orders of the United Steel Co. are steadily increasing this month is admitted in trade circles. They would increase faster if the corporation would accept long-term contracts at the present prices. * * * Assuming that the trust's unfilled orders reached the low point of the downward movement in May, it is worth while to make some comparisons for the benefit of Mr Calamity Howler. The unfilled orders were 3,998,160 tons on May 31. There was a period of more than a year not so long ago when the trust's unfilled orders ran steadily under that figure. * * * It is wicked and unpatriotic, perhaps, to mention the fact, but the Chicago correspondent of the Philadelphia Public Ledger, who is a specialist in finance, says, under date of the 16th: "This week, for the first time, there has been a splendid outburst of business confidence in the country tributary to Chicago, though for two or three weeks past there has been liberal buying of goods by country merchants in anticipation of a better tone among the people."

Now, I have other extracts here, which I am not going to read in full. I will read only sections of them, but I have them here if the fairness of the sections read are at any time questioned.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. RAINEY. Not now. Later on I shall be glad, if I have time, to yield, but not at this time.

Under the heading of "Greater steel activity," the New York Times quotes the Iron Age as saying that the midyear buying shows marked improvement. I read:

The St. Paul has released 15,000 to 20,000 tons of rails to a Chicago district mill, and it is believed to have distributed new orders amounting to 20,000 tons. * * * The steel corporation has taken a contract for 5,000 tons of girder rails for New South Wales. * * * The Wabash has practically closed for 60 locomotives. * * * The Pittsburg, Shamut & Northern has bought 750 coal cars, and the Atlantic Coast Line 100 logging cars. The Toledo & Ohio Central is asking bids on 1,000 box and 1,000 hopper cars.

The Iron Trade Review says the moderate betterment in steel trade which appeared early in June, as contrasted with other recent months, has been maintained. The volume of new business in a number of finished steel lines has undergone some expansion, specifications are better, and there is considerable negotiating by consumers on contracts for forward deliveries. Some makers report their bookings fully 50 per cent better than in May. The Steel Corporation's tonnage is considerably ahead of last month. * * * Car builders have been placing some round tonnages of steel.

From the Philadelphia Record of June 19, 1914, under the heading of "Glass and steel pick up," I read:

SIGNS OF BETTER BUSINESS IN THE PITTSBURGH REGION.

The declaration of President Woodrow Wilson that the present business depression is purely "psychological" appears to be in a measure borne out in this territory, if signs of increasing activity in all industrial lines can be taken as a criterion.

One of the most striking examples of return of prosperity was the announcement made by the American Bottle Co., of Newark, Ohio, that its working force would be increased from 900 to 1,200 men, and that working hours, which now vary 10 to 12 on two shifts, would be reduced to 8 hours. The factories will be run in three shifts of 8 hours each.

At Greenville, Pa., the 7-inch mills of the Carnegie Steel Co., which have been closed down for some time, resumed operations yesterday, giving employment to several hundred men.

Prosperity has also struck Sharon, where mills and furnaces are now running on better time than for several months. At the Driggs-Seabury ordnance corporation's office the company's books showed orders to be 400 per cent ahead of this time last year. The pay roll has increased 20 per cent, and a large number of extra hands are being employed.

At the plant of the United States Steel Corporation in this vicinity and the big independent concerns a steady resumption of business is reported.

As evidence of reviving conditions the country over, I desire to read extracts now from a number of papers published in a great many different cities, these extracts being selected at random and all appearing within the last week or 10 days of time. I have here the New York Commercial for June 22, and I read the following headings from its columns:

Improvement is shown in the steel situation—Structural business doubled the preceding week—On car orders June should show up well in excess of May or April—Sheet mills running on better time—Tin plates close to capacity.

The column of matter which follows the above headings I have carefully read. The matter printed is fully indicated in the headings I have just read.

From the Meriden (Conn.) Record I read the following heading:

Usual summer vacation planned for employees in most factories—Some concerns so busy that factories will close only for Fourth of July.

This paper is published in the very heart of the greatest manufacturing section of this country. I read from the article which appears under the above heading:

A number of concerns are so busy with orders that the employees will have a vacation of only one day—the Fourth of July. The Meriden Firearms Co., the M. B. Schenck Co., the Curtis-Way Co., and the Connecticut Telephone & Electric Co. all report business to be exceptionally good. These concerns will not have any shutdown summer period. * * * The rosy side of business conditions is found at the Connecticut Telephone & Electric Co., where 225 operatives are employed at overtime work. The concern has never had as much work and is employing more help than ever before. * * * The Curtis-Way Co. will close only for the Fourth of July.

From the Cincinnati Enquirer of June 19 I read the following heading:

Business—Rush of steel orders.

From the New York Sun of June 22 I read the following heading from one of its columns:

Pittsburgh mills resuming—One plant on full schedule for first time since November.

And under this heading the dispatch from Pittsburgh recites that—

One of the strongest indications of a resumption of business in the steel industry occurred to-day when department No. 1 of the Allegheny Steel Co., at Brackenridge, went on full schedule. This will be the first full week the department has operated since last November.

The lower mills of the American Sheet & Tin Plate Co. at New Kensington, also resumed. Officials of the New Kensington plant said that they expect the upper mills to be operating on full time within the next two weeks.

From the Courier Journal of June 18 I read the following headings:

Baltimore & Ohio Railroad shops to run on full time—Force at Washington, Ind., will be increased from 800 to 1,000 men.

The article under the above heading goes on to state that at present the shops employ 800 men and that 200 more men are wanted at once. From the Cincinnati Enquirer I read the following heading:

Illinois Central plans extensive improvements costing almost 10 millions—Many grade crossings will be done away with—Route to New Orleans shortened—Better terminals for Memphis.

And the article under these headings goes on to recite improvements to this railroad at Memphis amounting to over $3,000,000; at Chicago nearly $3,000,000; at Kensington of $2,500,000; and at other places in varying amounts, the total improvements being $10,000,000.

I read from the New York Times of about the same date the following heading:

Railroad business better says Hill—Great Northern earnings now picking up is the news he brings—Earling also optimistic.

And the data under this heading is a particularly interesting statement of the business revival given out by these great financiers.

From the New York Commercial of June 23, 1914, I read the following heading:

Western railroads facing big jump in traffic—Officials optimistic as business all along the line continues to increase and general freight movement swells—Provision tonnage gains heavily.

Under this heading I read:

A better feeling among railroad men, combined with improved prospects for a large business and increased earnings, is the situation which exists in the West

Farther down in the same column I read:

Although the tonnage in provisions moved over western railroads last week was only 120,000 pounds larger than the previous week, it was 4,415,000 pounds or 34 per cent in excess of last year.

And this article goes on to state that the big gain was in cured meats, and also in fresh-meat shipments.

I read from a recent issue of the New York Times the following heading:

No hard times in the West says Garford—Ohio Progressive is interested in six lines of manufacturing.

Under this heading there is printed an interview with the gentleman who is running for United States Senate in Ohio on the Progressive ticket. Referring to the Wilson administration, he says:

The administration has got to have a square deal. It has accomplished some things that somebody or something had to bring about. * * * I was talking the other day on the train to a salesman for a big New York concern who had been making a five months' tour of the West. He told me he had done the biggest business he had ever done.

Printed in the very heart of the manufacturing section of this country is the Paterson Guardian. From its issue of June 18, 1914, I read the following heading:

THROUGHOUT THE COUNTRY ARE SEEN INDICATIONS OF BETTER BUSINESS.

And under that sort of a heading I read:

There are many indications of better business. Bank clearings are over $3,000,000,000 a week. * * * Dun's Review notes that the New York banking position is unusually strong. This means that one essential stimulus to business expansion is not lacking, and there are now several signs of reviving activity in commercial and industrial channels.

I have here the Chicago Daily Farmers and Drovers' Journal for June 9, 1914, and from which I read the following heading:

Exports of hog products show increase—More beef products on foreign account.

And under this heading is given the statistics showing the remarkable increase of exports of beef products and hog products over the corresponding months of last year, and the remarkable increase for the 11 months ending in May, 1914, as compared with the 11 months ending in May, 1913.

The Indianapolis News of June 9, 1914, says:

You just can't keep unparalleled prosperity down in this season of big crops. The Oliver Plow Works at South Bend will resume full operation July 6.

From the New York Times of June 18 I read the following dispatch from Kansas City, Mo., containing an interview with a bank examiner, who had just finished his inspection of certain Kansas banks:

Do not forget to build some more money drawers to take care of the wheat money that will come in a few weeks from now. * * * The impetus to trade comes next. It is already being felt through buying for harvest needs.

From the New York Evening Post I read a dispatch from Chicago, dated June 22, printed under the following heading:

TRAFFIC PROSPECTS BRIGHT—TONNAGE MOVEMENT ENLARGED OVER LAST YEAR—MAJORITY OF WESTERN ROADS HANDLE MORE MISCELLANEOUS FREIGHT AND MERCHANDISE, DERIVING BETTER REVENUE—ACTIVE PREPARATIONS FOR MOVING LARGE NEW GRAIN CROPS.

A better feeling among railroad men, combined with improved prospects for a larger business and increased earnings, is the situation which exists in the West.

From the Baltimore Evening Sun of June 22 I read the following heading:

RAILROADS KEPT BUSY—REPORT PICKING UP OF TRAFFIC FROM THE WEST.

Railroads handling traffic from the West report a decided picking up in business in that section, with increased loadings of all commodities.

From the Cincinnati Enquirer of June 22 I read the following heading:

BUSINESS SEEMS TO BE MENDING, ACCORDING TO NEWS FROM ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTRY—STAPLE GOODS FIND THE BEST DEMAND AT THIS TIME.

Confidence is growing rapidly in all lines of trade and industry. This was the report from all over the country last week. * * * Coincident with a drop of 1 cent in sterling exchange and the apparent end of gold exports, come announcements of heavy export sales of wheat. Stocks show a tendency to regain lost ground. Bank clearings increased 3.9 per cent over the previous week, the gain being made outside of New York.

The Milwaukee Journal of June 20 contains the following Pittsburgh dispatch, which is printed under this heading:

GROWING BUSINESS GIVES THE LIE TO HARD-TIMES TALK.

One of the most striking examples of the return of prosperity was the announcement made by the American Bottle Co., Newark, Ohio, that its working force would be increased from 900 to 1,200 men, and that working hours, which now vary from 10 to 12 on two shifts, would be reduced to 8 hours. The factories will be run in three shifts of 8 hours each.

The same article also calls attention to the fact that the 7-inch mills of the Carnegie Steel Co., which have been closed down for some time, are now reopened, giving employment to several hundred men, and the article also calls attention to furnaces at Sharon, which are now running on full time after running on short time for several months. It also calls attention to the fact that the Driggs-Seabury Ordnance Co.'s books show that orders are 400 per cent ahead of last year, and that a larger number of extra hands are being employed and the pay rolls increased 20 per cent.

Newark, N. J., is one of our greatest manufacturing centers. My recollection is that in Newark there are factories manufacturing almost everything that is manufactured anywhere in the United States. In this great manufacturing city there are over 1,800 factories. We can group several States which combined do not have as many factories as the city of Newark. Great trusts, however, do not operate there. Prosperity in Newark, with its varied industries, means manufacturing prosperity throughout the United States.

I read from the Newark News of June 22 the following heading:

Steady growth of savings deposits—Six local institutions report gains over 1913.

And then the article goes on to name the savings institutions which show gains of deposits.

I read from the article:

Practically without exception these banks * * * all report larger or fully normal total increases of savings deposits during the first half of 1914, with records which will compare more than favorably in some instances with like totals for 1913. * * *

At the Fidelity Trust Co. it was explained that the savings bank department showed deposits larger than a year ago, mainly because of the natural growth of business.

I read from a great journal printed in Milwaukee—the Milwaukee Sentinel—the following heading. It gives in one of its columns on the 21st day of June:

PROSPERITY PERIOD HITS COPPER FIELD—EXPERIENCED MEN ARE IN DEMAND, WHILE LABORERS GET READY EMPLOYMENT—OUTPUT IS INCREASING.

The big copper companies are rushing their outputs, increasing their product. * * * The copper country of northern Michigan is enjoying the greatest prosperity, the greatest boom, it has ever known, now that the strike is almost forgotten. * * * The Copper Range mines are almost daily increasing their shipments. Champion sending 84 cars per day, etc.

The New York Herald in a recent issue announces that at New Britain, Conn., the factories are working overtime and are running short of stock and are increasing the hours of their employees. On the 23d day of June the great Sharpless Separator Co., of West Chester, Pa., made public its letter of May 26, which is as follows:

Our factory is now running until 10 o'clock each night in order to make quick delivery of milkers and separators.

Business with us is very good, as is true of a large number of dealers that handle our lines.

This is the company which, it was claimed on this floor during the tariff debate, would be injured on account of the fact that we put their products on the free list, and on the floor of the Senate on August 4 last Senator PENROSE declared that the tariff law would compel the Sharpless Separator people to "move out next month." From the Brooklyn Citizen of June 23 I read under the heading "Revival of the steel industry" an editorial reference to the press announcement from Pittsburgh that the steel business is improving:

With a bumper crop and a good steel trade business generally should pick up. The country has been in the doldrums long enough.

From the Baltimore Evening Sun of June 23 I read the following heading:

Fear of car shortage rouses railroads—All possible equipment going to shops to meet expected demands—Baltimore & Ohio is hustling.

From the June 24 issue of the same paper I read the following heading:

Freight traffic picking up—Number of idle cars on Pennsylvania shows marked decrease.

From a recent issue of the San Francisco Daily News I note that the county treasurer of that county does not know what to do with $5,000,000 in cash. The banks will not borrow it, although he only charges them 2 per cent. The banking institutions, he says, have all the money they want, and this city and county treasurer concludes his interview by saying:

When your banker tells you that times are hard and money tight, you can tell him where he can make a nice profit by lending it to you at 6 or 8 per cent.

I content myself with reading the following heading from the Indianapolis News of June 22:

Confidence is growing in all lines of trade—Better wholesale and retail distribution—Basic industries improved.

The New York World of June 29 contains an interesting interview with Sir G. Paish, editor of the London Statist, and an economist of European reputation. I read a portion of it:

What is happening is not peculiar to the United States, but is incidental to the business situation generally. We calculated upon this reaction for 1915, but it has come earlier, and I believe an improvement is near. As to the United States, the shortage of the corn crop last year is one of the contributing causes. Such a shortage is inevitably followed by a shrinkage of trade. * * * There is no fundamental reason for depression. The American people are enjoying a great income, which no one doubts will show enormous expansion as time goes on. * * * These reactions are good things. They result in the survival of the fittest, and in renewed and enlarged expansion along safe lines

From the Milwaukee Journal of June 28, 1914, I read these headings:

Factories run day and night—Mills in Pennsylvania run at capacity—Treasurer of American Federation of Labor says employment conditions have improved much in a few months.

The Elizabeth Evening Times is published in the heart of a great manufacturing center. I read from its issue of June 28:

For the first time in many years the great Singer Sewing Machine plant at this city will give its employees only one week of summer vacation. The rule has been two or more weeks, and the calamity howlers had led the weary ones to expect a double-time lay off this summer. The Singer plant is not a local institution. It is not merely an American monopoly. It is a world organization, with plants dotted here and there in all countries where labor and raw material conditions enable it to produce any particular part of a sewing machine at a less cost than at some other point. The cutting of the summer vacation in half is the best proof that the tariff has not in any way affected the sewing-machine industry of this giant corporation. It is also proof that machines are produced by American labor sufficiently cheap as compared with other countries to make this the real home plant and mother plant of all the others.

From the New York Evening Post I read the following heading:

June earnings larger—Most roads will show gains for month.

And under that heading I read this extract from the column which follows:

Increased loadings and earnings are expected to be shown in the returns for the month of June by western and southwestern railroads. Gains have been made the past few weeks, and the returns show better than last year on a majority of the roads.

The Baltimore Evening Sun of June 30, 1914, contains the following heading and a long prosperity column:

B. & O. takes on 1,000—Getting equipment ready to move big wheat crop—Near full force at Mount Clare—Calamity howl groundless—Smith Carpet Co. has big business—"Talk of hard times or lack of business is all poppy-cock," said a member of the Baltimore firm.

The New York Times of June 22 records the big rail order for the Pennsylvania Railroad, a total of 137,000 tons to be bought, some of them 120-pound rails.

The New York Times of June 25 also calls attention to the fact that the tube industry is reviving and that the National plant at McKeesport is to be put on full time at once.

The New York Times of June 26 contains a dispatch from Detroit to the effect that the Ford Motor Co. is preparing to double its plant before fall, making it the largest manufacturing company in this country, and perhaps in the world. Five millions of dollars additional expenditure is to be made in the erection of buildings and 40,000 men are to be employed.

The Chicago Herald of June 26 announces that the American Car & Foundry Co. shows tremendous increase in earnings this year over a corresponding period for last year. This firm earned nearly $6,000,000 in the year ending April 30. The splendid showing made by this company is referred to on that date in the newspaper items throughout the country. The New York Commercial of June 26, 1914, contains in its editorial columns a long review of steel-trade conditions, showing revival in the steel trade in Pittsburgh and throughout the country, and reviewing the rolling-stock shortages on various important railroads. The New York Times of recent date also calls attention to the fact that the Cramp & Sons Ship & Engine Building Co. are earning more and more money all the time, showing a gain in the year ending April 30 of this year of over a million dollars as against a gain of half that much in the previous year.

A recent issue of the Iron Age calls attention to the fact that the steel trade, entering the second half of this year, is looking for an increase in demand. Mr. Earling, president of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, is giving out interviews announcing a substantial improvement in railway business throughout the country.

I have only attempted in submitting this evidence—and I have submitted only a small part of the evidence in my possession—to call attention to the business revival experienced throughout the country in the steel industry, on the railroads, and in other lines closely connected with steel and with railroad operations. In a few days I expect to take up other lines of industry. It is impossible for calamity howlers here in the House of Representatives, resorting to undignified language, unbecoming the high position they occupy, to affect the reviving business condition felt throughout the country. Managers of great corporations, anxious for the return to power of a party which protects their profits at the expense of the great masses of the country, may give out statements to the effect that there is a period of great depression here. High officials of the Steel Trust may endeavor to suppress the evidence of prosperity in their own lines, but, after all, they can not seriously interfere with the laws of trade. There is no depression throughout the country. Business is improving. I have called to the attention of the House the evidence. I have produced here the witnesses.

If you want to find the evidence of a real trade depression—a Republican trade depression—read the headings in the newspapers published throughout the country in 1907-08. I called attention in a speech I made on the floor a few days ago to some of the things that were happening in those years, and I called then the same witnesses I call now—the newspapers of the country. In my speech at that time I reviewed some of the events showing the awful depression of those years, the depression from which we are just now emerging. The national administration needs no defense at my hands from the little calamity howlers throughout the country—from the little men, prompted by little motives, who attempt to detract from the splendid, the marvelous, record we are making under the leadership of the greatest President since Lincoln. Speeches made on this floor, occasional declarations heard throughout the country, attempting to suppress the evidence—to make people throughout the land doubt the evidence of their own senses—only serve to call attention to reviving trade conditions. The proof is abundant, on the other hand, to show the complete and absolute falsity of the declarations to which I have been calling attention.

It is to be regretted that there are men in this House and throughout the country whose blind devotion to discredited principles, to a discredited party, and to discredited party leaders is so intense that they can see nothing good in the legislation we have placed upon the statute books. They are so prejudiced and partisan that they can not see throughout the land the evidence of a business revival, which comes to the surface in spite of them and in spite of the great influences of law-defying corporations. We are on a new business basis, protected and regulated by new laws enacted by the party now in power, which is the conservative party of progress throughout the Nation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That every person, firm, association, or committee, except political committees as hereinbefore defined, that shall expend or promise any sum of money or other thing of value amounting to $50 or more for the purpose of influencing or controlling, in two or more States, the result of an election at which Representatives or Senators to the Congress of the United States are elected, unless he or it shall contribute the same to a political committee as hereinbefore defined, shall file statements of the same under oath in the office of the Clerk of the House of Representatives, at Washington, D. C., as required by sections 6 and 7 of this act, which statements shall be held by said Clerk in all respects as required by section 6 of this act.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee a question in regard to this matter.

Mr. RUCKER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. This is practically the same as the old law. The only change is that it adds the Senators. Now, if a man expends money in a State for that individual State, I want to ask the gentleman, would that come under the provisions of this section?

Mr. RUCKER. I think not.

Mr. RAKER. In other words, then, all the money expended by a person or a firm or association would not be reported to the general committee at all? Or, in other words, they would not have to file their statement.

Mr. RUCKER. If it was expended wholly within the State, they would not.

Mr. RAKER. May I ask the gentleman why this ought not to be mandatory upon an individual or a person who expends money in a State for the election of either the Member of the House or the Senate? Why should he not be required to file his statement with the clerk, the same as if it was expended by the committee in two or more States?

Mr. RUCKER. The reason is the same as that which I assigned before. Whether it is a good or bad reason the gentleman will have to determine. It is this: We desire to avoid an invasion of the rights of States. The firm, association, or person here referred to, of course, is a citizen of the State solely, and we seek no jurisdiction over that citizen, unless he undertakes to expand his activities into other than the State in which he lives.

Mr. RAKER. What constitutional objection is there, if any?

Mr. RUCKER. To me?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. None in the world; but I want to say to the gentleman that there are others besides myself, whose wisdom is no doubt superior to mine.

Mr. TAGGART. May I interrupt?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. TAGGART. There are other provisions in the bill further on and even in the law——

Mr. RUCKER. We are talking about the law now.

Mr. RAKER. In the law now.

Mr. TAGGART. There are provisions in the law now requiring the candidate to give the name of any person who has expended money in his behalf.

Mr. RAKER. That is right.

Mr. TAGGART. And the amount, and to whom he gave it; but it does not require anyone, either the candidate, the committee, or any other person, to state for what purpose any money was expended.

Mr. RUCKER. That is not the question the gentleman is now dealing with.

Mr. RAKER. No. In other words, this is more extensive than that.

Mr. TAGGART. If a man of great wealth should take a notion to elect a certain man to Congress, he could go to work, without the knowledge of the candidate, and spend all the money that he pleased for any purpose that he pleased and give no account of it whatsoever.

Mr. STAFFORD. This bill does not reach that condition at all.

Mr. RUCKER. I will answer the gentleman, if I have understood him correctly.

Mr. RAKER. I am glad to yield for that purpose.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman assumes a preposterous and impossible condition. A rich man can not go into a gentleman's district and debauch the people without the condidate having guilty knowledge of it, and the law requires the candidate to account for the money that is used in that way in his behalf.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not acquainted with conditions in Pennsylvania; but recently I read an extract from a highly reputable newspaper, the Philadelphia Public Ledger, in which that very condition was pointed out, that while their State law called for a strict accounting of the disbursements by the candidates themselves, there was much money spent in their behalf by others for which there was no accounting whatever, and the candidates themselves were supposedly ignorant of the conditions.

Mr. RUCKER. Of course I do not know. The newspapers may condone the offenses of citizens here and there and elsewhere; but my notion is that the condition suggested by the gentleman from Kansas can not exist in any jurisdiction in this whole broad land without the guilty participation of the candidate. It is bound to be so.

Mr. RAKER. Now, I want to call the attention of the chairman to this section. While it has been passed and discussed before, it seems to me that there is a way in which this could be reached.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I ask for five minutes more. I yielded most of my time to questions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. While section 8 relates to one subject, and requires every firm, association, or committee except this national committee to file statements as to expenditures within two or more States, I can readily see the propriety of leaving the words in line 22, "in two or more States"; but can there be any possible legitimate reason for a person who goes out and expends money above $50 or above $10—and I will say it ought to be $10—in behalf of any candidate for the House or the Senate, when there is no constitutional inhibition against it? Why should not the public know what money has been expended? The argument might be made that the candidate must know; but that can be passed by and slipped aside, and money may be expended, and the election is over, and the candidate legitimately might not know anything about it. We are here trying to get publicity of campaign expenses. I believe that the law now in force has done more for the purification of elections than any one thing that has been done in many years. It has made it possible that the public may know what corporations are interested in the election of a particular man, what individuals are interested in the election of a particular man, and what corporations, individuals, or set of men are in favor of defeating a particular man for office, for membership in the Senate or House. And if a man expends a certain amount of money over $50, as provided in the bill—or it might be $10—why should he not file a statement with the Clerk within the specified time before election, and another statement so many days thereafter, and then another statement after election, so that the public may know who is behind a man and what interest he represents, and also the interest that is trying to defeat any candidate? I believe it would have a wholesome effect upon the purity of elections.

I want to say that no man ought to be permitted, no man ought to request or require any more money in a campaign than enough to pay legitimate expenses in going over the country as well as sufficient newspaper expenses that the public may know him and know the things for which he stands. There is not a dollar expended for buying men outright and getting them to do certain things that have been done in the past for the purpose of corrupting elections. Money ought not to be sent in from one district to another, and if a man expends it in his behalf or in behalf of anyone he might not know of, or defeating another, it ought to be published and let the public know what that money was expended for.

Mr. CLINE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. CLINE. I think the gentleman is supposing a condition and making the requirements of a candidate that it is not possible to comply with. It was disclosed in the Mulhall investigation that the Federation of Labor and the Association of Manufacturers voluntarily got behind candidates for Congress. I think I may fairly say that it was without any knowledge on the part of the candidates. They expended money, in many instances thousands of dollars, for the benefit of a candidate or to defeat him, along lines of their own selection without any knowledge on the part of the candidate. How are you going to require the candidate under those circumstances to account for the use of all the funds that were effective in electing him or defeating him?

Mr. RAKER. I want to thank my friend for that statement. This bill and the law in most of the States requires a candidate to make a full and complete statement of all money expended and contributed to him and what he expended it for. This section 8 eliminates the private individual in a State who goes in for the purpose of corrupting voters for the purpose of electing a United States Senator, lets him go in each congressional district and expend money without filing a statement as to the expenditure of the money. The same way the committee and the same way the company, and the purpose of the section is in a company that spends any money in one State or one district should be required to file a statement with the Clerk of the House of Representatives the same as when his activities are in two or more States, and the various iniquities that were brought about by the Mulhall activities, if they had complied with the law, would have demonstrated and exposed those that they were in favor of or those that they were against.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five minutes. I do that because I do not wish to speak upon the provisions of the bill, but make some observations in answer to the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to object, but I hope that we can finish the discussion of this bill soon, so that we can reach another measure; and I trust that this political discussion will soon end.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I did not object to gentlemen on this side a few minutes ago who asked the privilege, and I can not object now to gentlemen on that side of the House; but let that be an offset to the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] would like three minutes.

Mr. RUCKER. After the gentleman from Minnesota has addressed the House I shall seek to confine the discussion to the bill. I feel compelled to do that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, I hope the gentleman from Missouri will see his way clear to allow the gentleman from Washington three minutes, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] addressed some remarks to him.

Mr. RUCKER. I suggest if we make some progress in the bill that later on we may be in better humor.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota.

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] has submitted what to his mind is a return of vanished prosperity in business. His main witness, as I gathered from what he said, is the United States Steel Corporation. He quoted a newspaper report that the United States Steel Corporation has received orders for the manufacture of certain iron and steel goods. I have no doubt that is true. It would be amazing if that corporation of great magnitude did not receive some orders even in these distressing times.

But there is a feature of it which the statement of the gentleman from Illinois did not include. The mining offices of the United States Steel Corporation are in the city in which I live. One-half of all the iron ore mined in the United States is mined in the county in which I live. The great mines of the Steel Corporation are located in that county. Practically all of the independent iron producers have great mines in my district. I have just returned from a complete tour of every section of the mining district. I have visited every town and pretty nearly every mine, and I found the same conditions existing everywhere. Never since iron ore was first discovered at the head of the Lakes has there been such a region-wide depression as now. Within the last few weeks the United States Steel Corporation, the witness offered by the gentleman from Illinois, has discharged some 3,000 or 4,000 miners in the county in which I live. It has not only discharged them because there is no market at the present time for ore, but has absolutely closed up a large number of the mines.

What is true of the Steel Corporation is also true of independent concerns who are producing about the same quantity annually as the Steel Corporation. A great majority of their mines are closed to-day and were never closed before since they were opened. All of them are on reduced time.

Every train from the mining country is filled with men leaving that region because there is no work. Mining operators told me there is no use mining ore, because there is no market for ore. Mines are therefore closed or their output reduced; because ore can not be sold. The general business depression throughout the United States is reflected in the stagnation over the iron-mining industry, and the opinion expressed to me by every man familiar with the business is that they have never seen such stagnation and such hopelessness for the future in the iron-producing industry.

What is true of that is also true, though in a less degree, of the lumber business. One of the lumber producers of my own State, who, by the way, is a Democrat, one who never voted anything in his life but the Democratic ticket, who has been a lumber producer in that State for 30 years, tells me that he never in his life saw such conditions, not even from 1893 to 1897; that he sold lumber months and months ago, but the people to whom he sold it will not put in enough more money to move it, preferring to leave it there rotting in the yard. He further stated if things continue as they now are and look as though they were going to, he is going to close his mill, with no prospect of opening it. I have my own opinion as to the kind of ticket that he will vote next fall, together with many more who are in that same degree of business prosperity described as psychological so often in the city of Washington. Mr. Chairman, if I have any more time, I would like to yield it to my friend from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. TAGGART. What would the gentleman do for the particular relief of that lumberman—put the tariff back on lumber?

Mr. MILLER. Oh, the tariff on lumber has absolutely nothing to do with his business. I voted for free lumber every time it has come up since I have been a Member of this House. The trouble is that he can not sell his lumber for any price, because there is no market for it in the United States. The general business stagnation resulting from the Democratic tariff bill as a whole has stopped all building, and lumber can not be sold at any price.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington rose.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman just as soon wait until I answer some quesitons that were asked me some time ago?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Washington that I am disposed to be very courteous to him, but questions were asked me upon this side so long ago that unless I answer them now I fear I shall forget them. I want to answer them now. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], who I know is in hearty accord with every wise provision of this pending legislation, suggests that in section 8, instead of the amount being $50, it ought to be $10, and that every individual or firm or every committee which uses $10 or more ought to give publicity of that fact. Let me see if he is correct. If every gentleman in a congressional district who gives $10 toward a campaign fund of a candidate for Congress files a statement in Washington in the Clerk's office, how many people in the United States would ever see a single one of them? If a great many contributions were made, then a compliance with the law itself would work a destruction of the law. The law would become top heavy and fall of its own weight. If only one contribution was made, no harm could result if it never was known.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, and I do this with the very best of good humor, as the gentleman knows, because I know he is as earnestly in favor of this measure as I am, that I would go hand in hand with him just as far as the integrity of his political nature would lead him to go, and do all that he would seek to do to purify elections, if I did not believe, if I do not now believe, that the anxiety of gentlemen to accomplish a great good sometimes destroys the opportunity we have at hand of doing some good. I believe the measure is a great measure as it is, and while gentlemen of the House on both sides justly criticize its provisions here and there, I again throw down the challenge broadgauge to all gentlemen, and ask them to suggest something that will improve it, and we will accept it. The committee which reported this bill earnestly tried to discharge its duty. The gentlemen who rendered valuable assistance in framing this bill are now present to support it, but are ready to accept any improvement that may be offered. I believe the thought we have given this measure and the precautions we have used justifies us in standing for its provisions. I hope, therefore, that my good friend from California [Mr. RAKER], who simply desires to make it a better bill, will not insist upon this proposition, and if he does insist upon it, I hope all other friends of the measure will vote down his amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, I did not offer an amendment.

Mr. RUCKER. Very well.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I did not have the pleasure of being present when the clipping-bureau expert from Illinois, Mr. RAINEY, commenced his remarks. It is rather a peculiar incident, however, that the reason I was not upon the floor was because I was stopped in the corridor by a gentleman, who informed me that he had just been out through Pennsylvania, that he was investigating as to the condition of the steel industry in that State, and that he had just returned, and said that it was in worse condition than it was even in 1896.

Mr. RAINEY. Has the gentleman any objection to giving the name of his witness?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman is a Grand Army man; he wears a Grand Army button. I see him here about the building sometimes, but I do not know his name. If I did, I would be very glad to give it to the gentleman from Illinois. But I can say this also, for the gentleman's information, that while he talks about the steel industry, the United States Steel Corporation had less than one-half as many orders upon its books the 1st day of May of this year as it did on the 1st day of May a year ago. Another remarkable statement is, as he says from this information which he receives from his clipping bureau, that all of these mills are starting up; that business is reviving, is going to revive.

Mr. Chairman, we have been told all of these months that the mills were all running at full capacity. How can they be starting up when they never have been closed? I am losing some of my faith in some of the prosperity items that are presented on that side of the House. It will doubtless be recalled that on last Friday, I think it was, my distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] was enlightening us about the wonderful prosperity in Indiana, and in his particular district, and yet the very day that the gentleman from Indiana stood up here and made his prosperity speech the largest factory in his entire district closed, the Sowers Furniture Manufacturing Co., at Bloomington, Ind., employing 800 men, a factory that has been running for many years. Merely psychological, I suppose.

And on last Saturday, while some of those gentlemen were making their prosperity speeches about the textile industry, in Martinsburg, W. Va., almost in the shadow of the Capitol, one of the great factories that has been running for 30 years closed its doors. I wondered why my clipping-bureau friend did not get that clipping. It was in all the press here.

Mr. GOOD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will.

Mr. GOOD. The gentleman certainly knows it is not necessary to go to Pennsylvania or to Indiana or to any other State to secure evidence that business is paralyzed. Coming down F Street in the city of Washington to-day I counted 10 empty store buildings between Fourteenth Street and Thirteenth Street, and the gentleman knows that that portion of F Street is the best retail section of the city of Washington.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Oh, yes; but that is all psychological.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Are they not rebuilding them?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. They were all running a year ago. There are five empty stores on the block on F Street, the first one this side of the New Willard Hotel, that were all occupied a year ago, but of course that is psychological also; but still they are closed, and in a few days my distinguished friend from Illinois will be reading a clipping saying they are going to open.

Mr. RAINEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do.

Mr. RAINEY. Does the gentleman know these store buildings which he has just mentioned as being closed are closed because they are preparing to build other buildings on that ground?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Oh, no.

Mr. RAINEY. That is true.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No; the ones I refer to are not closed on account of building operations; they are closed on account of a Democratic administration. Look all over the entire country. You can go into any village or any city in the United States and all you have to do is to walk along the streets and look at the signs "For rent" and know we are enjoying a Democratic administration.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to address the committee for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to address the committee for one minute. Is there objection?

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I just this minute stated——

Mr. TAGGART. I beg pardon, the Chair had made a ruling, and I will withdraw the request.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I make no objection to the gentleman's request; but I hope that will not be taken——

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, out of deference to the Chairman's ruling, I withdraw the request which he has denied the other side.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to section 8.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 7, line 15, after the word "to," strike out "$50" and insert "$10."

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I was not able to hear all the colloquy between the chairman of the committee and the gentleman from California; if I had, perhaps it might have convinced me that this amendment should not be offered; but not hearing it, I am of the opinion that the bill ought to be amended in the way I have indicated in the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk. This is the section that provides:

SEC. 8. That every person, firm, association, or committee, except political committees as hereinbefore defined, that shall expend or promise any sum of money or other thing of value amounting to $50 or more for the purpose of influencing or controlling, in two or more States, the result of an election at which Representatives or Senators to the Congress of the United States are elected, unless he or it shall contribute the same to a political committee as hereinbefore defined, shall file statements of the same.

And so forth.

Now, this amendment, in my judgment, if adopted, will not work hardship or bring about the confusion in the office of the Clerk of the House which the gentleman from Missouri fears it would, because I apprehend that persons making these contributions would ordinarily make them to committees; and if the contributions are made to committees, why, then, there is no requirement to make report here to the Clerk; and it seems to me that if we leave the amount as high as $50 we open the way to a great deal of possibility of fraud. I do not think there will be any hardship or any confusion or any inconvenience if we have that amount lower, and I do believe the amendment I have offered is in the interest of purity in our elections.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIS. I do.

Mr. RUCKER. I am not guided in my conclusions by the thought of any hardship to anybody who is required to keep an account, but I would like to suggest this to the gentleman: The amount written in the law is $50. The gentleman's amendment would reduce it to $10, so that everybody who made a contribution, which was not given to a committee, of $10 or more to be used in two or more States would be required to file a statement with the Clerk of the House. Now, the point I make is this: If a great many contributions of that kind are made, obviously nobody will pay attention to them, because they become so multitudinous. If only a few are made, it is wholly immaterial whether we know about them or not, because they do no harm, and, it seems to me, if the gentleman will reflect a moment about it, in requiring publicity where the amount is $10 or more, if you would file all the papers here, it would pile up the papers here so high and become so confusing the public could derive no benefit from the requirement.

Mr. WILLIS. I do not think this amendment, if enacted into law, would effect such confusion, and I do not think there would be any delay of reports; but I think our people all over the country, who as a class are law-abiding citizens, would appreciate the spirit of this act, which undoubtedly is to turn on the light of publicity and punish everybody who ought to be punished. Men who wish to contribute to the expense account of any candidate, instead of sending that money to him, so that the matter can be kept in the dark, with all the attendant possibility of improper influence, will make a contribution directly to some committee which, under this admirable bill which the gentleman has drawn, will be required to make a report. It seems to me that the very effect of it will be to secure larger publicity. Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I believe that possibly the gentleman from Ohio misapprehends the bill. If, for instance, some genteman living in a different State would send to a candidate for Congress in Missouri a $25 contribution, the amendment he proposes would not require, even if the amendment should carry, publicity by the donor, because the language is "who seeks to influence the election in two or more States."

Mr. WILLIS. Yes; I understand so.

Mr. RUCKER. If the effort is to control the result of an election in only one district, it would not be in two or more States. And then, again, the gentleman will see that very little will ever result from this section as a matter of fact, except when gentlemen make princely donations, because where the amount is $50 it must be distributed between at least two States before the donor is amenable to the law.

Now, a person who is a candidate in another State who may receive the donation is obligated to account for that, but the giver would not be required to give publicity unless the election is held in more than one State.

Mr. WILLIS. The result of this amendment reducing the amount would tend to bring about a larger degree of publicity, would it not?

Mr. RUCKER. No. In all frankness I will say that I think the contrary would be the effect.

Mr. WILLIS. If the gentleman believes that, why not raise the $50 to $1,000, or at least to $100?

Mr. RUCKER. Oh, that is not reasonable. The gentleman will recollect that $50 measures the amount of the campaign contributions of many men who make contributions for patriotic motives. I hope the gentleman's amendment will not be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SISSON. I want to inquire whether, under the special order, amendments were to be offered to the end of the paragraph? Does the regular order apply to amendments offered at the end of a paragraph and not the end of a section?

The CHAIRMAN. There was no request made to consider the bill by paragraphs, and the regular rule of considering it by sections is adhered to.

Mr. SISSON. That is not the regular rule, as I understand it. It is not to consider it by sections, but by paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. We are considering this by sections.

Mr. SISSON. I want to offer some amendments to this bill.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I suppose the gentleman would be content to offer them after the reading of the section.

Mr. SISSON. The same amendment would occur in several of these paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] will be recognized to offer amendments to any paragraph in the section.

Mr. SISSON. I would like to know by what order or what authority we are changing the regular rule of the House, which says that the bill shall be read by paragraphs for amendment, and not by sections? I have no objection, Mr. Chairman, if it is understood that I do not lose any rights thereby.

Mr. RUCKER. That is all right.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, that would be true if there was a gentleman's agreement that no one would make a point of order that it was too late to offer an amendment.

Mr. RUCKER. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that in the consideration of this bill amendments may be offered, after the entire section has been read, to any part of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER] asks unanimous consent that amendments may be offered, after the entire section has been read, to any part thereof. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That the word "candidate" as used in this section shall include every person whose name is presented with his knowledge and consent for nomination for Representative or Senator in the Congress of the United States at any primary election or nominating convention or for election at any general or special election held in connection with the nomination or election of a person to fill such office, whether or not such persons are nominated or elected.

Every person who shall be a candidate for nomination at any primary election or nominating convention, or for election at any general or special election, as Representative in the Congress of the United States, shall, not less than 10 nor more than 15 days before the day for holding such primary election or nominating convention, and not less than 10 nor more than 15 days before the day of the general or special election at which candidates for Representatives are to be elected, file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives, at Washington, D. C., a full, correct, and itemized statement of all moneys and things of value received by him or by anyone for him with his knowledge and consent, from any source, in aid or support of his candidacy, together with the names of all those who have furnished the same, in whole or in part, and deliver a duplicate of such statement to each of his opponents for such nomination or election if such opponents and their addresses are known. Such statement shall contain a true and itemized account of all moneys and things of value given, contributed, expended, used, or promised by such candidate, or by his agent, representative, or other person for and in his behalf with his knowledge and consent, together with the names of all those to whom any and all such gifts, contributions, payments, or promises were made for the purpose of procuring his nomination or election.

Every person who shall be a candidate for nomination at any primary election or nominating convention, or for election at any general or special election, for Senator of the United States, shall, not less than 10 nor more than 15 days before the day for holding such primary election or nominating convention, and not less than 10 nor more than 15 days before the day of the general or special election to fill such office, file with the Secretary of the Senate, at Washington, D. C., a full, correct and itemized statement of all moneys and things of value received by him, or by anyone for him with his knowledge and consent, from any source, in aid or support of his candidacy, together with the names of all those who have furnished the same in whole or in part, and deliver a duplicate of such statement to each of his opponents for such nomination or election, if known. Such statement shall contain a true and itemized account of all moneys and things of value given, contributed, expended, used, or promised by such candidate, or by his agent, representative, or other person for and in his behalf with his knowledge and consent, together with the names of all those to whom any and all such gifts, contributions, payments, or promises were made for the purpose of procuring his nomination or election.

Every such candidate for nomination at any primary election or nominating convention, or election at any general or special election, shall, within 15 days after such primary election or nominating convention, and within 30 days after any such general or special election, file with the Clerk of the House of Representatives or with the Secretary of the Senate, as the case may be, a full, correct, and itemized statement of all moneys and things of value received by him, or by anyone for him with his knowledge and consent, from any source, in aid or support of his candidacy, together with the names of all those who have furnished the same in whole or in part; and such statement shall contain a true and itemized account of all moneys and things of value given, contributed, expended, used, or promised by such candidate, or by his agent, representative, or other person for and in his behalf with his knowledge and consent, up to, on, and after the day of such primary election, nominating convention, or general or special election, together with the names of all those to whom any and all such gifts, contributions, payments, or promises were made for the purpose of procuring his nomination or election.

Every such candidate shall include therein a statement of every promise or pledge made by him, or by anyone for him with his knowledge and consent or to whom he has given authority to make any such promise or pledge, before the completion of any such primary election or nominating convention or general or special election relative to the appointment or recommendation for appointment of any person to any position of trust, honor, or profit, either in the county, State, or Nation, or in any political subdivision thereof, or in any private or corporate employment, for the purpose of procuring the support of such person or of any person in his candidacy; and if any such promise or pledge shall have been made the name or names, the address or addresses, and the occupation or occupations of the person or persons to whom such promise or pledge shall have been made shall be stated, together with a description of the position relating to which such promise or pledge has been made. In the event that no such promise or pledge has been made by such candidate that fact shall be distinctly stated.

No candidate for Representative in Congress or for Senator of the United States shall promise any office or position to any person, or to use his influence or to give his support to any person for any office or position for the purpose of procuring the support of such person or of any person in his candidacy; but such candidate may, within the limitations and restrictions and subject to the requirements of this act, contribute to political committees having charge of the disbursement of campaign funds.

No candidate for Representative in Congress or for Senator of the United States shall give, contribute, expend, use, or promise, or cause to be given, contributed, expended, used, or promised, in procuring his nomination and election, any sum in the aggregate in excess of the amount which he may lawfully give, contribute, expend, or promise under the laws of the State in which he resides: Provided, That no candidate for Representative in Congress shall give, contribute, expend, use, or promise any sum in the aggregate exceeding $5,000 in any campaign for his nomination and election; and no candidate for Senator of the United States shall give, contribute, expend, use, or promise any sum in the aggregate exceeding $10,000 in any campaign for his nomination and election: Provided further, That money expended by any such candidate to meet and discharge any assessment, fee, or charge made or levied upon candidates by the laws of the State in which he resides, or for his necessary personal expenses, incurred for himself alone, for travel and subsistence, stationery, and postage, writing or printing (other than in newspapers), and distributing letters, circulars, and posters, and for telegraph and telephone service, shall not be regarded as an expenditure within the meaning of this section, and shall not be considered any part of the sum herein fixed as the limit of expense and need not be shown in the statements herein required to be filed.

No statement herein required to be made need contain the items of which publicity is given in a previous statement, but the statement required to be made and filed after a general or special election, in addition to an itemized statement of all expenses not theretofore given publicity, shall contain a summary of all preceding statements.

Mr. SISSON and Mr. STAFFORD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the first paragraph. I want to state also that the same amendment, if it prevails, will be offered to all of the other paragraphs and sections of the bill wherein the same language occurs.

Mr. Chairman, I offer to amend the first paragraph in section 9 by striking out, after the word "States," in line 4, page 8, the words "at any primary election or nominating convention or for election," and striking out, after the word "special," in line 6, the words "election held in connection with the nomination or," so that the section will read "or Senator in the Congress of the United States at any general or special election."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 4, after the word "States," strike out the words "at any primary election or nominating convention or for election," and, after the word "election," in line 6, strike out the words "election held in connection with the nomination or."

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I intended also to include in line 3 the words "for nomination."

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, can we have the amendment reported again?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 3 strike out the words "for nomination."

Mr. SISSON. That does not read exactly as it should. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to modify my amendment so that the word "nomination" may read "election." I think it makes it clearer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, let the amendment be read as modified.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment reported. It has not been fully reported as yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, strike out the word "nomination" and insert "election."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman has not been reported at any time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the entire amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 3 "nomination" and insert "election"; in line 4, after the word "States," strike out the words "at any primary election or nominating convention or for election"; and after "election," in line 6, strike out "held in connection with the nomination or election of a person to fill such office, whether or not such persons are nominated or elected."

Mr. SISSON. We ought to strike out the word "election" after the word "special," so that the word "election" will not occur twice. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the amendment is understood, I would like to have recognition.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I will offer after the gentleman has discussed his amendment.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, there are several gentlemen who want to be heard on this. I believe the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] has some amendments to offer to other parts of the bill.

Mr. SISSON. Yes; there are some. I will state to the gentleman, so far as I am concerned, that I am perfectly willing that the debate on these may be completed at one time, instead of debating them at different times.

Mr. RUCKER. I wonder if we could not agree as to how much time gentlemen will want to debate this?

Mr. SISSON. In view of the fact that there are so many of the amendments, while I do not want to trespass on the time of the committee, I should like to be permitted to proceed for at least 10 minutes myself.

Mr. RUCKER. I should like to inquire how many other gentlemen want to speak.

Mr. STAFFORD. There will be 15 minutes wanted on this side, and I suggest to the gentleman that we go ahead.

Mr. RUCKER. I thought we might agree on it.

Mr. SISSON. There is absolutely no desire to delay consideration of the bill.

Mr. RUCKER. I know that.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to gentlemen that I am in favor of publicity of campaign contributions for all elections, and I am in favor of the rigid enforcement of the law, but I do not want to write into a bill something that I do not believe to be in accordance with the Federal Constitution or within the power of Congress.

I presume it is conceded by everyone that under the Constitution the right to regulate the election of a Congressman is fixed; and since the amendment to the Federal Constitution in reference to the election of Senators, the right to regulate that election is fixed within such limitations as the Constitution makes.

But there is no line, no syllable, and no letter in the Constitution that directly or indirectly recognizes a primary election. The only election to which the Constitution refers is the general election in November and the election of United States Senators. Every other provision of this bill except that which relates to that matter is not constitutional; and I believe that when this proposition is submitted to the Supreme Court, if it is ever so submitted, upon the proposition as to whether or not a man has violated this statute in some primary election, the court will be compelled to declare this act unconstitutional.

How do you get jurisdiction of a man under the Constitution? You get jurisdiction of him by virtue of the fact that he is brought within the provisions of that Constitution when he is elected to the office of Congressman, and, at most, when he is a candidate at the November election. Anything beyond that is beyond the power of the Federal Government. You can not reach out and control the primary election, because the primary election is not held for Congress in the sense that any man there is a candidate for Congress, but he comes before a portion of his constituents who have organized themselves into a political party, and he is asking for the party nomination, asking their permission to become a candidate for Congress. He submits his name, agreeing to abide by the result of that primary election; and when he does so submit his name to that primary, he in no sense of the word puts himself within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government under that clause of the Constitution which gives him the right to an election in November. This is one of the incidents of election, they say; but it is not such an incident as will enable Congress to reach out and get hold of the machinery of the primary election which is held in a State in accordance with the demands of the people for a primary, in order that the parties in that State may select persons to become candidates who may then submit to the constitutional election laws passed by Congress. I agreed with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] when he made the statement this afternoon that he did not believe that that much of this bill was constitutional. Nor do I believe you will find a lawyer who will give this matter serious consideration who will say that that part of it is constitutional. I do not believe any man can say so, if he believes in the written Constitution which we have made, and if he believes that Congress is limited in what it does by the plain language of that Constitution. I do not believe you can find any rhyme or reason for the contention that we can reach out and control a State primary election.

How does a man come within the reach of the Federal Constitution? It is when he submits his name to that machinery which the Federal Constitution has a right to control. And what is that machinery which the Federal Constitution has the right to regulate? The only right that Congress has under the Federal Constitution is to give to certain men the right to hold elections under election laws which Congress may pass. There has never been a Federal election law written upon the statute books of this Union in its history unless you shall call this a Federal election law. Some time ago the Lodge bill, commonly known as the force bill, sought to take control of State elections and the appointment of election officers, the appointment of the men who should hold the elections and make the returns, and the appointment of the persons who should make the registration of the voters.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SISSON. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Now, the Lodge bill passed the House of Representatives, but failed in the Senate. That bill was constitutional; that is the feature of the bill which would take control of the regulation of elections, but that was the limit to which it could go. The Federal Government can go no further in that. I know that in these modern times there are men who laugh at the Constitution. I know that in these modern times men make light of that instrument which is the palladium of the liberties of all the people of these States; that instrument which has blazed the way for great Governments of the world; that instrument which was said by Mr. Gladstone to be the greatest instrument ever struck off at one time by the hand of man at any one convention. I know that when political pressure comes upon men at home they are willing to hide behind the fact that the Supreme Court may declare a law unconstitutional if we have violated the Constitution. But that is not the oath which we take. That is not the oath to which we subscribe when we are admitted to this body as Members. We take a solemn oath, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion, that we will support the Constitution of the United States. Therefore, if there is any question about the constitutionality of a law in any Member's mind, under that oath he should give his decision against the constitutionality of it and against the power of the United States.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Perhaps I am laboring under a misapprehension as to the provisions of this bill, but I do not understand that this bill proposes to interfere in any way with any election laws or that it controls elections in any way. Does the gentleman understand that this bill attempts to control elections in any way?

Mr. SISSON. Oh, yes; it does.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. If the gentleman will pardon me——

Mr. SISSON. I do not want to get off into a discussion of the extent to which this bill goes. But under this bill you may reach a party organization in a State, a party organization with which the Federal Government has nothing to do, a primary election law with which the Federal Government has nothing to do, and which has no lodgment in the Constitution. A primary election applies only to the political party, which is a voluntary association formed by agreement amongst a number of people in a State, regulated by the State law, to enable the people of that party to select a man who will become the candidate of that party and then subject himself to the rules and regulations that may be made by Congress under the constitutional provision which provides for the election of Congressmen. Until that stage arises, until the citizen shall offer himself as a candidate for Congress in the November election—the only election that can be recognized under the Constitution, because that is the election fixed, that is the election determined, that is the election and the only one that Congress has anything to do with under the Constitution—until that machinery of the people necessary to reach that stage, that machinery necessary to reach that conclusion as to who shall submit his name for this election, I contend that the Federal Government has no right to control the primary election under the Constitution.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. In a great many States, both North and South, the only contest we have is in the primary election. After that is over the nomination is equivalent to an election in both the Republican and Democratic States. How would we have publicity then?

Mr. SISSON. I am not bothering myself about that proposition. It is the right of the citizen in a rock-ribbed Republican district of Pennsylvania to bring out a nomination against any candidate in that State; but if no man offers his name for that election, Congress could not reach him. It is not a question of districts; it is a question of what is legal under the Constitution.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. This law was in force at the last congressional election. Has the gentleman heard of any complaints; did not it work well?

Mr. SISSON. That is no answer to the proposition. I am not talking about the wisdom or the unwisdom of it; I am not talking about determining whether it is a good law or a bad law; I am not asking you to determine whether you will or will not support a law that is unconstitutional.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more, and then I will trespass no further.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DUPRÉ). The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. The gentleman's argument goes to the matter of the presidential candidate, and I assume that the gentleman holds that Congress has no power to regulate a national convention also.

Mr. SISSON. I do not think that Congress has the right to regulate national conventions.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. In that respect the gentleman differs from the Chief Executive.

Mr. SISSON. That may be true, but I have never permitted the Chief Executive, however great respect I may have for him, to do my thinking. I should look with a good deal of pity on the Member of the House who represented his district who permitted any man to do his thinking for him, even though he held the great office of President of the United States and was one of the purest men on earth.

Now, I am not going into that subject, and I hope the gentleman will not ask me why, for if he did I would have to go into the constitutional provision that provides that electors shall be elected by the States in proportion to the population. I am willing to debate that, whenever it comes up, to the best of my skill and ability.

In this connection, I am not dealing with the question whether or not it may have been wise when they established the Government for them not to give full power over those matters. I am not debating the question whether it might not have been wiser for the fathers to abolish the State lines except for geographical purposes. I am here contending that they did not do so, and that every power which we have the right to exercise here to-day comes from that delegation of power to the Federal Government by the States in solemn convention assembled, ratified thereafter by State legislation.

I am afraid of the man, and for the future of the Republic, when this body shall be filled with men who are willing to scoff at that instrument and the oath that they take to support that Constitution. Therefore, whatever may be the difference between that man and me, you will find that when you ask him the question, he will always pretend to find some constitutional reason, because he is unwilling to commit the crime of perjury. Therefore you must find constitutional ground for the power exercised in Congress, and if you do not do so you have taken an oath that you ought not to have taken, and you have violated the oath when you vote for a law that does not come within the Constitution.

Therefore I hope that every man will seek to justify himself on some constitutional ground. I shall not fall out with a man if he honestly, in his own mind, exercising the best judgment, finds a right to exercise this power and casts a vote in favor of this measure. But, as I view it, I can not support this provision in this bill, which does that which I believe the Federal Government has no right to do. It would be infinitely better, if the measure is so popular in the States, if the measure is one so much demanded in the States, that you should pursue the constitutional method of obtaining a law, and that is under article 5 of this sacred instrument, which provides the means and methods of amending the Constitution, go back to the States and therefrom get the necessary power to pass the desired legislation.

We have done that in reference to many matters. I am unwilling that Congress shall assume the power that does not belong to it. The balance of the bill, as it regulates elections, as it carries regulations in reference to candidates for Congress, you have the unquestioned right, you have the unquestioned power, to pass any law you see fit, providing that it merely regulates the election. When you go beyond that I contend that you have violated the provisions of the Constitution. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. It seems to me that the amendment which has been so eloquently defended by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] ought to be entitled "An amendment to provide that candidates for Congress in districts where there are actual party contests shall be required to make reports, but that candidates from districts in which there is no contest save at the primaries shall not be required to make reports." My good friend from Mississippi is afraid of the ghost of the force bill. There is no disposition at all to raise any such question as he has suggested here. There is no disposition to interfere with the right of the people to do anything they actually have a right to do, but there is a disposition to put upon the statute books of the United States a law that will guarantee the purity not only of the merely formal election, but the purity of the primary and the nominating convention. I have not had opportunity to examine the Congressional Directory recently, but I have examined it in past years, and there are many gentlemen here, patriotic and able gentlemen, who have been elected to Congress without opposition save in their own party, and so state in their biographical notices, which they have themselves written.

I am not referring now only to gentlemen who are here from districts in the South where they have no opposition from the party to which I belong; there are some districts farther north where a nomination on the Republican ticket would be regarded as equivalent to an election, so this is not a party matter. But I say to you that where a nomination is equivalent to an election, if you adopt this amendment you have made an utterly unfair discrimination. If the gentleman lives in a district where there is no party opposition—and I am not suggesting that my friend from Mississippi would do an improper thing, and I know he would not; I am simply referring to my friend as an illustration—where there is no opposition to him he might go to the very depths of political corruption. He might openly buy votes at the primaries, he might corrupt delegates to the conventions, and he might use any of the devious methods of the crooked politician to secure the nomination; and yet there would be absolutely no relief under the law if it should pass with the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I agree thoroughly with the gentleman that this is not a partisan question; but does the gentleman not concede that if the nomination should be so corrupt as to excite public scorn there would be opposition at the general election, because the people would control it?

Mr. WILLIS. There certainly ought to be, but I am not so sure there always would be. At all events, I am unwilling to vote for an amendment when I can see right on the face of it that it will so emasculate this proposed legislation as to make it utterly inapplicable in almost half the congressional districts of the country.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is a good lawyer——

Mr. WILLIS. I thank the gentleman for the admission.

Mr. SISSON. Can the gentleman find constitutional grounds sufficient to justify his position upon this matter?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I will say this to my friend: I have not had opportunity to look up the authorities, as the question has come up suddenly. I am quite familiar with the constitutional provision which he read, but I notice in the Manual a citation to which I called attention earlier in the day, on page 15, to the effect that Congress has, in fact, fixed by law the time of an election and has controlled the manner to the extent of prescribing a ballot or voting machine.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly.

Mr. SISSON. That, of course, is at a general election?

Mr. WILLIS. Absolutely.

Mr. SISSON. And the election provided for in the Constitution. I have no sort of criticism of this bill in so far as it applies to an election.

Mr. WILLIS. I understand that; but what I was about to say is this: If the Federal Government has authority to prescribe the form of ballot to be used at a general election, has authority to prescribe even a voting machine—if it can go that much into detail, I believe that under this clause of the Constitution there is ample authority to say that when the fathers used the word "election" they meant all those processes by which persons are selected to occupy seats in Congress. In other words, I think that the election includes the nomination, so far as the power of Congress is concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD rose.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, can we not agree on some time for closing debate on this section?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman from Wisconsin be permitted to get through before we attempt any such arrangement.

Mr. STAFFORD. On this side we can readily agree on time.

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman will permit me just one suggestion, I desire to state that so far as I am concerned, if the debate is exhausted upon this amendment, unless somebody else desires to offer the amendment, I will just generally ask that we consider one amendment, that wherever the language I ask to be stricken out in this section occurs it be stricken out. That will save the offering of amendments and having those amendments read, and that will save a good deal more time than it would to try to force an agreement at this time.

Mr. RUCKER. Would it be satisfactory if we have 10 minutes more debate upon this side in favor of the amendment?

Mr. SISSON. As far as I am individually concerned that would be entirely adequate. I do not know what will be said, but if I can have three minutes I would be satisfied.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I hope the gentleman will be willing to let the gentleman from Wisconsin conclude before we make any agreement. I do not know that I will want any time at all.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, for the present I withhold my request.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, although the distinguished leader of the minority took occasion this morning to express doubt about the constitutional authority of Congress so far as the provisions of this bill are concerned, I think that a reading of the decisions of the United States Supreme Court removes all question as to its constitutionality, not only of those provisions that relate only to the election, but also those which extend to the primary election, and in confirmation of that I am going to cite the leading case, as I regard it, in this respect. It is referred to in the Manual, being the case of Ex parte Yarboro (110 U. S., 651).

The syllabus that refers to this section is as follows:

Section 4 of Article I of the Constitution, which declares "the times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof, but the Congress may at any time make or alter such regulations, except as to the place of choosing Senators," adopts the State qualification as the Federal qualification for the voter; but his right to vote is based upon the Constitution and not upon the State law, and Congress has the constitutional power to pass laws for the free, pure, and safe exercise of this right.

Justice Miller delivered the decision in this case, and all of us know Justice Miller at that time was regarded as the most eminent jurist on constitutional law then occupying the bench. He uses some language to which I wish to call the attention of the committee as a warrant for the language which I have just read from the syllabus.

That a Government whose essential character is republican, whose executive head and legislative body are both elective, whose most numerous and powerful branch of the legislature is elected by the people directly, has no power by appropriate laws to secure this election from the influence of violence, of corruption, and of fraud is a proposition so startling as to arrest attention and demand the gravest consideration. If this Government is anything more than a mere aggregation of delegated agents of other States and Governments, each of which is superior to the General Government, it must have the power to protect elections, on which its existence depends, from violence and corruption. If it has not this power, it is left helpless before the two great natural and historical enemies of all the public, open violence and insidious corruption.

Further on I read:

Will it be denied that it is in the power of that body to provide laws for the proper conduct for those elections; to provide, if necessary, the officers who shall conduct them and make return of the result; and especially to provide, in an election held under its own authority, for security of life and limb to the voter while in the exercise of this function? Can it be doubted that Congress can by law protect the act of voting, the place where it is done, and the man who votes from personal violence or intimidation and the election itself from corruption and fraud?

There is the essence——

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Not at present, until I finish commenting on this decision.

There is the essence of the decision which is the basis for this legislation for Congress extending its supervision over primary elections——

Mr. SISSON. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. If corruption exists at the primaries, then that fraud reaches to the election, and if Congress has no supervision over primary nominations, this body would be without authority to protect itself as the framers of the Constitution intended it to be protected when they vested authority in Congress by section 4 of Article I. But more, section 5 gives——

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will.

Mr. SISSON. I am thoroughly familiar with the case the gentleman read, but that deals solely with the general election, the machinery for that election, the books for that election, and everything necessary to hold that election. The point in that case was as to all the machinery necessary to test the will of the voter at that election; that is all there is to it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I quite agree with the gentleman that the instant case only referred to an election, but there is language there by Justice Miller, eminent constitutionalist jurist that he was, construing that constitutional authority to remove all doubt, that there is any question that Congress had the right to protect the elections at the fountainhead and through the various proceedings of an election. It is something new, something that has grown up recently, in the last 15 years, to have elections by primaries. It had its origin in the State of Wisconsin and it has spread over all this country.

When this decision was rendered back in 1883 there was no State in the country that had any primary election; it was unknown; it was unheard of; but the language expressed in that decision is strong enough to show that the Supreme Court through Justice Miller intended that Congress had ample authority over everything that concerned the election of its Members. Furthermore, consider for a moment section 5, which says that each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members. Now, every line of the Constitution is consonant with the idea that Congress must be supreme in the protection of its own membership, in the requirement, if need be, as to the qualification of the electors, and the conditions attendant on nominations and elections also. Now I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Under the section which the gentleman just read as to each House being the judge of the elections and qualifications of its own Members, would the gentleman think that now the House would have the right to inquire into the nomination of a Member?

Mr. STAFFORD. The House would have the right to inquire, in considering whether or not a Member is entitled to a seat in this House, as to the method and means of his nomination; most assuredly. If there had been corruption and fraud in his nomination, and he was elected, then that corruption would reach to the election itself.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. I have great respect for the gentleman, not only as a man but as a lawyer; but let me ask him this: Suppose that a man had been absolutely discharged from this House in a former election for fraud and corruption. If he goes back home and his constituents vote for him, they remove it all and he is admitted.

Mr. STAFFORD. Congress has the right to refuse to admit him even then if Congress decides he is not a fit person to hold a seat in this House.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, has the timepiece of the House been lost? [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. I think the Chairman of the committee is wide-awake in the performance of every duty.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] has expired.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended three minutes. He has been interrupted frequently.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] be extended three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I think the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] ought to be considerate of some of us who are obliged to stay here. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. We have had time for debate on the amendment on this side, and it is only fair to let the other side have an equal amount of time.

Mr. DONOVAN. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee seems to be of the same stripe, only he is on this side. [Laughter.] Now, it is almost painful to us, at least to some of us, to hear repetitions of this sort hour after hour. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to say to the gentleman from Connecticut that he is under no compulsion to remain.

Mr. DONOVAN. Would he not be thoughtful enough of some of us here to ask unanimous consent to extend his remarks and have what he wants to say inserted in the RECORD?

Mr. STAFFORD. Replying to the gentleman's last remark, I wish to say to the gentleman——

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON]?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I merely wish to say to the gentleman from Connecticut that those who were in favor of the amendment had 15 minutes, and the gentleman from Wisconsin was opposing the amendment. The gentleman from Connecticut, of course, was not here at the time and did not know what was going on. I merely suggested that, as a matter of courtesy and to be entirely fair, those who opposed the amendment should have an equal amount of time with those who were in favor of it. I thought so, but I do not suppose the gentleman from Connecticut understands the meaning of the word "courtesy."

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I want to say that that ungracious insult from the gentleman from Tennessee was uncalled for. I do not know anyone who remains silent so little and takes part in irregular proceedings more than the gentleman from Tennessee, both in the Committee of the Whole and in the body of the House. Day after day we are sitting here listening to discussions that are foreign to the subject in hand, and the gentleman from Tennessee understands that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I was about to say that for the purpose of expedition I shall not ask for any further time.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I believe nobody else desires to be heard.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I wish to be heard.

Mr. RUCKER. I want to close the debate.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to have an opportunity to say something at some period in the consideration of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be recognized.

Mr. DONOVAN. Now?

The CHAIRMAN. No; the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] has the floor.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I renew the request made a while ago for unanimous consent to close debate.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. On this entire section?

Mr. RUCKER. Yes; this entire section.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, there are many amendments to be offered to other paragraphs of this section.

Mr. RUCKER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this particular amendment close.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has expressed a desire to be heard on this amendment.

Mr. RUCKER. I have time and time again appealed to the gentleman that if he has a desire to take time he can have the opportunity.

Mr. STAFFORD. Three minutes' time is desired on this side by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] and some time by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not care to take time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN] is recognized.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am unable to agree with the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], and I am unable to follow the analogy of his argument. In the first place, Mr. Chairman, I think there is nothing that ought to be clearer to our minds than the fact that the primary is a part of the election. Unless there is an election there is no occasion for a primary. The primary is merely a preliminary part of the machinery of the election.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The gentleman says it is a part of the election?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the gentleman think that if the old-fashioned conventions were still in vogue as a method of determining party candidates it would be proper for this House or this Congress to pass a law regulating how those conventions should be held and all about them?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Without any doubt. There can not be any question about it, as I think. The candidates that are to be voted for at the elections are determined either at the convention or at the primary. If you will consult the statute books of the various States having laws on the subject, you will find the provisions touching primaries included under the election laws and that they are a part of the election laws.

But, Mr. Chairman, we might go further than this. Every legislative body has the inherent right to protect itself against fraud and corruption in obtaining seats in that body.

As I was saying, every legislative body has the inherent right to protect itself against fraud and corruption in obtaining a seat upon its floor; and whatever steps any candidate may take in the course of the procedure anywhere along the line, I insist it is the inherent right of the legislative body to protect itself against action which would in the end destroy the usefulness of that body, if not threaten its very existence.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] has argued here that because the Constitution simply provides for the regulation of elections, therefore there is no right to go beyond that to a primary or a convention. I have already stated that I believe a primary or a convention to be a part of the machinery of the election. Even if that were not so, there would be no proper argument against it. In the one case the States have been given the power to regulate the elections. Anything further in the way of regulating the action of the States must necessarily be conferred by the Constitution. But by this provision which is under discussion we propose simply to regulate the action of the individual in obtaining a seat in this body. The proceeding which he has taken, whether for good or for evil, is something to be passed upon by this body, something which, as I have already stated, Congress has the inherent right to control.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. SISSON, strike out the first paragraph of section 9 and insert the following paragraph:

"That the word 'candidate' as used in this section shall include every person whose name is presented with his knowledge and consent for election as a Representative or Senator in the Congress of the United States at any general or special election held for the purpose of electing such officials."

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the amendment which I have proposed is no change in what is desired by the gentleman from Mississippi, but it seems to me the language is better, to bring it in as a whole, so that the committee can understand how it would read if amended. The whole purpose of it is to strike out that part of this paragraph which refers to primary elections or methods of nomination, whether by primary election or convention.

It has been my view all along, and is now, that the Congress has nothing to do with the question of nominations. I do not concur with the gentleman from Wisconsin in the idea that this Congress would have the right, under the constitutional power which is given to each House, to judge of the election and qualifications of its own Members—I do not understand that it would have the constitutional right to investigate the method of nomination, though it might arbitrarily do so. Nominations are not binding upon either the candidate or the voter.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. In the case that came from South Carolina a while ago, was it not the manner of obtaining the nomination that was in dispute?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I believe it was, and my recollection is that the sitting Member was retained in his seat.

Mr. STAFFORD. Take this hypothetical case: Through manifest fraud in the nomination of both the successful candidates they are nominated, and they stand for election, and one of them is elected.

Does the gentleman think Congress has no right to refuse the one having the certificate because he has been nominated by fraud?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think the election must be tinctured with fraud or else Congress has no right to go into the question. Let me suggest a hypothetical case: Suppose, as sometimes happens, and I think I heard something of this kind in a case in one of the Southern States, where there are three candidates for the nomination for Congress, two from the same county. These two candidates have agreed among themselves upon the primary election in that county to see which one of them shall run for nomination. Would the gentleman from Wisconsin say that you could go back to that primary, and if not, why not? Can we go back and require them to file expense accounts?

Mr. STAFFORD. I am only citing instances where fraud vitiates the election.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. We are talking about compelling people to file expense accounts for nomination. I take the position that Congress has nothing to do with the nomination; that Congress is concerned only in the purity of the election, and the fact that some peculiar condition may exist in some particular district with reference to nomination being equivalent to election does not destroy the constitutional legal aspect which exists as a matter of fact.

Mr. TAGGART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. TAGGART. Is it not a fact that we have more drastic laws than those in nearly every State in the Union, probably in the gentleman's State, with reference to primary nomination for candidates?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I think so. The distinction between the power of the States over nomination and the power of Congress is well defined.

Mr. TAGGART. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. To be sure.

Mr. TAGGART. In the regulation of interstate commerce I imagine that the bar of the country has been even astonished at the extent to which the Supreme Court has gone in construing the word "regulate," carrying it down even into the manufacture of articles afterwards to be put into interstate commerce, in sustaining the celebrated Danbury Hat case, where men were sued for damages and the law sustained because they had interfered in the manufacture of hats that were going into interstate commerce. I cite this only to call attention to the fact that the word "regulate" has been given a broader significance and a more far-reaching construction than perhaps any other word that the Supreme Court has dealt with.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The word "regulate" is not involved in this. I do not care to press the argument. I know that this is existing law. I recognize that fact. I voted against it before on the same ground that I am opposed to it now. I move to strike it out because I think it is a matter over which Congress has no control.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. If you take this feature out of the bill, do you not ruin the bill?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Oh, not at all.

Mr. BUTLER. Take my district. There has never been a Democratic Representative in that district; and if they can not get a better man than I am there never will be until you gentlemen abandon your ideas of free trade. If you take this feature out of it, the bill will not apply to me at all.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is the question of the power of Congress that I am dealing with. I have a district exactly contrary to that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Mine is an overwhelmingly Democratic district, and no particular contest at the election, although there is always an opposition-party candidate. But this is a matter which can very well be left to my State to regulate as to whether we shall report campaign contributions for primaries.

Mr. BRYAN. The State can regulate the general election.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The State can, and the State does.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, if I can have the attention of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY]——

A MEMBER. He is not here.

Mr. DONOVAN. Or if I can have the attention of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS]——

A MEMBER. He is out.

Mr. DONOVAN. Well, can I have the attention of the leader of the minority?

Mr. STAFFORD. He is temporarily absent.

Mr. DONOVAN. I should like to have the attention of the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], for I do not want to say in his absence that which I wish to say, or in the absence of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], the intellectual Member.

Mr. STAFFORD. He has left the city to deliver a patriotic oration on the Fourth of July.

Mr. DONOVAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin should address the Speaker and not proceed in that disorderly way. [Laughter.] All these great commercial interests, Mr. Chairman, should be represented here on the floor in the Congress of the Nation, and yet that great lawyer whom we are told is the greatest legal gentleman in the whole United States, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, I would like to have his attention for a few moments.

Mr. TAGGART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Surely the gentleman does not refer to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. PALMER?

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Does the gentleman refer to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. PALMER?

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I refer to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. GRAHAM, the great lawyer. Can it be possible that he is only present when some special interest has something on hand? Well, Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as these gentlemen are not present, I will yield back the balance of my time. [Laughter.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I desire to call to the attention of the House and have printed in the RECORD the official statement made by Secretary McAdoo as to the finances of the country at the close of the last fiscal year, and I will ask the Clerk to read it in my time, if there is no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

JULY 1, 1914.

Subject to revision upon analysis of complete returns, the following is a statement of the ordinary receipts and the ordinary disbursements for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1914:

Customs		$292,128,527.63
Internal revenue, ordinary		308,613,843.73
Corporation, excise, and income	$43,079,819.44
Individual income	28,306,336.69
		71,386,156.13
Miscellaneous, including $3,800,000 surplus of postal revenues for the fiscal year 1913		62,215,172.71
Total ordinary receipts		734,343,700.20
Total ordinary disbursements		700,559,248.13
Surplus of ordinary receipts		33,784,452.07

The Panama Canal payments during the year amounted to $34,826,941.76. These have been paid out of current revenues, so that the surplus for the year of $33,784,452.07 has been absorbed, leaving the sum of $1,010,058.81 as a charge against the general fund of the Treasury.

The following is a comparative statement of the ordinary receipts and disbursements, including expenditures on the Panama Canal, for the last three fiscal years:

	Receipts.	Disbursements.	Surplus.	Panama Canal.	Surplus or deficit.
1912	$691,778,465	$654,553,963	$37,224,501	$35,327,370	[1] $1,897,131
1913	724,111,229	682,770,705	41,340,524	41,741,258	[2] 400,733
1914	734,343,700	700,559,248	33,784,452	34,826,941	[2] 1,010,058

[1] Surplus. [2] Deficit.

Owing to the provision in the income-tax law which gives 10 days after the close of the fiscal year before penalties attach, there was a failure to pay approximately $3,500,000 of taxes which had been assessed against corporations and individuals and which should have been paid before the close of the fiscal year 1914. Had this $3,500,000 been paid on or before June 30, 1914, there would have been a surplus for the fiscal year of approximately $2,500,000 against a surplus for 1912 of $1,897,000 and a deficit for 1913 of $400,000.

The department is exceedingly gratified with the results for the first fiscal year of the new tariff and income-tax law. Unquestionably very much better results will be obtained during the present fiscal year.

The net balance in the general fund of the Treasury is now $145,835,502.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to call the attention of the committee to the case which was read by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD]. This case, which he cites, is a case where one Yarboro and several others from the State of Georgia were indicted for assaulting a colored elector who was on his way to the polling place, and the indictment alleged that he was going there for the purpose of casting his ballot, and that the assault was for the purpose of preventing his voting. The whole opinion is directed to the right of the Federal Government to make a law that would enable people to vote at that election. I thought I was familiar with the case, and after looking at it, every member of the committee, if he will read it, will find that the court was endeavoring to establish the principle that a man going to the election for the purpose of voting could not be assaulted without violating the election law, and there is not the slightest evidence in this opinion that the court ever intended to hold anything else, and there is nothing indicated to justify the conclusions of my friend in reference to it.

Mr. McKELLAR. And that was away back in 1883, was it not?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. And that was long before there was any such thing as a primary election law in this country?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. If there was no such thing as a primary election law up to that time, manifestly the court could not have had any such thing as a primary election in view.

Mr. SISSON. That is true.

Mr. McKELLAR. How could the case have any possible application to the matter that we are now considering?

Mr. SISSON. I do not think it could.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say that if this becomes a law you will find that you then can have nominating conventions to nominate candidates who will become candidates at the primary election, and if you reach back and get that then you can have another primary or another nominating convention to select candidates for that. In many States in the Union where they have provided primary-election laws they actually have nominating conventions, and they have held such conventions in one county in my State where certain citizens got together and said, "We propose to eliminate our differences in a factional fight, so that we will have one candidate only at the primary election," which is the nominating body in my State. Will you say you will go back then and cover that? In other words, when you get beyond the election provided for by the Constitution you can make it absurd to say that Congress can pass laws to chase around after all of the organizations which men as citizens in their sovereign capacity might determine upon in order to ascertain whom they would support at the primary election, and this primary election law is nothing more nor less than the machinery that has been instituted in the State by the parties for the purpose of selecting a candidate for the general election; and I can not conceive how any man who is a lawyer can hold that Congress has the right to control the primary election law of a State.

Mr. McKELLAR. And if Congress can, under this section of the Constitution, regulate the primary elections, why would it not have an equal right and authority under this same provision to regulate how party committees are to be selected in every State in the Union?

Mr. SISSON. I think there is no question if you extend the power thus far you can carry it on ad infinitum. I yield now to the gentleman from California.

Mr. McKELLAR. My proposition is that that question was not considered in this lawsuit.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, just a minute, and I will only take one minute. If either the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi or the substitute offered by the gentleman from Tennessee is adopted, it practically destroys the existing law. It destroys the life of this bill. The provisions against which the amendment and substitute are directed are the law now, and I hope that the committee will vote down both the substitute and amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee in lieu of that offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. SISSON) there were—ayes 9, noes 24.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, in order to have the matter perfectly clear, I stated to the chairman of the committee that I would offer this amendment wherever it occurred, but I satisfy myself with the sense of the committee on the amendment and shall not offer the amendment to the other paragraph.

Mr. RUCKER. I appreciate that.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 8, line 12, after the words "United States," insert "and every person, firm, association, or committee that shall expend or promise any sum of money or other thing of value amounting to more than $50 for the purpose of promoting the candidacy of such candidate."

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Now, Mr. Chairman, on page 7 of the bill, in section 8, there is a provision requiring every person, firm, association, or committee that shall expend or promise any sum of money or other thing of value amounting to $50 or more for the purpose of influencing the election to make a report. Now, if it is advisable to have such a provision as that in the case of an election, it seems to me that it is all the more important that the same provision should apply to the primary, because at an election nearly all expenses are paid through official political organizations of some sort, through county committees or State committees or congressional committees, while in the primary it is a very common thing in many sections for a voluntary committee to handle the funds used to promote the candidacy of some individual. And it does seem to me that the expenditures of such a committee should be reported to the House. And that, Mr. Chairman, is the basis of the amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk—to require political committees of this sort, as well as persons, firms, or associations, if they spend more than $50 in the primary election, to make returns of such expenditures to the House.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, just to answer very briefly the gentleman, who is a friend of the measure, I know, let me say I think the existing provisions of the bill would require the committee to do all that he wants it to do, and my notion is that this would tend more to confusion than to elucidate and clarify.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. If I were sure of that——

Mr. RUCKER. I think so.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan (continuing). Of course I would withdraw the amendment, but I can not find in this section anything which requires persons, firms or corporations, or non-official committees to make any report of expenditures on behalf of a candidate in the primaries.

Mr. RUCKER. No; but you will find where a candidate is required to account for all of these things expended in his behalf.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. But the gentleman will understand if a candidate were disposed——

Mr. RUCKER. But the gentleman must bear in mind, as a friend of this measure, that such a thing is possible as killing it, destroying it. If there should be 100 men or 500 men or 1,000 men or 1,500 men in a district who were zealous in their support of a gentleman, they might ruin this whole bill by these publicity statements. My opinion is, the essential thing to do is to make these reports of such a character that the individuals and the public would take cognizance of them.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Does not the gentleman think the abuse aimed at will be much more likely to arise in the primary than at the election?

Mr. RUCKER. In many cases that may be.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Then why exclude the remedy from the primary and apply it to the election?

Mr. RUCKER. I do not think it is excluded at all.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. You think what I have intended to cover is already covered?

Mr. RUCKER. I think so, but I may be in error about that.

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY] a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER. Under your proposed amendment would not the National Woman's Suffrage Association and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the Antisaloon League and every other organization that is spending money to beat particular candidates for Congress in particular places be obliged to make a return?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Every person, association, corporation, firm, or committee of every character would be obliged to report under the provisions of my amendment if the amount exceeded $50.

Mr. GARDNER. And they would have to report as to the primary as well as to the election?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, is the amendment withdrawn?

Mr. STAFFORD. No. It is going to be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KELLEY].

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 17.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 8, by striking out of line 23 all after the word "part" down to and including the word "known," at the end of line 25.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the bill provides, after making provision for the filing of the expenses, which is the present law, an addition to the present law by saying that the candidate shall "deliver a duplicate of such statement to each of his opponents for such nomination or election if such opponents and their addresses are known." [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, there may be some good reason for that, but I confess I do not see what good public purpose can be served by requiring a candidate for Congress or for the Senate to go chasing around the country hunting up his opponent to file a duplicate of his election expenses with him. If he files it here under oath, files an official statement, his opponent can get it here. I do not know that it is particularly objectionable, but I do not see what good public purpose can possibly be served by it.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, judging from the gentleman's glance at me, he wants me to reply to him if I can. I always make an effort to reply to questions asked by the gentleman with more or less forebodings and misgivings. I think when the gentleman read the language of the bill to which his amendment relates a sort of merriment passed over the House—merriment which I know the gentleman did not intend to provoke. At least some gentlemen looked as if the language was not only unwise, but ridiculous.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I will say that I was probably the one who laughed; but the emphasis was placed by my friend from Tennessee on the words "opponents, if known." I have always tried to know my opponents. [Laughter.]

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, let me say to the members of the committee present that this language was not inserted in the bill inadvertently. In my judgment there is a good reason for its insertion and its retention. The language, of which the first criticism produced a laugh, is "if his opponent is known." That language was inserted in the second publication or printing of the bill because of the fact that gentlemen from the great cities, and particularly from New York, numbers of them, said: "To require us to deliver a duplicate of our expense accounts to our opponent might require of us something that we are wholly unable to do, because sometimes it happens that we do not know who is our opponent, nor do we know his address." They explained that—under the election laws of some of the States, at least—places on the ticket may be filled so recently before election that ever a gentleman of the social habits of my friend from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON] might not be able to become acquainted with some distinguished citizen, whom he did not happen to know, who might be chosen by a political party as his opponent. For that reason we wrote those words into the bill.

Mr. COX. I think that is one of the most important provisions in the bill. This question has occurred to me: What would the gentleman think later on or now of requiring these expense accounts to be published by each Member of Congress?

Mr. RUCKER. I will answer that in a minute, if the gentleman will bear with me. But I may say to you, gentlemen—and I crave your indulgence if I weary you—this is one of the essentially important features of this bill. What is the thought? Publicity. Oh, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] asks, "What reason is there for it?" I will tell you the reason. We do not seek to require the idle performance of merely giving to my opponent, as a compliment to him or to gratify any curiosity on his part, a copy of the sworn statement that I am required to make and file, but it is for the purpose of doing well the very purpose sought to be obtained by the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. TAGGART rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUCKER. One at a time. I will yield to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] first.

Mr. McKELLAR. I want to ask the gentleman a question. I notice that the bill provides——

Mr. RUCKER. I hope the gentleman will not divert me from the particular point now being discussed.

Mr. McKELLAR. No. I notice that the bill provides simply that the statement shall be given to the opponent of the candidate. Would it not be very much better and very much more to the point and very much more in favor of publicity to have it published in the local paper rather than give it to your opponent? If you have to give it to your opponent, and your opponent is a pretty smooth citizen, he may avoid service of process on him, and that would raise a number of questions.

Mr. RUCKER. The gentleman from Indiana asked me substantially that question a minute ago, and I hope I may answer both gentlemen together. I thought that out very carefully, and I realize how much easier it would be and how much better it would sound if we should say "published in a newspaper" But what paper? In the town of his residence? Suppose there is no paper in that town? Then in the one nearest to his residence? That injects the question of a mathematical calculation—how far is it to that town, or which is the nearest town? And, again, if you say it must be published in a paper, we have no power in the world over newspapers to compel them to publish it. But should we compel the candidate to put it in a paper, then at once he is at the mercy of every newspaper man who wants to prey on a candidate for Congress. These things were all considered. And I will say to the gentleman that if it could be done without inflicting a burden on the candidate, I would gladly substitute publication in the paper for delivery of a copy to the opposing candidate.

Mr. McKELLAR. If that be the case, why not provide that it be mailed to him rather than given to him?

Mr. RUCKER. Further on the bill does provide that. I knew I would have the gentleman's support of every feature of this bill in a minute. Further on we do provide that he may mail a copy, just as the gentleman from California and the gentleman from Maine mail their statements to the Clerk of this House, by registering it, addressed to the candidate at his residence, if his residence is known. So that is all covered. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee I have tried, and the committee has tried diligently, all of us, to work out a solution of this question which would be in harmony with public sentiment and which would give real effect to the law.

Now, let me say, in answer to the question, Why deliver a copy to the opposing candidate? Obviously it is for the reason that we want to give real publicity. Mark you, a statement delivered to your opponent in the primary would be to your Democratic opponent for the nomination or your Republican opponent for the nomination, as the case might be. At the general election your candidate would be the candidate of the opposite political party or parties.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUCKER. I shall have to ask the indulgence of the committee for two or three minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HOUSTON). The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RUCKER. This law would require that both in the primary for the nomination and in the general election a duplicate of the statement required by existing law to be filed with the Clerk of this House shall be served on your opponent, served in the same way that it is now filed—that is, by sending it through the mail. Now, the obvious purpose is to give publicity in the congressional district, and, hence, to the people who are directly concerned. The people of the congressional district are the only people who are concerned, except very remotely, in what occurs in that district. I know I will give no offense when I say that the people of the United States have very little concern as to the character of campaign carried on in the ninth district of the State of Missouri, so ably represented by the Speaker of this House. The people there, in his district, are the people who are most vitally concerned.

It is only in the remotest degree that frauds or wrongs perpetrated in some separate district affect the entire body politic, but they may seriously affect the well-being, the order, the morality, the integrity, the citizenship of the district in which the acts are done. Hence as a way to give publicity to every man who is directly concerned, we wrote into this bill the provision that you shall file your statement with the Clerk of the House and make a duplicate of it and mail it to your adversary, because if in that statement there appears something which is wrong, or if the statement hides and fails to reveal things which one's opponent may have knowledge of, then he can go on the stump armed and equipped with the sworn statement and show the voters how the candidate has ignored the law, violated his duty, and attempted to deceive them with reference to his expenditures; or if the statement shows the commission of wrong it can be published and shown to the people. If he wants to go into the columns of the newspapers and cause publicity in every county in the district he can do so.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that every gentleman here is in favor of publicity, in favor of honest dealings in elections, in favor of purity and honesty in the campaign, and therefore I hope that no gentleman will oppose this provision or vote to strike it out. I am convinced, after careful and thoughtful consideration, that it adds very much to the value of his measure, which is a great piece of legislation, which is ultimately designed to open up the way and blaze the pathway which will lead to corresponding legislation in the States, and will hasten the time when the ballot box of our country will be pure, when the ballots cast will represent the untrammeled will of the voter and will be counted as cast, and when men sitting on this floor will occupy seats free from stain or tarnish. [Applause.]

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I think the provision, however it got into the bill, is pernicious and can be made the vehicle of more petty annoyance, more backbiting, more misrepresentation, more miserable, contemptible conduct, than can be overcome by all the good contained in other provisions of the bill. It creates the opportunity for an evil-minded person to do positive harm.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. The statement that this calls for would require an exact duplicate of the one that is to be filed with the Clerk of the House. Can this become a more vicious vehicle for wrong and corruption than the statement filed with the Clerk?

Mr. MILLER. I am going to tell the gentleman why I think it will be. It is not the statement, but the way in which it is required that the statement shall be made and furnished to the opposing candidate, and the time when it is to be thus furnished. Let me proceed and develop what I have in mind. I think we should have in a corrupt-practice act everything that is essential for the purity of elections, both primary and general. We should safeguard the ballot, keep it clean and pure, and provide every essential to that end. But when we depart from that and impose requirements upon the candidate that are likely if not certain to be simply annoying without serving any public good, we are putting a handicap on decent conduct of elections. As a matter of fact, this provision will promote disreputable conduct on the part of some persons, because it gives them the opportunity. Often among one's opponents is some irresponsible character who would seize this statement, pervert and misrepresent its contents in street harangues just before election, and there would be no way of counteracting it.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. If the language in the bill remains it would put the candidate in Minnesota or Missouri on all fours with the candidate in Maryland and Virginia, who can come here in the morning and go back at night. But if they have to come way from a country like Minnesota they can not get them and do not know what is in them.

Mr. MILLER. Let me say that the statement filed by a Member from Minnesota is hardly filed here 24 hours before it is reported back in every daily paper in the State, and there is no objection to that whatever.

Mr. TAGGART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. TAGGART. Would not it be a lowering of the dignity of a candidate for this House or of the Senate, regardless of party, regardless of men, if they were obliged to go personally and place in each other's hands statements of the business that they had conducted in securing a nomination or election, and would it not be wiser to have a provision that the Clerk of the House should furnish upon request of any candidate a certified copy of another candidate's statement?

Mr. MILLER. Now, let me give one or two additional reasons which compels me to make this statement. We are obliged to file two statements in the primary contest, one 10 to 15 days prior and one 15 days after. Where is the average candidate 10 or 15 days prior to election? He is probably out in the field; it may be in a district that covers half the State. He may be remote from a post office; and while it is a simple thing, perhaps, to require him to make out one statement and send it to the Clerk of the House, yet if he has to go to the trouble of duplicating that five, six, or seven times, not having in his possession the addresses of his opponents, perhaps not knowing the names of all of them, you put on him an embarrassing duty that serves no public good.

Mr. RUCKER. I never dreamed of that before.

Mr. REED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. REED. In New Hampshire we have to file a statement with the secretary of state before and after the election, and then another with the National Government with relation to expenditures. If we are compelled to file one with each candidate—and we have on an average five candidates to work against in the campaign—for the election or the primary, it would be necessary to provide some means of taking care of the clerk hire to perform these necessary duties.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I was just about to advert to that. I think the laws of nearly every State require the filing of statements such as that mentioned by the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. REED]. In my own State we have to file one every 15 days.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, most of my time was taken up by other gentlemen, and I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes more.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, under the laws of the State of Minnesota, somewhat similar, no doubt, to the laws of other States, it is now necessary to file a campaign statement every 15 days. At the same time we have to file statements in conformity with the laws of the United States. I want to say that it takes a great deal of bookkeeping, because the two laws do not require the same list of expenditures and receipts. It is not possible to keep two separate books, and although I think there is no particular harm in it, it is very unfortunate, and we have to file statements covering every conceivable thing in order that we may be assured of complying with both laws. If we have to go to the additional labor of serving one of these statements on each of our opponents, that is going to add to the trouble. Opponents whose addresses are not known will surely make a great howl, and it will be a poor excuse in an exciting campaign for one to reply that he did not know his opponent's address. I am going to say to you that I have never yet gone through a general election when I have been certain of the names of all of my opponents. In elections we have candidates representing Socialists, public ownership, Prohibitionists, and other minor parties, as well as candidates of the great parties. It often happens that one never heard of the names of all his opponents until he sees them on the ballot. Give your opponents and the world an opportunity to know what you spent, how you spent it, and where you got it, but do not force a candidate to go around hunting up all his opponents, furnishing them with a list of particulars, with the humble request: Please look over and O. K.

Mr. RUCKER. But the bill expressly provides for conditions like that.

Mr. MILLER. I know, but that simply presents a weakness in the system. What possible good is it going to be to the world or the people of your district for you to hunt your opponents and give each of them an account of the work you have done and what you plan to do during the balance of the campaign? Remember in these statements you have to include every expenditure you have contracted for.

Mr. RUCKER. I will tell you the good it would do. If a law like this had been in force two years ago and had been complied with—that is, the statement had been made—I could have made a gentleman, in the language of the street urchin, look like 30 cents, because I have the habit of speaking pretty plainly. I could have shown that the statement was absolutely and unconditionally false, as I found it out afterwards to be, but the election was over, and, of course, I had no interest in giving it publicity then. But I say now that one reason I wanted him was because I know at some time, in some place, men do seek congressional office who are unworthy of it and who will falsify to facts, even though the community knows they are false.

Mr. MILLER. Even if that were true, a false statement like that very properly should be and could be reviewed by this House or by a court of justice.

Mr. RUCKER. But you will not ever get any such false statement of a man filed from Missouri, because Missourians never send such a man here.

Mr. MILLER. I am very glad to know that.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MILLER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the gentleman think, if we want to have absolute honesty in elections, it would be better to confine expenditures solely to those stated in the proviso; that is, the expense of campaign speakers, the expense of printing and distributing literature, and the cost of newspaper advertisements, and limit it to those things alone, and not spend any money in campaigns for Congress or for the Senate? In that case there would be no necessity of making any such return.

Mr. MILLER. Of course, there are very likely to be a few additional items that it might be necessary to spend if one really got elected. But there is a reason why these accounts should be filed with the Clerk of the House that makes it particularly necessary that they be filed. The House is the sole judge of the election and qualifications of its Members.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to answer a question suggested a moment ago, if the gentleman will yield. I want to say in answer to the gentleman from Tennessee that I have a campaign in progress now, and that seven dollars out of every eight of my expense will be for having a letter written and putting postage stamps upon it.

Mr. MILLER. That is excepted.

Mr. RUCKER. It is excepted here, but not excepted under the laws of Missouri. I have to account for every stamp I use, and I do not expect to use one dollar of other expenses.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me in order that I may reply?

Mr. MILLER. I should be pleased.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say that will have no effect upon the national law.

Mr. RUCKER. But it does.

Mr. McKELLAR. If you want to have purity in elections, why limit the purity to $5,000 or $10,000, as the case may be? Is it not just as dishonest to spend $5,000 or $10,000 improperly to secure election as it is to spend a larger amount?

Mr. RUCKER. The trouble is that gentlemen sometimes discuss this bill who are not familiar fully with it. This law expressly provides that the limit fixed by the State shall be the limit. The limit in Missouri, in my district, is $600 or $625—it will vary a little, according to different years—not one cent more.

Mr. McKELLAR. This would not affect what I am talking about.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time may be extended for three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks that his colleague's time be extended for three minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I am not going to object to this, but I shall object to any further extension of time on the bill.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, as I was stating a moment ago, there is a very exact reason why statements should be filed with the Clerk of the House. The House is the sole judge of elections and qualifications of its Members. The proper officer of the House, therefore, should have in his possession a verified and complete statement of all the receipts and expenditures of men who have been elected or tried to be elected to membership in the House. When that statement is there open to public inspection it seems to me that every practical public service has been performed. If there is any legitimate inquiry to be made respecting the statement, it is there open for public inspection. There are telegraph lines from here to every section of the United States, and there can be as immediate transmission of the information as anybody could possibly want, but if we have to serve those statements on our opponents 10 days before the election, 15 days after the primary, and then when the general election comes, then 10 to 15 days before that, and then 30 days after that, serve them on Tom, Dick, and Harry, we will find annoyance beyond measure. There will be men filing and running in some sort of a way just to get a copy of your campaign contributions and campaign expenditures for the purpose of making you trouble. I say that kind of people ought not to have an instrumentality to use for a purpose which to me is nefarious.

Mr. TAGGART. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. TAGGART. Would not that cause the utmost embarrassment, for instance, in a case like that now presented in the State of Kansas, where there are 12 candidates for Senator? Each report has the same virtue, and it would cause such a multiplicity of reports that it would simply annoy the public, would it not?

Mr. MILLER. I think so.

Mr. TAGGART. If that is true, I will ask the gentleman if it is proper to file in Washington; would it be a great burden to file out in Kansas——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. I have an amendment I am going to offer as a substitute. I am heartily in favor of any possible means that will give publicity to campaign expenditures and to show what is actually being done, but I simply want to call attention to the fact that while I am in favor of the general features of the bill I can readily see that there is a great burden imposed by this part of the bill, which is, no doubt, not thus intended. For instance, in the State of California, I have before me a statement where there are 73 who would be considered practically opponents. What do you consider an opponent? Men at the primary election—those who are nominated? No; it does not mean that. Every man who is voted for at the primary election would be an opponent. There might be 63 or 100 different men who would be opponents at the primary election, and you would have to furnish him not a copy but a duplicate of the statement. In other words, you would have to make and swear to 73 affidavits. Now, I know the chairman does not want that by this amendment if it can be avoided and legitimate publicity can be given. I think that can be done by providing for the filing of this statement with the secretary of state for each of the States in which the election is held. Now, that gives an opportunity for a man to go there and get a copy if he wants.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; I yield.

Mr. RUCKER. That does not give publicity in some places at all, because some places are very far remote from the State capital and difficult of access.

Now, one other question. The question that would arise naturally would be this: What would be the use in filing a statement with the secretary of state, if we have no inherent power in ourselves to compel the secretary of state to receive and keep the document? And I may say we have none.

Mr. RAKER. The State of California is the longest State, north and south, of any in the Union. The papers there publish immediately such statements as these. I make that merely as a suggestion. When we write into this law the provisions of this kind that are to be a part thereof, and begin to recognize that at the primary elections there may be seven or eight or more candidates for the office who have the nominations and three or four independent candidates for the same office, and the further provision that any men or set of men can try to nominate somebody else in the primary election, and every man that gets a vote is a candidate and is therefore an opponent, you will see that your opponents, after the primary election is over, may run from 1 to 500 in number, and then you have simply got to stop your campaigning and hire a corps of assistants and spend a lot of money in sending out 500 or more copies of the statement of your expenses.

Mr. RUCKER. It may be that the suggestion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART] would help the gentleman from California and have the effect of diminishing the number of his opponents. Perhaps there would not then be so many candidates against the gentleman from California or any other gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. The point I am getting at is this: The candidate is not to blame. I am talking about what happens after the primary election. Leave the first part of it out. Any number of citizens at the primary election in my State may say, "Here we are in favor of John Jones for United States Senator," and in one county 1 or possibly 100 men will write his name on the ballot, and in another county another set of men may want John Smith for United States Senator, and they will write his name on the ballot. It must be left so that they can do that. In every county there are from one to five candidates, and each one of those men who receives votes at the primary election is your opponent after the election is over, in the sense that he was voted for at the primary, and duplicate of the statement must be sent each, and you have got to furnish him with a statement. Otherwise you violate this act. You must do that. You would vastly simplify it if you were to simply send a copy to the secretary of state. Then every one of your opponents at the primary election will get it without question, if he or anyone else desires the statement. That is but fair, and at the same time gives full and ample publicity.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment and have it reported.

Mr. RUCKER. I was going to move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the House is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. The chairman of the committee will not object to having this amendment reported and considered pending. I do not care to discuss it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the regular order demanded?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes, sir. I demand the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the gentleman's intention—to sit until 6 o'clock?

Mr. RUCKER. I want to move that the committee rise now.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is another amendment pending, of similar purport.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I have the right to have my amendment reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 8, by striking out of line 23 all after the word "part" down to and including the word "known," at the end of line 25.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOUSTON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8428) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to publicity of contributions and expenditures made for the purpose of influencing the nomination and election of candidates for the offices of Representative and Senator in the Congress of the United States, limiting the amount of campaign expenses, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SELLS, for two weeks, on account of public business.

To Mr. BORCHERS, for 10 days, on account of sickness and important business.

To Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina, for five days, on account of important business.

To Mr. AVIS (on request of Mr. SUTHERLAND), for one week, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. FRANCIS, for two weeks, on account of important business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following telegram and letter, which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

GALLIPOLIS, OHIO, July 2, 1914.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

I am down with typhoid fever, and respectfully request an indefinite leave of absence.

ROBERT M. SWITZER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 2, 1914.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MY DEAR SIR: I desire to be excused until August 4, 1914, that I may return to Oklahoma and prosecute my campaign for the Democratic nomination for Congress from the fifth Oklahoma district.

Very respectfully,

J. B. THOMPSON.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to these requests?

There was no objection.

MINORITY REPORT—STREET RAILWAYS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, to-day the report on the bill H. R. 15191 was filed. Those who entertain minority views have asked 30 days in which to file their views. I ask that their request be granted.

The SPEAKER. The minority of the Committee on the District of Columbia ask 30 days in which to present minority views on the bill H. R. 15191. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. What is the nature of the bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. It is the municipal ownership of street railways in the District of Columbia.

Mr. RAKER. Is not a delay of 30 days an unusual way of defeating a bill?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The friends of the bill are willing to give more time.

Mr. RAKER. Then I am through.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on the general subject of trade and industry in the country.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the general subject of trade and industry in the country. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, the discussion of the bill which has just been under consideration in the committee has taken wide range and drifted far afield. In my remarks thus far this afternoon I have confined myself closely to the merits of the bill under discussion; but since others have thought it proper to submit some general observations on the present industrial situation in the country, I avail myself of this opportunity to present some views of a political nature. It is idle to suggest that business in the United States is flourishing and that our difficulties are merely "psychological." The following statement of our foreign trade from the Steel and Metal Digest shows the hard facts. This condition is not the result of psychology; it is the disastrous effect of a mistaken economic policy which furnishes employment abroad and turns our own workmen into the street.

Foreign trade figures for April show some marked contrasts, exports declining in just about the proportion that imports increased, as compared with April a year ago, or about 18 per cent in each case. The result of ebb and flow was an excess of imports of $10,271,872 in April, the first excess of imports reported since the summer of 1910, in July and August of which imports slightly exceeded exports.

The April returns are compared in the following table with the returns of the same month last year.

	April, 1914.	April, 1913.
Exports	$162,368,852	$199,813,438
Imports	172,640,724	146,194,461
Excess imports	10,271,872
Excess exports		53,618,977

This growing menace of an unfavorable balance of trade with its resultant exportation of gold to settle these unfavorable balances caused by our present policy of buying abroad what ought to be produced at home is attracting editorial comment all over the country. For illustration, the Cincinnati Inquirer, one of the leading Democratic journals of the Nation, recently said in its editorial columns:

[From the Cincinnati Inquirer.]

EXPORTING GOLD AND IMPORTING FOODSTUFFS.

Gold continues to depart from this country. While as yet there is no financial stringency occasioned by its leaving our shores, yet it would make affairs brighter if it remained with us.

Bankers with foreign connections say that selling of securities here by foreign investors who need cash is the principal reason for the gold going out, and they predict that this action will continue to draw from the United States.

Since January 1 the shipments of gold from this country amounted to upward of $37,000,000, and everything points to the shipment of several additional millions before the export ceases.

The large increase in value of our imports in April, accompanied as it was by large decrease in value of our exports as compared with April, 1913, marks a change in financial operations that calls for attention by the Government, as well as by the business men of the country.

One month or two or three of these results will not injure or disturb business, but a series of such increases and fallings off would result, surely, in still greater demands from Europe upon our gold supply.

It is essential to good times in this country that our trade balance abroad be heavily in our favor.

It is not pleasant reading with our productive country, embracing such a range of latitude and climatic conditions favorable for growing foodstuffs to find our exports of such products decreasing and our importations of them rising rapidly in amounts and value.

The first six months of the new tariff, as reported by the Department of Commerce, show these results, and these heavy importations of foodstuffs will undoubtedly call for the cash, the gold of the United States, to pay for them.

The largest increases reported in importations of articles that are used in the food supplies of our people were in beef, corn, wheat, macaroni, fruits, molasses, and edible oils, and it will be recognized by every business man that it would be far better for the United States if the entire supply required for our people's use would be produced on the farms of our own country.

There is no better barometer of business conditions than the activities of the railroads of the country.

The fortnightly bulletin of the American Railway Association shows that on May 15 there was a net surplus of freight cars on the lines of the United States and Canada of 238,642, compared with 228,879 on May 1, an increase of 9,763.

The fortnightly figures are given below, with the returns for other periods figures representing net surplus of idle cars, except where otherwise indicated:

1914:
May 15 (maximum surplus for year)	238,642
May 1	228,879
Apr. 15	212,869
Apr. 1	139,518
Mar. 15 (minimum surplus for year)	124,865
Mar. 1	153,907
Feb. 15	197,052
Feb. 1	209,678
Jan. 15	214,889
Jan. 1	188,850
1913:
Dec. 15 (maximum surplus for year)	101,545
Dec. 1	57,234
Nov. 15	22,052
Nov. 1 (net shortage)	1,842
Oct. 15 (net shortage)	6,048
Oct. 1	10,374
Sept. 15	40,150
Sept. 1	58,306
Aug. 15	54,425
Aug. 1	58,445
July 15	69,405
June 30	63,704
June 14	63,927
May 31	50,908
May 15	50,204
May 1	39,790
Apr. 15	57,498
Apr. 1	57,988
Mar. 15	37,775
Mar. 1	31,381
Feb. 15	22,183
Feb. 1	37,200
Jan. 15	28,439
Jan. 1	17,053

This table tells its own story. Idle cars mean idle men, reduced wages, lessening purchasing power, decreasing sales by merchants, and impending business disasters. We should have in this country such a policy as will fill these cars with commerce, set idle men to work, increase wages, and bring about financial prosperity. In the tariff and other fiscal legislation of the Government the country is demanding less psychology and more common sense. On this interesting subject the Steel and Metal Digest for June, 1914, makes the following lucid statement:

[From the Steel and Metal Digest.]

THE TRADE OUTLOOK.

The depression in business instead of passing away has during the past month become more acute. Closed factories, and in other cases running only half to three-quarter time, with the consequent unemployment to those dependent on their daily earnings to cope with the unchanged high cost of living, and the consequent distress, makes it difficult to-day to recognize the busy and prosperous country of a year ago. Sentiment has become less hopeful each day, enterprise dormant, business sick and despondent.

The business community seems to have lost confidence in our legislators, and in any change for the better until our promised crop brings an improvement in trade, and the adjournment of Congress brings a rest from the daily pressure and disturbance to the heart of the country, which is its business interests. These are the bright spots in the business situation. Congress can not make the rains fall from heaven, nor can it stop the sunshine, thanks to the blessings and overrulings of a merciful Providence. And we also know that Washington, while it may temporarily demoralize the energies and destroy the courage and confidence of the country, it can not do so permanently.

We did not need the profound wisdom of the President to tell us, as he did lately, that fundamentally the country is in a sound condition and that business should at this time be active and the country prosperous. That fact we all know—it is indisputable.

What then is responsible for present conditions? The verdict of our business interests is unanimous. It is the amateurish and theoretical efforts to regulate business and capital along radical lines, and to do it with a rush by those who, from a lack of experience, do not understand the first principles of business, and are therefore puzzled to find that their efforts are causing profound disturbance and depression. The President dismisses our business depression as being "imaginary" and "psychological," and his minister of commerce says it is only a case of "mental mourning." Well might one paraphrase Madam Roland's exclamation and say: "O psychology, what crimes are committed in thy name."

The country is awakening to the seriousness of the industrial situation. Idle men are demanding work and wages; business men are dazed, bewildered, and discouraged as they see their business crumbling before them through influences they are powerless to control except at the ballot box. As the Atlanta Constitution aptly says in a recent editorial:

It is unfair to business to expose it at this time to further radical operations. The patient has lost blood. Let him recuperate.

I desire to add here one letter out of the large number I have received expressing the attitude of business men on the present situation. This letter speaks for itself and is as follows:

CINCINNATI, OHIO, June 18, 1914.

Hon. FRANK B. WILLIS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We ask you, as one of our Representatives in Congress from the State of Ohio, to use your utmost efforts to bring about a speedy adjournment.

All the elements of prosperity are with the country except the administration. We should now be on the high wave of prosperity as to have the glad promise of abundant crops and plenty of money to use in business enterprises.

Having a prospect of a let-up in this senseless campaign of destruction, good judgment would prompt the great wheels of commerce and constructive business to go ahead at full speed instead of having factories running short time, closing down or failing entirely, as at present, but unless speedy action is taken to adjourn Congress, which has now been in session for over a year and a half, the Nation will be in the throes of the greatest crisis in its history.

The Nation does not need further legislation, but time to recover from the awful setback given the general industries.

We hope you will realize the importance of this appeal and cooperate to obtain the necessary action.

Yours, very truly,

THE ACME MACHINE TOOL CO.
A. J. JONES.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 157. Joint resolution requesting the President of the United States to invite foreign Governments to participate in the International Congress on Education; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, July 3, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and survey of Beaufort Harbor, N. C., with a view to providing a suitable turning basin and anchorage area in front of the town of Beaufort (H. Doc. No. 1108); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustration.

2. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and survey of Broadkill River, Del. (H. Doc. No. 1109); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed, with illustration.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting 64 illustrations to accompany Index to Annual Reports of the Chief of Engineers, printed in House Document No. 740, Sixty-third Congress, second session; illustrations ordered printed as part of House Document No. 740 and referred to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. CROSSER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15191) to provide for the acquisition, ownership, and operation by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia of all the street railroads located in the District of Columbia, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 917), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. COADY, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (S. 23) for the relief of Clara Dougherty, Ernest Kubel, and Josephine Taylor, owners of lot No. 13; of Ernest Kubel, owner of lot No. 41; and of Mary Meder, owner of the south 17.10 feet front by the full depth thereof of lot No. 14, all of said property in square No. 724, in Washington, D. C., with regard to assessment and payment for damages on account of change of grade due to the construction of Union Station, in said District, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 918), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GARDNER: A bill (H. R. 17610) to prohibit interstate and foreign commerce in lobster meat and in undersized or egg-bearing lobsters; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. CARY: A bill (H. R. 17611) to regulate the interstate transportation of immature calves; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, a bill (H. R. 17612) to prohibit the slaughter, sale, purchase, shipment, and transportation through interstate commerce of calves and cows under certain conditions; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. CURRY: A bill (H. R. 17613) authorizing the Commissioner of Navigation to cause the bark Simla to be registered as a vessel of the United States; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado: A bill (H. R. 17614) to establish the Rocky Mountain National Park in the State of Colorado, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. FLOOD of Virginia: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 292) authorizing the President to accept an invitation to participate in an exposition to be held in the city of Panama, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. GARDNER: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 293) for the relief of destitute sufferers from the conflagration at Salem, Mass.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. KEY of Ohio: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 294) providing for payment of surgeons making examination at claimant's home in connection with claim pending in the Bureau of Pensions; to the Committee on Pensions.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALLEN: A bill (H. R. 17615) granting an increase of pension to Philomina Heintz; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GILMORE: A bill (H. R. 17616) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Perkins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas: A bill (H. R. 17617) granting an increase of pension to Thomas W. Oastler; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Connecticut: A bill (H. R. 17618) granting an increase of pension to Rose B. Butler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. POST: A bill (H. R. 17619) granting an increase of pension to Henry C. Plummer; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHREVE: A bill (H. R. 17620) granting a pension to Margaret E. Hoppock; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STEPHENS of California: A bill (H. R. 17621) to authorize the sale and issuance of patent for certain land to William G. Kerckhoff; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. TALCOTT of New York: A bill (H. R. 17622) granting a pension to James Sullivan; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. VARE: A bill (H. R. 17623) for the relief of Richard Sheehan; to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of the Berkeley (Cal.) Chamber of Commerce, favoring passage of a bill providing for the payment of railroads for handling mails; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also (by request), resolution signed by the pastor of the Adams County Christian Endeavor Union, at Arendtsville, Pa., protesting against the practice of polygamy in the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also (by request), petition of Cigar Makers' Union, No. 144, of New York City, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

Also (by request), petition of 50 voting citizens of Gilroy, Cal., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. BORCHERS: Petition of sundry citizens of Rantoul, Ill., favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. BRUCKNER: Petition of Helen A. Taylor, of Ellis Island, N. Y., favoring civil-service retirement bill; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

Also, petition of the directors of the Washington Board of Trade, the Chamber of Commerce, and the Retail Merchants Association favoring half-and-half plan of taxation for the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, petition of the board of governors of the Board of Trade, of Tampa, Fla., favoring national drainage by Federal Government; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. BURKE of South Dakota: Letters from E. G. Strong, Athol; Perry Clifford, Cresbard; Ed. M. Newcomb, Woonsocket; and Olin V. Dunn, Sisseton, all in the State of South Dakota, urging passage of amendment to the Constitution providing national prohibition legislation; to the Committee on Rules.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, July 3, 1914.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, God of our fathers, we worship Thee. Thy name is supreme in our thought and we trust Thy name is supreme in our affection. Thou hast given to us a great Nation. Thou hast breathed into it the spirit of love for our country. That which we enjoy, that which we hold sacred in our national life, is the product of Thy hand. By Thy grace Thy servants have been enabled to erect a temple to freedom and by Thy power it has been maintained through the years.

Now we pray that Thy guidance may be with those who still direct the affairs of this great land, that Thy name may be written in every law, that Thy will may be executed by all the people. Hear us in our prayer. Bless us according to the measure of Thy grace, in Christ Jesus. We ask in His sacred name. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETROLEUM DIVISION, BUREAU OF MINES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation in the sum of $50,000 for inquiries and investigations of petroleum and natural gas under the Bureau of Mines for the service of the fiscal year 1915, etc., which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Manzano, N. Mex., remonstrating against the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating beverages, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I present a petition signed by citizens of Denver, Colo., which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL AMERICAN WOMAN SUFFRAGE ASSOCIATION.

We, the citizens of State of Colorado, have assembled to-day to voice our demands that women, as citizens of the United States, be accorded the full right of such citizenship. We congratulate the 4,000,000 women voters who have won their right to the ballot in 10 States, and confidently expect to see 5 more States under the franchise banner after the November elections.

We hereby declare that suffrage for women has become a national as well as a local issue, and we urge our Senators and Representatives in Congress to enact Federal legislation which will insure to women political equal rights with men.

We therefore ask the Congress of the United States to proceed without delay, in the most feasible and practical manner, to remove the barriers which prevent American women from the exercise of full franchise, and to make our country not a Government in which half the people are denied the right of participation, but in truth and reality a democracy.

The above and foregoing is a true and correct copy of a resolution passed at a mass meeting held at Capital Building, Denver, Colo., this 2d day of May, 1914.

HARRIET G. R. WRIGHT,
Presiding Officer, C. E. S. Association.
DORA PHELPS BUELL,
National Executive Committee, A. W. S. A.

Attest:

BESSIE THOMPSON,
Secretary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Ohio, praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and importation of intoxicating beverages, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Ohio, praying for the enactment of legislation to further restrict immigration, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BURTON. I present resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce and Merchants' Exchange of Cincinnati, Ohio; of the Commercial Club of Springfield, Ohio; and of the Chamber of Commerce of Columbus, Ohio, favoring the creation of a trade commission and the postponement of further trust legislation until the next session of Congress. I ask that the resolutions may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CINCINNATI CHAMBER OF COMMERCE AND MERCHANTS' EXCHANGE,
Cincinnati, June 26, 1914.

Whereas, in the opinion of the board of directors of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, the Clayton and Newlands bills, known as the antitrust measures, now pending in Congress, will seriously affect many established legitimate business customs and necessitate radical changes in methods that have been in vogue for many years; and

Whereas such changes should be made only after the most careful investigation and research in order that improper practices may be eliminated without working hardship upon those who have conducted their business along proper lines; and

Whereas, although recognizing the good intent of the administration and Congress, we believe that sufficient time has not been given to these matters to make the exhaustive survey necessary for the enactment of legislation which will eliminate said abuses without seriously affecting and disorganizing the general business interests of the country: Therefore be it

Resolved by the board of directors of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, That we urge upon the President and the Members of Congress that all further action on pending antitrust legislation be deferred until the next session of Congress; and be it further

Resolved, That we recommend that these questions be referred to the trade commission about to be established or some other competent body empowered to gather data that will be instructive to the next session of Congress in preparing constructive legislation in aid to the Sherman law; and be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the President of the United States, the Senators from Ohio, and the representatives from Hamilton County; and be it further

Resolved, That the provisions of the Clayton bill eliminating from its provisions agricultural, labor, and other organizations is an unwise feature of class legislation which will affect injuriously the interest of both capital and labor and of producers, distributors, and consumers by arraying these interests against each other, thereby emphasizing the differences which already exist.

Resolution adopted by the officers and directors of the Springfield Commercial Club, Springfield, Ohio, June 8, 1914.

In spite of the fact that, while crop conditions are unprecedentedly promising and money plentiful throughout the country, the general business depression of the past several months continues to exist, with no sign of abatement, in addition to there being upward of 1,000,000 workmen out of employment throughout the country; and

Furthermore, believing that the unsatisfactory conditions of industry are largely due to the resultant uncertainty and alarm caused by the prospective additional legislation by Congress, directly affecting business: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we favor the prompt creation by Congress of an interstate trade commission, to be appointed by the President, but are irrevocably opposed to any legislation that at all discriminates against any of the various elements comprising industry.

Resolved, That aside from the creation and appointment of the interstate trade commission we believe that any additional legislation affecting business should be deferred until the business men of the country have had sufficient time to make the necessary readjustments incidental to the new tariff law and the new currency measure, besides becoming fully acquainted with the character of some of the proposed business legislation, regarding which they are now ignorant.

Resolved, That we believe there should be an assurance from Congress and the administration that additional legislation affecting business should await the creation and appointment of such interstate trade commission, which commission should be empowered to make the necessary investigation, so as to submit to the President later on a definite recommendation regarding any further corrective legislation supplemental to the Sherman Act that may be necessary.

Resolved, That we believe such an assurance from Congress and the administration would at this time tend to materially stimulate business, restore prosperity, and provide employment for labor generally throughout the country.

To the Board of Directors of the Columbus Chamber of Commerce.

GENTLEMEN: Your committee, to which was referred referendum No. 8 of Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America, containing the report of the special committee of that body on trust legislation pending in Congress, and relative to proposals for regulating business practices, respectfully report:

We have gone over with care and in detail the report of the special committee on trust legislation of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, set out in full in referendum No. 8. We report and recommend—

First. That this chamber of commerce vote "yes" upon the first recommendation of the special committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce, which recommendation is as follows:

"The committee recommends that there should be no attempt by statute to forbid discrimination in prices of commodities."

Second. We recommend that this chamber of commerce vote "yes" upon the second recommendation of the special committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce, which recommendation is as follows:

"The committee recommends that a proposal to compel persons controlling the product of mines to sell to all applicants 'who may be responsible' is wrong in principal and unworkable in practice."

Third. We recommend that this chamber of commerce vote "yes" upon the third recommendation of the special committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce, which recommendation is as follows:

"The committee recommends that there should not be statutory prohibition of conditions accompanying sales and leases to the effect that buyers or lessees can not handle or use the products of competitors."

Fourth. We recommend that this chamber of commerce vote "yes" upon the fourth recommendation of the special committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce, which recommendation is as follows:

"The committee recommends that the final decree in an equity suit brought by the Government, which establishes the existence or the nonexistence of a restraint of trade or of a monopoly, should be conclusive evidence as to the same general fact in private actions brought against the same defendants under the antitrust laws."

Fifth. We recommend that this chamber of commerce vote "yes" upon the fifth recommendation of the special committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce, which recommendation is as follows:

"The committee recommends that interlocking of directors among competitive business corporations, including railroad corporations, should be prohibited regardless of the size of the corporation, if elimination of competition among the corporations in question would constitute a violation of the Sherman Act."

Sixth. We recommend that this chamber of commerce vote "yes" upon the sixth recommendation of the special committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce, which recommendation is as follows:

"The committee recommends that interlocking of officers and directors between railroads and industrial businesses with which they transact a substantial volume of business—for example, in the relation of buyer and seller—should be prohibited except in such instances as the Interstate Commerce Commission may determine are not detrimental to the public interests."

Seventh. We recommend that this chamber of commerce vote "yes" upon the alternative proposal (C), recommended by the special committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce, which recommendation is as follows:

"(C) Should there be legislation in a form which would not pronounce illegal existing situations, but would authorize the Interstate Commerce Commission upon finding a detriment to the public interest in any interlocking in order, that it be terminated?"

Eighth. We recommend that this chamber of commerce vote "yes" upon the alternative proposal (A), recommended by the special committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce, which recommendation is as follows:

"(A) Should the problem involved in preventing concentration of credit be referred for investigation and recommendation to the Federal Reserve Board or some other competent body?"

Ninth. We recommend that this chamber of commerce vote "yes" upon the ninth recommendation of the special committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce, which recommendation is as follows:

"The committee recommends that corporate ownership of stock directly or indirectly of competitor corporations should be prohibited if elimination of competition among the corporations in question would constitute a violation of the Sherman Act, except in such instances as the interstate trade commission—or the interstate trade commission in the case of railroads—may determine are not detrimental to the public interest."

Tenth. We recommend that this chamber of commerce vote "yes" upon the tenth recommendation of the special committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce, which recommendation is as follows:

"The committee recommends that there should not be an attempt to regulate the shares of stock issued by corporations engaged in interstate commerce."

We feel that the special committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce, which has investigated the various trust measures now pending in Congress, has given to their consideration the best thought possible, and that their conclusions have been arrived at after a most exhaustive examination of the subject, and that their conclusions are based upon an honest desire to assist Congress in enacting such legislation, and such only, as will benefit the business interests of the country and at the same time protect and safeguard the interests of the people as a whole. The special committee in charge of the investigation, which has made the report, is composed of some of the best business men of the United States aided by able counsel.

In the recommendations of this committee so far there has appeared no effort to obstruct any legislation which is fair and which will inure to the best interests of all.

We think it not inappropriate to urge upon your board the duty of getting a full expression from the members of the chamber of commerce upon these measures, and of urging upon the members the necessity of carefully considering not only the recommendations themselves but the legislation now proposed. That legislation, if enacted in its present form will, in our judgment, injure all legitimate business enterprises, will complicate unnecessarily all methods of doing business, will result in endless litigation in order to determine what is and what is not legal under the proposed legislation, and will injure and not benefit the whole people.

We feel, further, that it is the duty of this chamber of commerce and of all other similar bodies in the United States to use all legitimate effort to impress the Representatives and Senators in Congress with the fact that legislation such as is now proposed, particularly the Clayton bill, must ultimately result in great commercial and personal loss.

Respectfully submitted.

S. P. BUSH.
T. P. LINN.
SIMON LAZARUS.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 5847. A bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to convey to the city of Bozeman, Mont., certain land for alley purposes (Rept. No. 643); and

H. R. 7327. A bill for the relief of Charles L. Hill (Rept. No. 641).

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 4830) authorizing Ponca City, Okla., and the board of education of said city to convey certain lands, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 642) thereon.

INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. By direction of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report favorably without amendment Senate resolution 407, and I ask for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 407) reported by Mr. STONE from the Committee on Foreign Relations June 27, 1914, is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered to investigate and ascertain from whom information of any business transacted before said committee in executive session relating to international affairs is given out; and to prosecute said investigation said committee is hereby authorized and empowered to send for persons and papers, to issue subpœnas, to administer oaths, and to employ stenographers to take testimony at not exceeding $1 per printed page; the expenses of said investigation to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate on warrants signed by the chairman of said committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Mississippi—my attention was diverted, and I did not hear just what the resolution was—is that the resolution relating to an investigation by the Foreign Relations Committee?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I notice the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] is not present. The other day when he was compelled to be absent he requested that, if the resolution was reported, I should ask that it go over one day, so that he could be present when it was considered. Would the Senator from Mississippi have any objection to letting the resolution go over?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I shall consent to that.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not wish to object to the consideration of the resolution, and I do not think the Senator from Idaho desires to do so; but he desires to be here when the resolution is taken up. He has, I think, an amendment which he desires to suggest to the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As I understand, the Senator from Idaho requested the Senator from Nebraska to ask that the resolution go over one day if it were reported?

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator from Idaho did not do so to-day, but the day before yesterday, when the Senator from Idaho was sick and expected the resolution to be reported, he asked me to make that request.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Under the circumsances I think the Senator from Idaho would desire that the Senator from Nebraska again make the same request. I will therefore withdraw the request for the immediate consideration of the resolution and let it go to the calendar.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not asking that the resolution go to the calendar. That might delay it indefinitely.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be considered to-morrow morning, so that we may have no trouble about getting it up—that it go over for one day and be considered to-morrow morning.

Mr. SMOOT. That would require a call of the Senate, and I think——

Mr. NORRIS. It would not require a call of the Senate to have the resolution go over for one day.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let it go over without prejudice.

Mr. NORRIS. Just a minute and I will be through. I suggest to the Senator that he withhold reporting the resolution to-day and report it to-morrow. The only thing that can be done now is to consider the resolution or let it go to the calendar.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I withdraw the report.

AFFAIRS IN NICARAGUA.

Mr. WILLIAMS. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report back favorably with an amendment in the nature of a substitute Senate resolution 396, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the resolution reported by the Senator from Mississippi will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The amendment reported by the committee is to strike out the preamble and the resolution and in lieu thereof to insert:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations, or any subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized and directed to inquire into any or all transactions affecting the proposed treaty between the Governments of the United States and the Republic of Nicaragua; and it is hereby authorized to take testimony wherever necessary, send for persons and papers, issue subpœnas, and administer oaths, and the expenses incurred thereby shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, upon the approval of the chairman of said Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I think that is the resolution to which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] had reference.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think not. I think the one to which the Senator had reference was not the resolution directing the Committee on Foreign Relations to make an investigation in connection with the Nicaraguan treaty, but in connection with the divulging of what had happened in its executive sessions. I think that is the case, unless the Senator from Nebraska knows better.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not exactly certain. There were two resolutions, and, as I stated, I did not hear the first resolution read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The first resolution was a resolution offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE] for an investigation to endeavor to ascertain how the secrets of the committee got out. That is the resolution, the report on which I withdrew a moment ago.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that is the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The other resolution is the resolution offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] in connection with our investigation of the conditions of the Nicaraguan Republic.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

A bill and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 6031) authorizing the Board of Trade of Texarkana, Ark.-Tex., to construct a bridge across Sulphur River at or near Paces Ferry, between the counties of Bowie and Cass, in the State of Texas; to the Committee on Commerce.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 168) directing the Commissioner of Labor to employ temporary assistance to carry out a Senate resolution; to the Committee on Appropriations.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. STERLING. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the pending trade commission bill, which I ask may be read.

There being no objection, the amendment was read, ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

After line 22, on page 21, insert the following:

"And jurisdiction for the enforcement of any order so issued by said commission restraining and prohibiting the use of any such unfair method of competition is hereby conferred upon the district courts of the United States. Such district courts shall also have jurisdiction of suits to enjoin, set aside, annul, or suspend any order of said commission restraining or prohibiting the use of any method of competition as unfair: Provided, That the pendency of such suit shall not of itself stay or suspend the operation of such order of the commission, but said court, in its discretion, may restrain or suspend in whole or in part the operation of such order pending the final hearing and determination of the suit: Provided further, That the procedure in said district courts shall be the same, as near as may be, as the procedure heretofore prevailing in cases in the commerce court and arising out of the orders made by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that the venue of any suit hereafter brought to enforce, suspend, or set aside in whole or in part any order of said commission restraining or prohibiting the use of any particular method of competition as unfair shall be in the judicial district wherein is the residence of the party or any of the parties upon whose application or petition the order was made or in the district wherein the method or methods complained of as constituting unfair competition are used or employed."

MODERN SOCIAL INDUSTRIAL DISORDERS (S. DOC. NO. 531).

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have a copy of an address delivered at the University of Georgia a few days ago by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] on "Modern social industrial disorders." It is a very interesting and valuable address, and I ask that it may be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

REVISION OF LAWS IN JUDICIAL PROCEDURE.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, on June 18 there came from the House the bill (H. R. 15578) to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary, which had passed the House on the previous day. The RECORD shows that the bill was referred to the Joint Committee on the Revision of the Laws of the United States. I understand, as a matter fact, that there is no longer such a committee. There was a committee of that kind created some years ago, and it revised the laws relating to crimes and the substantive laws relating to the judiciary. They have taken form in the criminal code and the judicial code.

The bill which has passed the House relates to the procedure. It is a very important bill. It is a bill which ought to be dealt with and disposed of during this Congress, although it is a work that ought not to be hurried. It either ought to be referred to the Judiciary Committee or there ought to be created a Committee on the Revision of the Laws. We did have such a committee years ago—that is, a Senate Committee on the Revision of the Laws—but that committee is no longer in existence. The Senate provided for its part of the Joint Committee on the Revision of the Laws, but the House never appointed their members; so that, as I understand, the joint committee is not in existence. I do not see the chairman of the Judiciary Committee present. I should have liked to have had his attention to the matter.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Utah is right in stating that we formerly had a Senate Committee on the Revision of the Laws, with regular employees. We also had a joint committee. We provided for quite a large amount of money to be expended from the contingent fund by the House and Senate, and that committee performed the duties to which the Senator has referred; but on the assembling, I think, of the last Congress the House refused to provide for their part of the committee, and so the matter was dropped. I am not certain whether the majority party in naming their committees made any provision for such a committee. If they did so, I have heard nothing of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a Senate committee of that kind—the Committee on the Revision of the Laws—composed of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT].

Mr. WARREN. That is probably a revival of the old Senate committee of which the Senator from Utah is himself a member.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But there are no House members of the committee; so that the joint committee has not been revived.

Mr. President, I move that House bill 15578 be recalled from the Joint Committee on the Revision of the Laws and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah moves that the Committee on the Revision of the Laws be discharged from the further consideration of the bill to which he has referred, and that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Without objection, that will be done.

THE SALEM RELIEF FUND (S. DOC. NO. 530).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The governor of Massachusetts has sent me the following telegram:

"The Salem relief fund is increasing slowly. The expense of rehabilitation will be enormous, as 3,000 families are homeless and without work. If the National Government could appropriate $200,000, it would assist greatly. I am informed that the action of the National Government at the time of the San Francisco disaster furnished a precedent. Can anything in the way of substantial contribution from the National Government be obtained?"

In view of the great number of homeless and destitute in Salem, I very earnestly urge the immediate appropriation by the Congress of $200,000, as requested by the governor, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 3, 1914.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

Mr. SMOOT obtained the floor.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator has obtained recognition. I desire to take the floor in my own right.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, yesterday afternoon after I had given notice that I would send for the Monthly Summary of Commerce and Finance, issued by the Department of Commerce, for the months of March and April, 1914, I did so, and I have made an examination of the figures referred to by the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will pardon me, to what item is he referring?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not yet referred to any particular item, but I will refer to all of them in a moment.

Mr. President, the first time that I called the importations and exportations to the attention of the Senate was in a speech delivered by me on May 20, 1914, referring particularly to importations and exportations and comparing the month of April, 1914, with the corresponding month of the year 1913. Incidentally I referred also to a line of manufactured and partly manufactured articles, showing the amount of importations for March, 1913, and their value, and also the amount and value of the importations for March, 1914. I have carefully checked those figures over, Mr. President, and I find every single one of them, of the many that were quoted, exactly as reported in the Monthly Summary of Commerce and Finance for the month of March. In my statement I said:

> The returns of the Department of Commerce show that the merchandise exports for April of this year amounted to $162,368,852, as compared with $199,813,438 for the corresponding month of last year under a protective tariff. This is, as I stated, a loss in exports of $37,434,586 in a single month.
> The imports in April of this year were $172,640,724, as compared with $146,194,461 in April of last year, or a gain in imports for the month of $26,446,263. Taking the imports and exports together they show a total loss in money to the commerce of the United States of $63,880,849 in one month, or at the rate of $766,570,148 annually.

I take it for granted that the Senator from North Carolina does not dispute those figures. Again, I have here the Summary of Commerce and Finance, showing that every figure I quoted on May 20 is exactly in accordance with the figures reported from the Department of Commerce by its Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, from what document does the Senator read? I refer to the one he has in his hand.

Mr. SMOOT. That is a copy of the remarks I made on May 20. I could read exactly the same figures from the RECORD of that date, but I thought I could hold this copy much easier than the RECORD.

I now come to the speech that was made just one month afterwards, on June 20.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. Under a proposition to make a correction in the RECORD the Senator from Utah is proceeding to elaborate the subject of importations and exportations and the tariff question generally; and we are going to lose two hours again this morning, just as we did yesterday, with the business of the Senate making no progress whatever. I think I shall feel obliged to call for the regular order.

Mr. SMOOT. Yesterday I gave notice that I would answer the figures referred to by the Senator from North Carolina, and I will say——

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the regular order is called for, the notice does not amount to anything.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I hope——

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly aware that the notice does not amount to anything, and I am perfectly aware that the Senator from Florida can call for the regular order, and he may do so if he sees fit.

Mr. SIMMONS. I hope the Senator from Florida will permit the Senator from Utah to make the corrections he desires to make. Up to this time the Senator has been discussing a speech that I did not refer to yesterday; but I understand he is now about to begin to discuss the speech and the statements to which I referred on yesterday, with a view to making some corrections.

Mr. SMOOT. That is my only intention.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I have no objection whatever to the Senator making corrections, and I do not want to insist upon the regular order if this matter is going to take any reasonable length of time. I do not know how long the Senator means to discuss it, but it seems to me it ought not to take half an hour to make a correction in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that it is not going to take me very long.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will withhold the point of order for the present.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in his speech of yesterday the Senator from North Carolina referred to an error that was made in my speech of June 20 under the heading of "Lace and lace articles," found on page 889 of the Monthly Summary of Commerce and Finance of the United States. According to that report, the imports of lace and lace articles for the month of April, 1913, were $1,027,188, as quoted by me. For April, 1914, the imports were $1,178,322, or an increase of $151,134; but in preparing the summary the person writing it upon the typewriter copied the wrong line, and took the total of $2,096,036, which made a difference of $917,417 as used in my speech. There was no intention whatever of using the wrong figures. It was simply an error through copying the total, including veils and veilings.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator will bear me out in the statement that that is all I said on yesterday.

Mr. SMOOT. The next item was "Silk and manufactures of silk," found on page 896 of the same report. This is what happended in that case: There were imported for April, 1913, manufactures of silk amounting to $2,008,567, and there were importations of artificial silk of $204,374, or a total of $2,212,941, as given in the statement made by me, while, on the other hand, in April, 1914, there were importations of silk manufactures of $2,425,989, and of artificial silk of $414,010, or a total of $2,839,999. The person summarizing the statement added the two together in 1913, and in 1914 he added the two particular items together, but he also included the item just above the total manufacture of unmanufactured silk, which was $8,254,794.

I want to say that in the case of unmanufactured silks for April, 1914, the importations were $8,254,794, and for April, 1913, they were $6,198,634, or an increase of unmanufactured silks of $2,056,164.

Taking into consideration those two errors to which the Senator called attention on yesterday, the total increase would be reduced from 129 per cent to 77 per cent on the whole of the items named. I want also to say to the Senator that in that case I particularly called attention to the imports and the exports. That was what I was discussing, and that was what I desired to call the attention of the country. If the Senator will refer to that speech, he will find that I stated as follows:

> Mr. President, a month ago to-day I called the attention of the Senate to the imports and exports for the month of April, 1914. I desire now to occupy about five minutes of the time of the Senate in calling attention to the imports and exports for the month of May, 1914.
> The total imports for May, 1914, were $163,637,386. For May, 1913, they were $133,723,713, or an increase of importations for the month of May, 1914, over the month of May, 1913, of $29,913,673.
> The total domestic exports in May, 1914, were $157,406,572, a decrease of $33,649,228 compared with the month of May, 1913.
> Taking the imports and exports together, they show a loss to our commerce for the month of May of this year as compared with May, 1913, of $63,562,901.

Mr. President, I call the Senator's attention——

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will permit me, I do not desire to go into a general discussion of imports. I thought the Senator was confining himself to a correction.

Mr. SMOOT. I am confining it to that right now.

Mr. SIMMONS. I should like to ask the Senator a question. In his statement he gives the imports for April, 1914, of silks and manufactures of silks as $11,094,000, in round numbers. For April, 1913, he gives them as $2,212,000. I want to ask him if it is not a fact that he made a mistake in the figures for 1913 of $6,198,000?

Mr. SMOOT. Absolutely; and I stated that the error was made by including the total of the unmanufactured silk in the statement that was made by me.

Mr. SIMMONS. So that the Senator's statement here gives the imports for April, 1914, as $11,094,000——

Mr. SMOOT. Which was an error.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; and $2,212,000 for April, 1913, instead of $8,411,000 for April, 1913.

Mr. SMOOT. Two million two hundred and twelve thousand dollars is correct for April, 1913, and I so stated.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say that in the case of the exports and imports for both months, which were what I was calling the attention of the Senate to, the Senator from North Carolina dare not dispute a single figure quoted; and the importations he speaks of here of silk or manufactures of silk do not make one cent's difference in the exports and imports quoted by me. They were not included in them, and the whole statement as I made it as to the imports and exports was absolutely correct, if the Monthly Summary of Commerce and Finance of the Department of Commerce is correct.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am not disputing the imports for April or May, and of course I do not dispute the official figures. In my remarks yesterday I stated that the Senator from Utah selected a number of separate items in several schedules for the purpose of showing the increase in importations in April of this year over April of last year and estimated the increase at 129 per cent, I believe, or something like that; and I showed that in three or four items that I picked out of those he selected that his calculations were incorrect because of errors in the aggregate importations quoted, and I pointed out those errors.

Mr. SMOOT. No; there were only two.

Mr. SIMMONS. Well, yes; two in which there were errors in the figures.

Mr. SMOOT. And I will refer to the other two here.

Mr. SIMMONS. Two with reference to that particular error?

Mr. SMOOT. That is all there were.

Mr. SIMMONS. In taking those items the Senator has made in one case, in a $2,000,000 item, a mistake of nearly a million dollars, and in another item of $8,000,000, a mistake of $6,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say now that I checked over carefully the figures for March, and I did not check over the figures for the following month; hence the error.

I want to say, in relation to the "parts of automobiles," one of the other items to which the Senator has referred, that the figures I quoted were exactly correct. The Senator complains because I did not quote the figures for automobiles themselves, and speaks of the great business in this country of manufacturing automobiles. I want to say to the Senator from North Carolina that in the month of April, 1914, of which he complains, there were just 15 automobiles imported into the United States. The Ford Automobile Co. was reported to be making one automobile a minute. That would be one institution in this country running 15 minutes. I do not think they are making that many right now; but all the importations amounted to was $24,609, and for the month of April, 1913, $106,068, with 44 automobiles imported.

Mr. President, the rate of duty on automobiles above $2,000 was not changed in the last tariff act; it is still 45 per cent. Why should I call attention to it? I could have continued with the summary and found other items with great increases, but I did not want to lumber up the RECORD with too many. I could have put the whole report in the RECORD, but I did not think that necessary. All that I did was to select manufactured and partly manufactured articles in about 25 lines and show the amount of increase that there had been in that class of industry in this country.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is entirely evading the point I made.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I am not evading the point.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; the Senator is, as I think.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not intend to evade it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not mean to say the Senator was purposely evading it, but he is in effect evading it. The Senator selected a number of articles from the whole list of importations in this country for the purpose of showing that there had been an increase in importations by showing that the increase with respect to those particular articles had been very heavy. One of the articles he selected for that purpose was parts for automobiles; and taking the parts, he showed an increase of nearly 300 per cent.

Mr. SMOOT. Which was absolutely true.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes. Now, I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that if he had taken the item of automobiles, which was in the next line, he would have shown that there was a decrease of 400 per cent. The purpose of my criticism was to show how utterly worthless, for the purpose of argument, it was to pick out a few items here and there and show that there had been an increase in importations in those items; that the Senator could just as well have picked out a few items here and there and have shown there had been a decrease, just as these two items show. The item that the Senator selected, parts of automobiles, showed a big increase in imports; but the item above it, automobiles, showed a larger decrease. So you could go through this document and select items showing a big increase, and likewise you could select items showing a big decrease; so the argument amounts to nothing.

Mr. SMOOT. The argument amounts to this: Everybody knows that there is an increase during those months of importations——

Mr. SIMMONS. That is not denied.

Mr. SMOOT. Taking all the importations, and the Senator dare not dispute the figures that I quoted upon the floor of the Senate as to the importations or the exportations. Not only that, but the Senator also knows that the estimate that was made by the Ways and Means Committee of the House, and also reported by him in this body, was that the revenue from customs under the present tariff law for this fiscal year would be between forty-nine and fifty-two million dollars less than the revenues for the preceding fiscal year, and the Senator knows that on account of the great increase of importations that amount has been reduced to about $25,000,000. That speaks louder than any words, and that is what I called attention to; and all that I put these figures in the RECORD for was to show just a part of the manufactured goods that had been greatly increased. Why, Mr. President, I did not report one-tenth of them. I could go on and report a good many more.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to confine the Senator, if I can, to the point at issue.

Mr. SMOOT. I decline to yield any further.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to ask the Senator this question: Whereas taking parts of automobiles he showed a large increase in importations during the month of May, if he had taken automobiles would he not have shown a larger decrease? That is the only point we were discussing. I do not want to go into the discussion of the tariff question generally this morning, and I did not understand the Senator rose for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. I would have been through long ago if the Senator had not interrupted me.

Mr. President, I want to say that I have already stated those figures and given them to the Senate. The Senator knows there was no change in the rate on automobiles above $2,000, which are generally those that are imported into this country.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator does not dispute that there was a change in automobiles below that, and a very radical change?

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator has no right to even intimate such a thing, because I have said, every time I made the statement, "automobiles at $2,000 and above." The automobile industry was taken pretty good care of; there is no question about that; and I so stated. Not only that, but the Senator will remember that the Senator from Iowa and myself on this floor called attention to the rate placed upon parts of automobiles, and stated they would be imported and assembled in this country; and what has been the result? The importation of automobiles themselves has decreased, but the importation of parts of automobiles has increased—just what was stated would happen.

Now, as to the other questions with reference to linen thread, I say, Mr. President, the report shows just exactly what I said upon linen thread; and there is no one who dares question it, not even the Senator from North Carolina.

Therefore, Mr. President, as far as all this talk is concerned, it came about, as I said, by the person making the errors in taking the wrong line in two instances, and they were the two items the Senator called attention to. I want to say to the Senate now that, granting all the Senator said, still there is an increase of 77 per cent in the importations of the lines of goods that I called attention to.

I think, Mr. President, that is all I care to say this morning.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I shall not take five minutes. I am not going to enter into any discussion with the Senator from Utah on the question of the tariff. I had hoped the Senator would this morning make his corrections and graciously admit his errors as pointed out by me on yesterday. He does not seem to have done that, although he admits that in two particulars to which I called attention his figures were in error—in one case an error of seven hundred and odd thousand dollars in a $2,000,000 item, and in another case an error of $6,000,000 in an $8,000,000 item, which I think very material errors.

In referring to the two other items, to automobiles and yarns, I was not attacking the figures as given by the Senator, as he knows. It was with a view of showing how unfair, if I may use that term without offense, the Senator was in picking out one item in a bracket and not referring to other items which were related to it, and commercially a part of it, and embraced in the same bracket in the table, which showed a reverse condition.

Now, with reference to yarns and linen, the Senator picked out yarns for the purpose of showing that there had been quite an increase in the importation of yarns during the month of April. But the Senator omitted to call the attention of the Senate to the decrease in the importation of linens manufactured from yarns. The table shows that in the case of linen made from yarn, instead of an increase in imports in April, 1914, there was a decrease; the figures show linens imported in April, 1913, $2,059,000, and in April, 1914, $1,129,000.

My purpose and my only purpose in calling attention to those things was to show how a calculation, based upon selecting and segregating an article here and an article there, is worthless and unreliable, because you can take other articles in the same bracket and show the exact reverse of that condition.

Mr. SMOOT. That would be absolutely true, Mr. President, if they stood by themselves alone; but the Senator must admit that the figures I gave showed the whole month's importations and the whole month's exportations.

Mr. SIMMONS. The fault I found with the Senator was this: He took parts of automobiles, and did not take automobiles made out of the parts. He took the yarns, and did not take the linens made out of the yarns.

Mr. SMOOT. I am very sorry that I did not do just exactly as the Senator from North Carolina wanted me to do.

Mr. SIMMONS. Therefore the Senator, although he did not do it intentionally, did not deal fairly with the Senate. It was inadvertence, of course.

Mr. President, I am not going into a discussion of exports and imports, but I will be glad, when I have the time, to take up especially our trade with Europe. I will be able to show the Senate that taking the whole of Europe, the country which the Republican Senators predicted would overwhelm our industries with its cheap pauper-made products, our imports for the first 10 months of the fiscal year 1914 were less than for the like period of the fiscal year 1913; and I will show him that our exports to Europe for the first 10 months in 1914 were greater than they were for the like period in 1913. That will answer the stock Republican argument of European invasion and the argument that recent gold exports to that country were for the purpose of meeting the balance of trade. I have not time to make that argument this morning.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand the Senator to say that the imports have been more for the months of May and June?

Mr. SIMMONS. No. I said for the first 10 months of the year.

Mr. SMOOT. Or the months of April and May?

Mr. SIMMONS. I said the imports from Europe during the first 10 months of the past fiscal year have been less than for the like period of the year before, and that the exports from this country to Europe during the same period have been greater.

Mr. SMOOT. The imports have been more and the exports have been less.

Mr. SIMMONS. We will discuss that when we get to it.

MEETING OF COMMITTEES DURING SESSIONS OF THE SENATE.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I gave notice yesterday that I would this morning present a resolution or a rule that would forbid committees to sit during the sessions of the Senate. Upon examination I find that in all probability a rule of that kind will not be necessary to accomplish the end I have in view.

Jefferson's Manual is the common law of the Senate, and I think it is the common law of all our parliamentary bodies unless changed by specific provision. In section 11 of Jefferson's Manual, as found in the Rules and Manual of the United States Senate, I discover this paragraph—the section relates to committees:

So soon as the House sits and a committee is notified of it, the chairman is in duty bound to rise instantly and the members to attend the service of the House.

I take it that that is binding upon the Senate of the United States, and prescribes the duties of Senators in so far as the sitting of committees during a session is concerned.

I am now having an investigation or examination made, or have asked that one be made, to ascertain what orders the Senate has entered in the way of permitting committees to meet during the session. I have not yet been furnished with the result of that examination; in fact, I suggested it only a few moments ago. I rise now to explain why I do not offer the resolution to which I referred yesterday, and to state that, having given this notice, I hope in the early part of next week to call the matter again to the attention of the Senate with a view to the enforcement of the rule that I have just read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary states that the matter concerning which the Senator inquires can be furnished now.

Mr. CUMMINS. I would be very glad if the information could be read from the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read it.

The ACTING SECRETARY. Practically all of the important standing committees of the Senate have been authorized in formal resolutions to sit by committee or subcommittee during the sessions of the Sixty-third Congress. The Journal discloses that the Committee on Appropriations is so authorized by a resolution agreed to on April 28, 1913; Banking and Currency by resolution of April 24, 1913; Commerce, May 29, 1913; District of Columbia, April 15, 1913; Post Offices and Post Roads, May 16, 1913; Indian Affairs, May 20, 1913; Judiciary, April 28, 1913; Public Lands, April 21, 1913; Military Affairs, April 21, 1913; Naval Affairs, May 26, 1913; Privileges and Elections, August 26, 1913; Woman Suffrage, May 19, 1913; Claims, February 10, 1914; Immigration, February 7, 1914; Interstate Commerce, January 26, 1914; and the Committee on the Library, by resolution of March 27, 1914.

Mr. CUMMINS. The mere reading of this list indicates very clearly why Senators are not at liberty to attend the sessions of the Senate. It is, as it seems to me, imperative that we take measures to rescind these orders of the Senate, and I hope to move in that direction very soon.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is there any matter pending before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 13811, known as the river and harbor bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	Page	Sterling
Bankhead	Gallinger	Perkins	Sutherland
Brady	Hollis	Pittman	Swanson
Bryan	Jones	Pomerene	Thomas
Burton	Kern	Ransdell	Thornton
Camden	Lane	Saulsbury	Townsend
Catron	Lee, Md.	Shafroth	Vardaman
Chamberlain	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Warren
Chilton	Martine, N. J.	Simmons	White
Clarke, Ark.	Nelson	Smith, Ga.	Works
Cummins	Norris	Smith, Md.
Dillingham	Overman	Smoot

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of the absentees, and Mr. KENYON answered to his name when called.

Mr. HOLLIS. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON] is unavoidably absent and that he is paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA].

Mr. CLAPP and Mr. HUGHES entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. NORRIS. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ASHURST. May the question be stated again?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] to take up what is known as the river and harbor bill.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. I do not see him in his seat; therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] and vote "yea."

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], who is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED].

I also wish to announce that I am paired with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], who is necessarily absent from the Senate. If, however, it becomes necessary for me to vote in order to make a quorum, I think the Senator from Arkansas would permit me to vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CATRON. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], who, I understand, is absent from the city. Owing to that fact I withhold my vote.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL], which I transfer to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] on account of illness in his family. He has a general pair with the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH]. I will allow this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. KENYON. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and will allow this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand that my vote is necessary in order to make a quorum. I therefore transfer my pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 14, as follows:

YEAS—34.

Bankhead	Jones	Poindexter	Smith, Ga.
Bryan	Kern	Pomerene	Smith, Md.
Camden	Lee, Md.	Ransdell	Swanson
Chamberlain	Martin, Va.	Reed	Thompson
Chilton	Martine, N. J.	Saulsbury	Thornton
Clarke, Ark.	Nelson	Shafroth	Vardaman
Fletcher	Overman	Sheppard	White
Hollis	Perkins	Shields
Hughes	Pittman	Simmons

NAYS—14.

Ashurst	Clapp	Page	Thomas
Borah	Dillingham	Smoot	Warren
Brady	Kenyon	Sterling
Bristow	Norris	Sutherland

NOT VOTING—48.

Brandegee	Goff	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.
Burleigh	Gore	McLean	Smith, Mich.
Burton	Gronna	Myers	Smith, S. C.
Catron	Hitchcock	Newlands	Stephenson
Clark, Wyo.	James	O'Gorman	Stone
Colt	Johnson	Oliver	Tillman
Crawford	La Follette	Owen	Townsend
Culberson	Lane	Penrose	Walsh
Cummins	Lea, Tenn.	Robinson	Weeks
du Pont	Lewis	Root	West
Fall	Lippitt	Sherman	Williams
Gallinger	Lodge	Shively	Works

Mr. GALLINGER. A quorum has not voted, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. We might as well settle this question now as at any other time. There are three Senators in the Chamber, Senators GALLINGER, TOWNSEND, and CATRON, who have announced their pairs. Counting them would more than make a quorum. If they voted in the negative, still the motion would prevail.

Mr. GALLINGER. I announced a pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. Do I understand that the Chair rules that I should be counted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is about to make a ruling, and will let the Senate settle it definitely. On the roll call there are 34 yeas and 14 nays. There are three Senators in the Senate Chamber who have announced their pairs. With the vote and the announced pairs there is a quorum present. If those who announced their pairs should vote in the negative, the motion would still prevail. In order that the question may be definitely settled, the Chair rules that the motion does prevail, and will be glad to have an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. GALLINGER. But, Mr. President, the Chair suggests that if the Senators paired should vote in the negative it would not change the result. The fact is, however, that under our rules the Senators paired have no right to vote on either side. That has been recognized as a principle, I think, that has never before been challenged.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a precedent for it, the Chair will state.

Mr. GALLINGER. I presume that may be so. There is a precedent for nearly everything.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not understand that it is necessary in order to present the question to the Senate to make any calculation about how Senators who are present and not voting would vote. The only question is whether the Chair is entitled to count those announcing their pairs as present. There does not seem to be any appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, while I am inclined to think that the Chair is probably right, yet, as the Chair himself says he would like to have an appeal taken, I appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think we should understand what it is we are appealing from before the appeal is taken. I understand that the vote stands 14 nays and 34 yeas, which shows one short of a quorum, and that there are other Senators present who refrained from voting because they have been paired. The Chair enumerated those Senators who are now personally present and were present upon that roll call, and adding those to the number who actually voted found a quorum present. That is in accordance with the uniform practice of the Senate under former administrations; I see no objection to it; and I am sure my friend from New Hampshire would be the very last one to take exception to that condition of affairs.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I do not agree with the distinguished Senator from Arkansas that it is in accordance with the uniform practice of the Senate. It is simply establishing the principle of counting a quorum. If the Senate is going to commit itself to that principle, I do not know that I have any objection. While Vice President Sherman did——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. And Vice President Fairbanks, as well.

Mr. GALLINGER. While Vice President Sherman did exercise that right on two or three occasions, he reversed himself during the latter part of his incumbency of the office of Vice President and refrained from acting under the previous ruling which he had made.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. We may indulge the hope that the present Vice President will not reverse himself upon the very wholesome ruling he has just announced.

Mr. GALLINGER. That may be so. I am not going to discuss it at length; I have come to the conclusion that I am not going to discuss anything at great length in the Senate hereafter; but I simply want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that we are establishing the rule of counting a quorum that was established in another body a few years ago. It may be a wholesome or an unwholesome rule, but it is contrary to the custom of the Senate during the last century I might say, except in one or two instances. The only instance that I recall during my service in the Senate was that Vice President Sherman did count a quorum on two or three occasions; but when his attention was called to it, and he gave serious consideration to the matter, he reversed himself. As an appeal has been taken, however, I shall say nothing further, and content myself with voting.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the ruling of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I agree with the ruling of the Chair. I think it is not only founded upon precedent, but I think it is a wise ruling. I do not like, however, to see an appeal taken from the decision of the Chair, and the rule established on this particular measure, which might not be an indication of what we wanted to establish as a rule of the Senate, but rather as an indication of what we want to do with reference to a particular bill. I shall vote to sustain the Chair, because I think it is a wise ruling.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, if I understood the ruling of the Chair and the statement of the Chair, it was to the effect that he had noticed that there were three Senators who had announced that they were paired. I do not understand that the Vice President announced the names of the Senators. It seems to me that it would be a most dangerous rule to establish in the Senate, if, without a record of the names which have been counted as present or announcement made at the time, a ruling should be made and established as the rule of the Senate.

I am inclined to agree with the opinion of the Chair that when Senators are present and in their seats they should be counted if it is necessary to make a quorum; but I think there should be a record so clear that there should be no chance or opportunity to abuse that right so that Senators might be counted as present who were not in fact here.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did announce the names of the Senators.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not think the Chair gave the names of the Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair announced that Senators GALLINGER, TOWNSEND, and CATRON were present.

Mr. NORRIS. There may be considerable in what the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has said; but I think that Senators will vote on this question according to their belief in the justice or the injustice, as they may think, of the Chair's ruling. I am opposed to this bill, and it would be natural to vote against sustaining the Chair; and yet I believe the establishment of this rule would be so valuable that, even though I should like to defeat the bill which this motion seeks to bring before the Senate, I doubt whether the defeat of that bill would be more valuable than the establishment of the precedent which we will now establish if a roll call is had; and I am going to ask for a roll call, so that the Chair shall have a right to do just what the Chair has done and let it be firmly established.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, there is no more satisfactory way to establish a rule than to have a ruling of the Chair and have it go unchallenged.

Mr. NORRIS. I doubt that.

Mr. BORAH. We vote here, as we all know, in emergencies upon rulings with reference to a particular bill when it is up, and our views upon the bill often control the question instead of our views upon the ruling.

Mr. NORRIS. That is often true, but it is not going to control my vote; and I know of several other Senators—for instance, the Senator from Idaho, for one—who are going to sustain the Chair and yet are opposed to this bill.

Mr. BORAH. That is true; but we know, as we run back through the precedents, that we find them all shot to pieces by reason of the fact that some precedent has been established with reference to a fight upon a particular bill. The best precedent of this body is the unchallenged ruling of the Chair.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not agree with the Senator, for it seems to me that we add emphasis to the ruling of the Chair when an appeal is taken, a roll call is had, and the Chair is sustained. That shows and the debate shows that the proposition was discussed and that it was fully understood. So it seems to me that the vote of the Senate will go a good way toward establishing the authority of the Chair to count a quorum if there is a quorum actually here. That is a very important thing, as I look at it. I ask, Mr. President, for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I am going to vote to sustain the ruling of the Chair, because I know of no other way by which we can temporarily establish the rule. I must say that I consider the word "rule" a very improper definition of what we are doing. I should like to see a rule that would govern the Chair just as well as this body. We certainly can not have a rule to govern the Chair when the Chair makes the rule on every ruling that he announces. It convinces me more than ever that the charges that have been made against us that we operate without any system or any rule, except according to the vagaries of certain Members who are present, is largely true.

I understand further that a former occupant of the chair has been sustained on a different ruling. That was considered for the time as a rule. The present occupant of the chair does not consider that a rule and makes a different ruling, and now asks this body to sustain a different ruling. This rule, I imagine, will stand until this body will be differently constituted, in which event there will be another rule, so that, I take it, there is no rule governing this body.

Mr. BORAH. Not necessarily when the body is differently constituted, but when the situation is different.

Mr. PITTMAN. I mean differently constituted as to the personnel at some hour of the day or some day in the week; but it certainly emphasizes the fact that we would escape a great deal of just criticism if we would attempt to establish a few rules for the government of this body.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I want to emphasize as strongly as I can my commendation of the ruling of the Chair. I believe it ought to go further if necessary. I think the Chair should have the power to count as present every Senator upon this floor at a roll call, whether he announces his presence or not, whether he announces a pair or not, whether he speaks or not. If he is bodily present in the Chamber he can not be spiritually absent from the Chamber. Our constituencies did not send us here for the purpose of sitting around and refusing to answer, or insisting that we should be regarded as absent when we do not vocally announce our presence.

I recall very vividly the tremendous upheaval, in Democratic ranks, particularly, which followed the practice of Speaker Reed years ago when he insisted upon his right to count a quorum; but the common sense of the people was behind him, and as a consequence that which was then declared to be revolutionary, unprecedented, and destructive of American institutions has become the commonly accepted practice, and it ought to be here. So far as our rules are concerned, if I have gained anything from the discussions of them, it is that we have decisions pro and con upon all of them, in consequence of which the most of them are in bewildering confusion.

I think that in this ruling the Chair should be sustained, because even now it is difficult to obtain a quorum, which is, to say the least, not very commendable, particularly on the part of the majority on the Democratic side of the Chamber.

I earnestly hope the ruling of the Chair will be unanimously or with practical unanimity sustained, to the end that we may do business when there are more than 48 Senators in the Chamber, whether they announce their presence or not.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is this motion debatable?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is. There is no question about it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that it is debatable.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to state that I shall vote against sustaining the ruling of the Chair. I do not agree with my colleagues here. I think this ruling will enable the Senate to pass bills without a majority of a quorum voting. It is altogether probable that there might be several Senators here paired and not voting, and if the vote was close, less than a majority of a quorum would pass a bill under the rule that has been announced; and I think it would be exceedingly dangerous.

To illustrate, suppose there were 23 votes cast for a measure and 22 against it, and there were half a dozen Senators here who were paired; the result would be, under this ruling, that the bill would be passed by less than a majority of a quorum; and I will never vote to sustain any rule that will result in such a situation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair desires to state to the Senator from Kansas that that was not the ruling of the Chair. The ruling of the Chair was that it was entirely immaterial as to how the three Senators who were paired voted, and the present occupant of the chair would never make such a ruling as this if the pairs present would in any wise affect the result of the vote.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think that very materially modifies the situation.

Mr. NORRIS Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator from Kansas, if he will permit me, in regard to the illustration he has given, where 23 votes would pass the bill, that he must realize that the Senators who are present and not voting, if they are opposed to the bill, have it within their power to defeat it.

Mr. BRISTOW. Yes; but they do not perform the functions which it is their duty to perform, and the country is not responsible for that. They are responsible to answer to their constituents. You might as well say, if they were not here, that you could count them here because they are Members of the body.

As to the frequent absence of a quorum, the responsibility is on the Members of this body if they will not attend, the result being that business can not be transacted. That does not justify us, however, in adopting rules that will enable less than a majority to transact business. That would be revolutionary. The modification of the ruling, as I understood it, as announced by the Chair of course takes from the objection that I make a good deal of its force; but I still think the old rule is the better. If we want to transact business, let us be here, and let us require other Senators to be here. We have the power to require them to attend. Let us not excuse them from attending by passing bills when there is not a quorum voting on them.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit me——

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield first to the Senator from Colorado. Then I will yield further to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Kansas that the very illustration he has given, namely, that there might be a measure passed here without a majority of a quorum voting, is carried out every day in this body by Senators not voting. You will hear one vote in favor of a measure, and the Chair says it is carried. It seems to me that those Senators are not exercising their functions, as the Senator from Kansas has said in the other case, but no objection is made to it; and it seems to me that the Senators who are not voting but who are here and announce their presence can easily say that they want to be counted.

I believe the ruling of the Vice President is right. I believe that if we do not do that we are going to get at some time such close majorities that a quorum will not transact business, and we will not have a quorum. We can break a quorum at any time. I feel that when a Senator is here and announces that he is paired it is ridiculous to say that he is not present, so that the Vice President can count him to make a quorum; and there is no rule, as I understand, that it takes a majority of a quorum to carry a measure. If you take the declaration as to a quorum being present, it is a majority of those who vote when a quorum is present. That is what I understand is the rule.

To say that a Senator can get up here and announce that he is paired with another Senator, and it goes upon the RECORD that he is here, and then to say that there is no quorum present after the vote is taken, seems to me to be absurd, and sooner or later we must abandon this very practice that it has been claimed has been followed here. The House of Representatives did it, and it was universally commended. Now, no Speaker of the House of Representatives fails to count a quorum if the roll call does not disclose a quorum present and the Members are actually there; and I have heard of no violation of any sound discretion in the matter of counting a quorum. I have heard of no intimations of fraud being attempted.

That being the case, when we have a quorum here, to say that we have to call the roll, and then have another call, and then if that develops a quorum, take a vote, and by reason of two or three persons being paired we can not pass any legislation, seems to me to be absurd.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, that is all very well if you want to make it easy for Senators to absent themselves from the Chamber and not attend the sessions of the Senate; but I am opposed to any rule that will make it easier for Senators not to attend the sessions of the Senate. I think the Senate is not attended by Senators as much as it should be, anyway, and any letting up on the rules or changing of the rules that encourages Senators to go off and not attend to their duties here, I think is a mistake.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. In view of what the Senator has just said, what is gained in the way of legislation if a Senator is physically present in the Chamber and yet refuses to take any part in legislative action?

Mr. BRISTOW. He must assume the responsibility of that, the same as he does when he is away and not attending to his duties at all.

Mr. GALLINGER. But when a Senator is paired he is not refusing to take part. He is simply keeping a compact that he has made with another Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. If that be true, then there ought to be some rule changing this compact.

Mr. GALLINGER. That may be so.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not care to take the Senator's time further. I was going to make some other observations.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will ask the Senator from Ohio if he does not think this proposition is for the purpose of excusing Senators who are away and out of town attending to their political business or something else?

Mr. POMERENE. If that question is addressed to me, I answer "no."

Mr. BRISTOW. Some of them are in Europe now, as I understand.

Mr. POMERENE. I am not to be held responsible for the absence of any Senator. I am very much interested in this ruling of the Chair. I think he is to be congratulated. The Senator from New Hampshire has said that for more than 100 years this body has failed to count a Member present when he refused to answer. If it has taken 100 years for the United States Senate to be able to say that a man is here when he is in fact here, if the Chair has within that time not learned to count a Member present when he is in fact present, it reflects but little credit either upon the Chair or upon the Senate. If this body accomplishes nothing during this summer session other than to be able to count a quorum when a quorum is present, our session will not have been in vain, and I for one will be willing to stay here all of next summer if the Senate will adopt some reasonable cloture rule.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. The Senator from Ohio is too frank a man to put me in a false position. He did not intend to do so.

Mr. POMERENE. I surely did not.

Mr. GALLINGER. I did not say that a Senator refused to vote or that for 100 years a Senator could refrain from voting. There is a rule compelling a Senator to vote if he undertakes to refrain from voting. What I said was that pairs had been recognized, and that that excused a Senator from voting, because he had made an agreement, ordinarily with a Senator upon the other side of the Chamber, that during his absence he would not vote.

The Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] came to me on yesterday and said that he had to be absent. I said to him: "You recognized the pair while I was absent, and, of course, I will observe the pair while you are absent"; and that I will do; but I do not do it for the purpose of obstructing legislation at all.

Mr. POMERENE. I would not so charge the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GALLINGER. No; the Senator did not do so.

Mr. POMERENE. As I understood the Senator, he was referring to the fact that for 100 years we had had a rule whereby a man might be present within the knowledge of the Chair——

Mr. GALLINGER. Precisely.

Mr. POMERENE. And at the same time not be counted when it came to the matter of making a quorum.

Mr. GALLINGER. Provided he was paired.

Mr. President, I shall vote against the ruling of the Chair, although I have no doubt it is going to be sustained. I recall with a great deal of interest, if the Senator from Kansas will permit me a moment, the protest that came with such earnestness and power from the late Senator from Georgia, Mr. Bacon, whenever this proposition was broached in the Senate; but I think probably we have passed beyond that stage, and I do not know that there is any other Senator who could take the place the Senator from Georgia occupied. It was a potential appeal that he made to the Senate, as a rule, and I think it was upon his appeal that Vice President Sherman reversed his ruling.

Perhaps, however, we have reached that stage in our procedure, and it may be a wise one. I am not arguing very much against it. I do not think, however, that the ruling of the Vice President that he can invoke the rule under one condition and not under another is sound. I think the ruling ought to be general, if it is going to be made at all; that if it operates in this case it ought to be made to operate in all cases, and not be determined according to what the result would be if Senators voted on the one side or the other of the question.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JONES. I merely wish to say I think the ruling of the Chair is correct, and yet I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Kansas to the rule referred to by the Senator from New Hampshire. It seems to me that if it had been applied it would have avoided all of this question and would avoid it entirely in the future, so far as that is concerned.

Part 2 of Rule XII says:

When a Senator declines to vote on call of his name he shall be required to assign his reasons therefor, and having assigned them, the Presiding Officer shall submit the question to the Senate, "Shall the Senator, for the reasons assigned by him, be excused from voting?" which shall be decided without debate; and these proceedings shall be had after the roll call and before the result is announced; and any further proceedings in reference thereto shall be after such announcement.

Of course, every pair must be taken with the understanding that if the Senate does not excuse the Senator from voting his vote shall be recorded. Therefore, in this case, if the Senate should refuse to excuse the Senators from voting they could be required to vote, and a quorum would be present; and that rule, if applied, would avoid any difficulty of this character.

Mr. BRISTOW. I think that would be very much better.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, may I impose upon my friend from Kansas to the extent of calling the attention of the Senate at this time to some of the precedents on this very question?

Mr. BRISTOW. Certainly.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I made the assertion that the action taken by the Chair to-day was not exceptional nor without reason; that it had been what might be fairly called the uniform practice of the Senate for the last 75 years. I have such respect for the memory and judgment of the Senator from New Hampshire that when he said that was not true I thought possibly my memory was at fault, as I did not at that time have before me the recorded evidence of these rulings, and I busied myself to find them. I now have the rulings.

Mr. GALLINGER. I must have said "not correct" instead of "not true." I could not have used the other expression.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Very well; I make that modification myself.

This question arose on March 15, 1858. I now read from Gilfry's Precedents regarding the rules of the Senate, as recorded on pages 402, 403, and 404 of the volume of Precedents published by that gentleman.

On March 15, 1858, this action is recorded:

During the consideration of S. 161, for the admission of Kansas into the Union, on a motion to adjourn no quorum voted.

The Vice President (Mr. Breckinridge) stated to the Senate that the number of Senators voting did not constitute a quorum of the Senate, but that, in the opinion of the Chair, a quorum was present in the Chamber.

The question came up again on May 15, 1874. The chair was being occupied at that time by Senator Matt H. Carpenter, of Wisconsin, one of the ablest men who ever occupied a place on this floor.

The President pro tempore (Matt H. Carpenter) directed the Secretary to count the Senate to ascertain if a quorum was present.

It was found that no quorum was present.

The question came up again on June 19, 1879, when the chair was occupied by Senator Thurman, an equally distinguished Senator from the State of Ohio.

On question of laying an appeal from the decision of the Chair on the table, yeas were 32, nays 3—no quorum voting. The President pro tempore—Mr. Thurman—counted the Senate and announced a quorum present in the following language:

The Chair has usually taken the fact of there being no quorum voting as evidence that there was no quorum present, but the Chair has not decided that it is not possible to ascertain otherwise whether there is a quorum. The Chair does not think the fact that a quorum has not voted is conclusive evidence that a quorum is not present. On the contrary, in the opinion of the Chair, he has a right to count the Senate. He has counted the Senate and found that a quorum is in attendance; but a quorum has not voted.

The question came up again on March 3, 1881, when the Chair was occupied by Senator Cockrell, of Missouri, one of the most eminent men who ever occupied a seat on this floor, a Democrat who always enjoyed the confidence and respect of his party and was always in sympathy with its purposes and its principles.

This occurred:

While a motion to postpone further consideration of one bill for the purpose of considering another was pending, a motion to proceed to the consideration of executive business was made, on which no quorum voted.

The Presiding Officer [Mr. Cockrell] proceeded to count the Senate, and announced the presence of a quorum.

The matter came up again the 29th of May, 1908:

Mr. LA FOLLETTE raised a question as to the presence of a quorum.

Mr. Aldrich raised a question of order, viz, that a Senator must be in possession of the floor, and that he can not take the floor by asking a parliamentary inquiry and then make any motion.

The Vice President [Mr. Fairbanks] sustained the question of order.

An appeal having been taken from the decision of the Chair,

On motion by Mr. Aldrich to lay the appeal on the table—yeas 32, nays 14—no quorum voting,

The Vice President [Mr. Fairbanks] counted the Senate, and announced that a quorum was present; and so the motion prevailed.

After debate, the Vice President again counted, and found there was no quorum present on another motion.

On the 30th of May, 1908:

Mr. LA FOLLETTE raised a question as to the presence of a quorum.

Mr. Aldrich raised a question of order, viz, that a roll call of the Senate having disclosed the presence of a quorum, and no business having intervened, the suggestion of the absence of a quorum is not in order.

The Vice President submitted the question to the Senate, Is the point of order well taken?

It was determined in the affirmative—yeas 35, nays 8, present and not voting—

That was not a quorum of the Senate actually recorded and the Vice President counted as present Mr. Clay, Mr. Culberson, Mr. Frazier, Mr. Milton, and Mr. Overman.

Then adding the Senators present to those who actually voted, they constituted a quorum; and the affirmative vote being the larger, the motion was declared carried.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour having expired the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator from Delaware will just suspend——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I ask the Senator from Delaware to consent that we temporarily lay aside the unfinished business until we can dispose of this matter. We are about ready to vote on it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. That is quite agreeable to me.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. I object.

Mr. BRISTOW. I object, Mr. President.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I am not sure but that this is a privileged question, anyway. I will look in the book here to find out.

[At this point the Vice President laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which was read, and which appears elsewhere under its appropriate heading.]

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order or a parliamentary inquiry, I am not exactly clear in my mind as to which.

If the ruling of the Chair, which has been temporarily suspended by the appeal, is not sustained, there is no quorum of the Senate present; and we can not take up the unfinished business or anything else. This matter is in an attitude now that a decision is necessary to determine whether the Senate is in session for the purpose of doing business, and under the conditions I raise the point of order that it is a privileged question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the point of order of the Senator from Arkansas is well taken.

Mr. BRISTOW. May I suggest that there is but one way of ascertaining whether or not there is a quorum present, and that is by a call of the roll. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I think pending the appeal that would not be in order. Certainly it would not be in order to take a Senator off the floor, while a Senator was occupying it for some other purpose, to call for a quorum, or take me off the floor for the purpose of making that suggestion, because in the rulings that I have just read it appears that several of them were upon the distinct point that the Senator having the floor could not be taken off the floor for the purpose of making the point of no quorum.

Mr. BRISTOW. I acknowledge that; but the Senator's contention is that there is a quorum present.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I contend there is a quorum present.

Mr. BRISTOW. There is but one way to ascertain that fact, and that is by calling the roll.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I maintain that it is the purpose of a roll call to disclose the presence of a quorum, and that is the very point in issue. If the ruling of the Chair is sustained, there is a quorum present. There was a quorum present when the last vote was taken.

Mr. BRISTOW. That was half an hour ago.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Nothing has intervened since; we have simply been discussing the same point. I am not real clear about the proposition whether or not the point of no quorum could be made at this time, but the result is that a vote has to be had to determine the appeal at some time, because the question involved is whether the Senate can proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. With pleasure.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to ask this question of the Senator. I think he has propounded a very interesting parliamentary proposition. I submit to him that unless the Chair's ruling is overruled it must stand. The Chair has ruled that there was a quorum present. While an appeal is pending, that appeal might be postponed to some later day; it might last for several days; but it seems to me until that decision is overruled the decision of the Chair must stand, and therefore in parliamentary law there is a quorum present.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. But the question pending challenges the sufficiency and legality of the Chair's ruling. If the Senator had said that, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the unfinished business came up in regular order, it would be a mere moot question at this time, and I think there would be something in it; I would not be able to successfully resist it. If that point is made, I think I would have to abandon the discussion for the day.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I raise a point of order which involves precisely what the Senator has stated, and I had it in my mind to make that very point. It is that the hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, the unfinished business under our rules has necessarily been laid before the Senate, and a request was made to lay it aside and objection was made. Can anything else be before the Senate but the unfinished business?

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That is the point I concede. The decision of the question at this time would be a moot decision for the reason that if the river and harbor bill was taken up it would be immediately displaced by the regular order, which would be the unfinished business. So we shall have to wait for another occasion to take the matter up. In the meantime the decision of the Chair will stand as the rule of the Senate until reversed by some affirmative action hereafter to be taken. I concede the point of order made by the Senator from New Hampshire on that statement.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, it occurs to me the situation in which we are left necessitates the decision by the Senate of the appeal from the decision of the Chair, and that we can not be acting as a Senate until the question has been disposed of. That question can never be presented again because that question itself will become a moot question. Unless it is presented now, it never can be submitted until another occasion presents itself where the ruling of the Chair on the same point is brought in question. So I insist that we must decide first whether the ruling of the Chair shall be sustained. The only question that can be presented is the question presented by the appeal.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WHITE. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I suggest to the Senator from Alabama that in the very discussion which is now taking place and the discussion which took place upon the appeal from the ruling of the Chair, we were proceeding upon the theory that we had a quorum. Otherwise we could not have proceeded at all.

Mr. WHITE. Then, if that is true, if there can be no appeal because we have a quorum, that settles the question. But, as a matter of fact, the answer to the Senator's question is that the appeal suspended for the time being the question as to whether we had a quorum.

Mr. SWANSON. Will the Senator from Alabama allow me a moment?

Mr. WHITE. Certainly.

Mr. SWANSON. It seems to me that we could not lay the unfinished business before the Senate if there was no quorum present; that we could not do anything but get a quorum. Consequently the decision of the Chair that there is a quorum present seems to be a live question now, because unless a quorum was present the unfinished business could not be laid before the Senate and we could not do anything but get a quorum. It appears to me that what we have to do before we can lay the unfinished business or anything else before the Senate is to determine whether there is a quorum present, and if not to secure one.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

Mr. WHITE. I believe I have the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. WHITE. That is exactly the question I was presenting; and we can not get away from it unless we leave the ruling of the Chair in force, and when we do that that settles the question. Without an appeal the ruling of the Chair becomes final. If it becomes final, it binds the Senate; and the only hope to relieve ourselves of that situation is for the Chair to put the question to the Senate as to whether the ruling of the Chair was correct. I insist that no step can be taken by the Senate until that question has been decided, unless those taking the appeal concede that the ruling of the Chair is correct and there is no appeal by reason of not insisting upon the appeal.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to make to the Senator from Alabama just one suggestion. When the appeal from the Chair is taken, does it not suspend the decision of the Chair?

Mr. WHITE. I think so.

Mr. VARDAMAN. So if the rule under which the Senate has been acting prior to this occasion has been when the record on the vote reveals no quorum, unless the Chair's ruling is sustained there is no quorum and the appeal from the ruling of the Chair suspends the ruling.

Mr. WHITE. As long as the appeal is pending, but when the appeal is——

Mr. VARDAMAN. It has not been disposed of. Therefore it is pending.

Mr. WHITE. Whenever we take up some other business the appeal is abandoned and that leaves the ruling of the Chair in force.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the ruling of the Chair that a quorum was present is binding upon the Senate until the Senate has reversed it. It is analogous to an appeal from the decision of a court to a higher court. The judgment of the lower court is not superseded by the appeal. The judgment of the court is not affected until the higher court has held it to be erroneous.

We have proceeded upon the theory, and must proceed upon the theory, that the ruling of the Vice President, whether in fact it be right or not, is binding, and it will be binding and remain binding until the Senate has reversed it. Otherwise we could not be proceeding here at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That must be the condition of affairs. The Chair found that a quorum was present. That stands until the Senate reverses the ruling of the Chair. Pending the appeal from the Chair and before the Senate had taken any action, without objection upon the part of the Senate the Chair laid before the Senate the unfinished business. The ruling of the Chair must therefore stand until some subsequent day by some unknown method to the Chair now the Senate reverses this ruling of the Chair.

Mr. WHITE. Then, if that is correct, and I am sure it is correct, I agree with the Chair. I insist that this appeal can never be decided. The same question may be presented when the Chair makes a similar ruling, but this appeal is gone by reason of its abandonment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been the observation of the Chair here that the Chair can find trouble enough in settling questions as they arise without anticipating them.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, in order to relieve the situation, if it be in order, for I think this question will arise at some other time, I shall ask to withdraw the appeal, and I do so.

Mr. NORRIS. I object.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The RECORD will show what has occurred.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I make the suggestion of the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas suggests the absence of a quorum, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cummins	Norris	Smith, Mich.
Bankhead	Dillingham	Overman	Smoot
Borah	Fletcher	Page	Sutherland
Brady	Gallinger	Perkins	Swanson
Bristow	Hollis	Pittman	Thomas
Bryan	Hughes	Poindexter	Thompson
Burton	Jones	Pomerene	Thornton
Camden	Kenyon	Ransdell	Townsend
Catron	Kern	Reed	Vardaman
Chamberlain	Lane	Saulsbury	Warren
Chilton	Lee, Md.	Shafroth	White
Clapp	Martin, Va.	Sheppard
Clarke, Ark.	Martine, N. J.	Shields
Crawford	Newlands	Simmons

Mr. KERN. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is necessarily absent on business of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] will proceed.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I shall first endeavor to give a brief summary of the bill now before the Senate. It provides for a Federal trade commission composed of five members, provides machinery for its organization, and the taking over of all the records, work, and business of the Bureau of Corporations, which is abolished. Its employees, with the exception of two secretaries, one clerk for each commissioner, and attorneys and experts, are placed in the classified service. Other necessary machinery for the operation of the commission is provided.

The commission is empowered to investigate the organization, business, financial condition, conduct, practices, and management of corporations engaged in interstate commerce, other than common carriers and banks, and to require them to furnish information regarding said matters to the commission, which may prescribe a uniform system of annual reports regarding such corporations or classes of corporations as it may designate.

The information obtained is only made public so far as the commission deems it of public importance, and the business of the companies investigated is protected so far as the information obtained relates to trades processes, names of customers, and other distinctly private matters.

Where suits have been brought by the Attorney General and the court finds for the complainant, it may utilize the commission as a master in chancery to have such hearings as may be necessary to settle the forms of decrees to be entered.

The commission is to report directly to Congress, and may submit recommendations for additional legislation.

If the Attorney General desires, it may investigate the manner in which any order or decree is being carried out or violated, and if it obtains any information as to violation of the law regulating commerce, it reports its findings and the evidence to the Attorney General, with its recommendations, for such purpose having access to documents and writings of any corporation investigated.

The commission is directed to investigate expeditiously trade conditions in foreign countries where the export trade of the United States may be injuriously affected, and, like the Bureau of Corporations, its jurisdiction extends over all trade associations.

I am inclined to believe that this power to investigate foreign trade conditions affecting our export trade may prove very beneficial, both to our business men and in enabling us to efficiently regulate domestic trade through a complete understanding of foreign trade conditions.

The unfair-competition clause of the act is having such full discussion in the Senate that in the summarized statement I am now making it needs only to be mentioned.

Penalties are provided in the act for failure to file reports after 30 days' notice that a company is in default, and the willful destruction, alteration, or removal of documentary evidence, so that it is not available for proper use, is made unlawful, with appropriate penalties; and willful false entries in any book of accounts or record of any trade association, corporate combination, or corporation is made unlawful.

Heavy penalties are provided for any employee of the commission who divulges information without authority, and the commission is given all the powers possessed by the Interstate Commerce Commission to compel attendance and testimony of witnesses and production of evidence.

Power is conferred on the district courts to compel the compliance by any corporation, its officers and employees, with any order of the commission requiring the production of evidence, and other departments and bureaus of the Government are required to furnish the commission with evidence when so directed by the President.

A COMPARISON WITH THE HOUSE BILL.

Mr. President, having briefly summarized the whole bill, I think it will not be unprofitable to compare its provisions with the existing law regarding the Bureau of Cororpations and with the provisions of the House bill—the Covington bill—as it came to the Senate. Speaking generally, the only authority at present possessed by any Federal governmental agency to exercise any of the powers conferred by this bill on the Federal trade commission is lodged in the Bureau of Corporations of the Department of Commerce, with respect to industrial corporations engaged in interstate trade and in the Interstate Commerce Commission with respect to interstate carriers.

This bill has to do only with corporations engaged in interstate trade, which are not carriers or banks, and expressly so states. With respect to the corporations with which it deals it is a distinct and somewhat far-reaching step in advance along the road to commission government.

The present Bureau of Corporations in the Department of Commerce was established by section 6 of "An act to establish the Department of Commerce and Labor," approved February 14, 1903. Therein it was provided that the Bureau of Corporations, with a commissioner of corporations as its head, should have power to make—diligent investigation into the organization, conduct, and management of the business of any corporation, joint-stock company, or corporate combination engaged in commerce among the several States and with foreign nations, excepting common carriers * * * and to gather such information and data as will enable the President of the United States to make recommendations to Congress for legislation for the regulation of such commerce and to report such data to the President from time to time as he shall require.

The information obtained might be made public, should the President so direct, and the Commissioner of Corporations was given the same power to obtain evidence as was possessed by the Interstate Commerce Commission. The bureau was also directed to gather, compile, publish, and supply useful information concerning corporations doing interstate or foreign business, including insurance companies, under direction of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor.

A comparison of the powers provided to be exercised in the bill under consideration by the trade commission shows that all these powers, with the exception possibly of those relating to insurance companies, are included in the Newlands, or Senate, bill, in addition to others I shall hereafter refer to, and by section 3 of the Covington bill as it came from the House, are expressly vested in the trade commission bill therein provided for.

ADDITIONAL POWERS PROVIDED.

In addition to the authority given the Bureau of Corporations and the Commissioner of Corporations, both the Covington bill and the Newlands bill, following the trend of public sentiment, which has doubtless been greatly influenced by the eminently satisfactory way in which the Interstate Commerce Commission has performed its duties, propose to give additional powers to this new trade commission. The Newlands bill gives to the commission powers respecting all the corporations which were under the supervision of the Bureau of Corporations, while the Covington bill circumscribes the scope of the commission's activity by limiting its authority to obtain reports, under section 9, to those corporations which have capital of not less than $5,000,000, or, having less capital, belong to a class of corporations which the commission may designate, and by capital is meant the combined amount of stocks, bonds, and surplus of the corporation.

The Committee on Interstate Commerce of the Senate and the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House were considering the subjects embraced in the Newlands and the Covington bills in their respective bodies at the same time, and, though not having joint meetings, kept reasonably in touch with the thought and conclusions of each other in the preparation of the two bills; and this, in some measure, accounts for the striking similarity of the Newlands bill, which the Senate committee proposes to substitute as an amendment to the Covington or House bill. The Senate committee, however, was able, after the House bill was perfected, to have full advantage of the work of the House, and in that way seems to have presented a bill in some degree an advance upon that of the House; slightly better in the phraseology and arrangement of some of its sections and somewhat broader in its scope. It is, indeed, surprising, however, that the thought and work of the two committees should without actual joint meetings have so closely followed the same lines.

I shall attempt to sketch in broad and general terms the similarities and the differences between the two bills. There are only two provisions in the Senate bill which are not in some way referred to and provided for in the House measure.

FOREIGN INQUIRIES AND INVESTIGATION.

In subhead G of section 3 of the Senate bill the commission is directed to report its findings and evidence to the Attorney General when, from its inquiries and investigations, it believes that any corporation, individual, or association has violated any law of the United States, and in subhead H of section 3 the commission is directed to expeditiously investigate trade conditions in foreign countries where the export trade of the United States may be injuriously affected. It is hardly conceivable that anyone will object to the inclusion in the bill of these two provisions, and they may be left with only this brief statement of their scope and object.

PREVENTION OF UNFAIR COMPETITION.

The prevention of unfair competition, for which extended provision is made in the Newlands bill—section 5—is barely mentioned in the Covington bill, in section 11, where the commission, if it shall obtain any information in any of its investigations of "unfair competition or practice in commerce," is directed to report the same to the President to aid him in making recommendations to Congress for legislation. The Newlands bill makes different provision concerning unfair competition, and section 5, which includes this provision, seems to have centered the attention of those Senators who have already spoken upon the bill and to have encountered the only opposition yet manifested in the Senate. I shall recur very briefly to this section hereafter.

Returning to a comparison of the House and Senate bills and pointing out their differences, the Federal trade commission bill of the Senate practically differs in no respect from the interstate trade commission of the House, except that the Senate bill provides for five members with terms of seven years each—sections 1 and 2—while the House bill provides for only three members with six-year terms—section 1. The machinery for working the commissions in both cases is practically the same, and the power of general investigation given the commissions are so similar, except as to limitation on the powers of the House commission to corporations having a capital of not less than $5,000,000, as not to require particular statement at this time.

PUBLICITY PROVISIONS.

The publicity provisions in the two bills are much alike. Both bills provide that the commission may, in its discretion, publish the information obtained by it, so far as it may be of public importance, and that the commission shall make a report to Congress, in which it may submit recommendations for additional legislation.

Both bills prohibit making public information obtained by the commission as to trade processes or secrets and the names of customers, and both bills provide for the severe punishment of any employee of the commission who divulges any fact or information received during his employment by the commission, unless the commission has authorized the same to be made public.

These provisions are intended to preserve to the business men of the country the proper possession of whatever is necessary to the privacy of their business and prevent advantage being unfairly taken of them because of information secured by the commission in the exercise of its official powers.

Both bills turn over to the new commission all property, business, appropriations, and employees of the old Bureau of Corporations, fix the office of the new commission in Washington, place the employees, with very limited exception, in the classified service, and define the terms used in the act in a similar way. All Government departments and bureaus, when directed by the President, must furnish the commission records, papers, and information in their possession—section 10.

SYSTEM OF ANNUAL REPORTS.

Subhead C, section 3, of the Newlands bill provides that the commission may prescribe a uniform system of annual reports from corporations and such classes of corporations as it may designate, which provision was made that the commission might classify the corporations under its supervision as might be found convenient, and by such reports, when called for, possibly determine what corporation, if any, required investigation under the broader powers conferred in subheads A and B of the same section. Practically the same provision is found in section 8 of the Covington bill, authorizing the commission to make rules, regulations, and classifications of corporations, although the terms seem to be rather clouded and vague, and in section 9, where power is given the commission to prescribe as near as may be a uniform system of annual reports.

The provisions of neither bill require that all corporations shall make reports, but, in effect, only such as are classified by the commission, and when directed by special order or when by its rules they shall be required to do so. Both bills provide the same penalties for failure to make such reports, the Newlands bill, however, not imposing a penalty until 30 days after notice to the corporation that it is in default, thus relieving any business concern not willfully in default from penalty to perform an act where its neglect may have been merely an oversight and not a willful default.

General powers of investigation are vested in the commission under the terms of both the acts, and by both acts a provision is made that any court acting under the antitrust acts may obtain the benefit of knowledge in possession of the commission by referring matters to the commission and requesting its report.

POWERS OF INVESTIGATION.

The Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate believed that its provision—subhead E of section 3—is much preferable in form to that of section 12 of the Covington bill and may avoid a claim that this provision is unconstitutional as encroaching upon the proper powers of a court. It is not intended by either bill to do this, however, as the authority to refer rests purely in the discretion of the court; and in the Senate bill a hearing as to the form of the decree to be entered is provided for wherein both parties will be heard.

Subhead F, section 3, of the Newlands bill, and section 18 of the Covington bill, provide for investigations by the proposed trade commission, after a decree has been entered in a court against anyone adjudged to have violated the antitrust acts, to ascertain if the court's decree has been or is being carried out in good faith, and the two provisions last referred to in aid of the courts are believed to be valuable as assisting the courts in such case.

Provision is made in both bills for the punishment of anyone willfully making false statements or entries, which may deceive the commission, the provision of the Senate bill being manifestly the best considered of the two, and by both bills employees of the commission improperly divulging information may be severely punished.

Under the provisions of both bills the commission is given the powers possessed by the Interstate Commerce Commission to compel the attendance and testimony of witnesses, and by both bills the commission is required to report to Congress instead of to the President, to whom the present Bureau of Corporations is required to report.

SENTIMENT PREPONDERANT FOR CREATION OF COMMISSION.

From what I have said, Mr. President, it will be seen how nearly along parallel lines the thoughts of the members of the House and Senate committees have traveled. While this course has been furthered by frequent conferences of individual members of the committees, the conclusions of the committees have undoubtedly been so similar because of the well-defined sentiment of the business men of the country in favor of the creation of a commission of the character proposed, and in a general way favoring the grant of the powers given in both bills to such commission. That such a sentiment exists can not be doubted. All over the country boards of trade and chambers of commerce have been requested by a committee representing them to express their views, and the expression in favor of such a commission has been overwhelming. The report of a referendum by the Chamber of Commerce of the United States shows that 646 boards of trade and chambers of commerce, which were members of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America, voted upon the question as to whether an interstate trade commission of five members, appointed by the President, of a bipartisan character, should be created by Congress.

The vote in favor of such a commission was overwhelming, 522 votes being cast in favor of creating such a commission and 124 votes only being cast against it.

Mr. THOMAS. When was that vote taken?

Mr. SAULSBURY. That vote, Mr. President, was taken somewhere about the 8th of April, I think, while these bills were under consideration, and it was reported to the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate by the gentlemen who represented the United States Chamber of Commerce.

I may also say, in that connection, that a number of the powers proposed by this bill to be vested in the trade commission were voted upon favorably in pretty much the same ratio by the chambers of commerce of the United States. I can designate them, if the Senator from Colorado desires me to do so, and I may do so when the particular provisions of the bill shall come up.

PUBLIC MIND TURNS TO COMMISSION GOVERNMENT FOR RELIEF.

It is true, Mr. President, that opposition to any legislation of this character is vigorously voiced by those who have opposed during this Congress any changes in our tariff or our banking laws. Such opposition bears all the earmarks of a similar origin, but for many years there has been growing up in this country a great public sentiment favoring the adoption of methods of administering justice and preventing wrong which were easily accessible to those threatened or oppressed by the unfair methods and practices of those seeking to establish monopoly on the ruins of competition. The delays and expense incident to obtaining redress for such wrongs in the courts have made adequate relief to litigants almost unattainable in these cases and, in the public mind there has been growing up a belief, which to some extent may be justified, that the courts were not efficient, because of the usual delay and expense in providing early, adequate, and inexpensive relief from oppressions of which such litigants complain.

This condition has turned men's minds favorably to the creation of commissions. I do not know, Mr. President, that I can follow as far as others may lead along the road to commission government, but it is doubtless true that expense, annoyance, and delay have been encountered in the courts, which improved methods of procedure might in a large measure avoid, and to a great extent this has caused men to turn to forms of commission government for relief. Dangerous as it is or may become, if it should become too dangerous, relief will doubtless be found for such evil, just as now we are seeking relief from the harassing and unfair practices, the oppressive expenses, delays, and annoyances which have to be met when resort is had to the courts for relief from monopoly and oppression.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF PROPOSED PROVISIONS.

This feeling that more efficient relief should be had than the courts can afford has led to the inclusion in this bill of the provision made in section 5 that unfair competition shall be unlawful, with the direction that the commission shall prevent corporations from using unfair methods of competition in commerce. When I first considered that provision, it did not seem to me—or, rather, I was in great doubt—that the specification or definition of what the unlawful act was, was sufficiently accurate to be enforced by either a commission or by the courts. Examination of the authorities, which have been several times cited to this Senate, caused me first to become doubtful as to my opinion and afterwards to conclude that probably such a provision as now included in the bill will be upheld by the Supreme Court. It is unnecessary for me to go over those decisions, they having been frequently cited in this debate.

It first appeared to me that the provision sought to enact recognized ethical standards into statute law. I doubted whether we could do this in such general terms, but there is nothing wrong or remarkable about it if we may constitutionally do so.

Courts have always recognized the customs of merchants, and it is my impression that under this act the commission and the courts will be called upon to consider and recognize the fair and unfair customs of merchants, manufacturers, and traders, and probably prohibit many practices and methods which have not heretofore been clearly recognized as unlawful.

THE STRAIGHTFORWARD BUSINESS MAN NEED HAVE NO FEAR.

Every man in his own business knows when a competitor is pursuing unfair methods. Every professional man knows when a competitor is guilty of unfair, unprofessional, and unethical conduct. It may be that heretofore we have been satisfied to allow only the usual punishment to come upon such persons as the violation of the ethics of a profession or a business in time naturally brings; but it is undoubtedly true that sentiment in this country has come to the point where it will, if it can, by law prohibit, prevent, make unlawful, and punish unfair practices in competitive business.

This bill, Mr. President, lends itself undoubtedly to the conjuring up of hobgoblins, to the predictions of evil, to dire prophecies of business uncertainty; but if, as I incline to think it will, the Supreme Court shall determine the words "unfair competition" to be sufficiently definite, I have no fear that men engaged in business will be unable to settle for themselves what they can and what they can not do. Every business man knows what is unfair in his own branch of the business. All of us, whether in business or professional life, know what is unfair competition. The lawyers who have so eloquently addressed the Senate on this section of the bill know, as every other lawyer knows, when the lawyer on the other side is resorting to unfair practices in competition with him or violating professional ethics.

It is a fair question, then, I think, to ask, if this portion of the bill is upheld by the Supreme Court, who will desire that men engaged in business in this country shall be able to use unfair practices in trade?

I have no fear of such hobgoblins as have been conjured up. The States of the Union have been endeavoring to prevent these practices by statute, and in some cases have done so. The courts of the country have found many practices and methods in business unfair and have prohibited them. If we may use, as I think we can, the generic term for such evils, then the honest and straightforward business man will have no fear about what he may do, but will feel relieved as to what competition may do to him, and I do not believe that his fears will be aroused because of the passage of this bill.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO BILL.

I think the provisions of section 5 can be and will be made more clear by an amendment to be offered thereto which will settle the exact status of a finding and order of the commission under section 5. I have offered such an amendment, and shall ask a vote thereon before this bill is reported from the committee.

The amendment I shall offer follows the words, as near as may be, of the interstate-commerce act. It provides that the findings of the commission shall only be prima facie evidence when the subject matter of the complaint shall be thereafter brought before a court upon a petition of the commission or of any person who may be interested in the commission's findings, and that in such event the case shall proceed before the court in accordance with the ordinary practice in all causes and actions of the character to which it may relate.

This morning I noticed that the distinguished Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] introduced a somewhat similar amendment, and it will be very interesting and very useful, I think, for the lawyers of the Senate to endeavor to perfect the bill so that there may be no reasonable complaint against section 5 regarding unfair practices. I think the business people of this country, if they may be led to fear anything because of the bill, can certainly be protected by some such amendment as that which I have suggested, or that which has been suggested by the distinguished Senator from South Dakota.

CARRYING OUT PARTY PLEDGES.

It seems, Mr. President, that the time has been reached in American politics when the declarations made by the great parties in their platforms have come to mean something; that they are not merely high-sounding and empty phrases, used to arouse the hopes of the voters of the country that something will be done if the party declaring in favor of measures should be successful at the next election. The electorate has come to regard the declarations of our platforms as pledges of a party policy, and now that the habit seems to have been indulged in of gratifying the expectations of the voters, of confirming these declarations as pledges and carrying them out in subsequent legislation, no step backward will soon be taken, and, for many years at least, those who are elected, after party pledges are made, will strive to carry out such pledges, and thus retain the confidence of the people.

We all remember very well when the campaign orator, after the election, used to successfully carry off charges of broken promises made to the people by saying that everyone knew that a platform was only intended for use in getting aboard the train; but we have lived to see the day when this jocular way of disappointing the just hopes and expectations of the voters has come to be rather a disreputable piece of business, and for that reason, when a party is now successful, the strongest argument which can be used in support of measures which are proposed is that pledges were made to the people before the party came to power that the legislation suggested would be enacted.

In the minds of the people of the country three pledges of the Democrats made in their platform adopted at the Baltimore convention stand out preeminent.

PROMISES ALREADY FULFILLED.

First, the promise that the tariff should be reformed, and reformed substantially, by reduction of the rates of duty, thus producing actual competition, chiefly in the necessaries of life. This pledge has been redeemed, and, as I believe, to the satisfaction of everyone. Dire predictions of disaster have proved groundless. Rosy predictions of benefits may not yet have been realized, but tendencies are good. Business has not been even sensibly disturbed, and all persons engaged in actual business in this country are looking hopefully and confidently to the future.

Closely allied to tariff reduction and reform was the promise that the control of the currency and credits would be taken out of the hands of those who had used it for private and personal ends, to the detriment of all the people, and you have seen how, by counsel and earnest effort, legislation was enacted concerning our banking interests, which now receives almost universal approbation.

TRADES COMMISSION BILL BLAZES THE WAY FOR BUSINESS FREEDOM.

Having provided for fair competition from without, having placed the ultimate control of our credits and currency in the possession of the representatives of the people, the greatest promise contained in the Baltimore platform remaining unredeemed is the declaration against the monopolization of business within the country itself and the pledge that those engaging in business here should not be strangled in their efforts by monopolies and trusts. The broad declaration of the Baltimore platform on this subject is this:

> A private monopoly is indefensible and intolerable. We therefore favor the vigorous enforcement of the criminal as well as the civil law against trusts and trust officials and demand the enactment of such additional legislation as may be necessary to make it impossible for a private monopoly to exist in the United States.

That, Mr. President, is a rather large order to be included in so few words, but it blazes the way toward the end to which we are working. It points out the path which we are to tread. It shows us the direction in which we shall move, and in obedience to this declaration of policy, in the effort in part to carry out this pledge, this trades commission bill is proposed.

NO OPEN HOSTILITY SHOWN TO BILL.

So far as I have been able to observe no trusted organ of public opinion, no leader of any party of known ability, no publicist of high repute in the whole country ventures to oppose the objects toward which we progress. Probably, as in the case of the tariff bill, probably, as in the case of the currency bill, both honest and dishonest criticisms will be made of the provisions now in this bill and those which will finally be written into law, but there will be no active, open hostility shown to the projects in the bill we now propose, nor will there be a defense openly made of the practices which have been condemned by settled opinion throughout the country and to stop which the laws proposed will be enacted.

The great success which has finally attended the efforts of the Interstate Commerce Commission to regulate and, in a large measure, control interstate carriers, the good faith and preeminent ability shown by the members of that commission in exercising the powers given them, has proved the wisdom of the institution of that commission and of the methods adopted by it in carrying out the purposes of its creation. No one would now go back to those conditions which prevailed in this country prior to the institution of the Interstate Commerce Commission and prior to the enactment of the antitrust laws.

EFFECTS OF PROPOSED TRADE COMMISSION ALTOGETHER GOOD.

The country has been educated. It has come to understand that business, and I am not speaking of it disrespectfully, must be controlled; that business men of large affairs may become grave dangers to the common weal; that ambitious, able, and unscrupulous men may use the ordinary instruments and methods of commerce, if they are unhindered by statute and criminal laws, in such a way as to deprive great numbers of their fellow men of fair opportunities of livelihood.

Like all great reforms the antitrust laws—the laws against discrimination—required many years for successful demonstration of their usefulness. It is a curious thing that in the early stages of the construction of the Sherman law its provisions were invoked successfully, I think four times out of five, against the trade-unions of the country. Human rights were less powerful and could be more successfully attacked before the courts under the Sherman Act than rights of property. Gradually, however, the provisions of that law, coming to be understood, were declared by courts, and finally by the Supreme Court, to be effective in the cases of great combinations of corporate wealth, and are now so highly esteemed that one may safely predict that act will never be repealed, and will only be most carefully amended to extend its beneficial provisions.

An instrumentality which has proved to be so useful as the Interstate Commerce Commission in relation to interstate transportation is now to be created in its proper sphere and proper limitations by means of a trade commission, which will have the power of independent investigation and report and of assisting the law officers of the Government and the courts in the determination of facts which may be material for proper conclusions when interstate trade questions are up for decision or when complete investigation of interstate trade conditions is necessary to enable intelligent action to be taken by the Government.

This bill creates that instrumentality, and in its effects I believe will be altogether good.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, during the discussion of this very important subject by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] attention was directed to the paucity of the senatorial attendance. I think, therefore, it is but fair to direct attention to the fact that during the discussion of this subject this morning by the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY], also a member of the Committee on Interstate Commerce, the average attendance on the other side of the Chamber was six, and frequently much less than that, and at one time consisted solely of the senior Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. NEWLANDS obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PITTMAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. JONES. I rise to a point of order. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I do not understand that the Senator can take me off the floor for the purpose of suggesting anything.

Mr. JONES. I did not expect to take the Senator off the floor, but simply wanted to do business when the Senate was present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nevada refuses to yield.

Mr. JONES. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to make a few remarks.

Mr JONES. I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington will state his point of order.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I appeal to the Senator from Washington to let me address myself for just a few moments with reference to some remarks of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. JONES. I merely wanted to have the Senate here, so that the Senator could address them; but in view of the appeal of the Senator I will not raise the point of order.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think it would be rather a risky proceeding just now.

Mr. JONES. I will not insist on the Senate being here until the Senator gets through.

BILL THOROUGHLY CONSIDERED.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] has called attention to the similarity between the House bill known as the Covington bill and the Senate bill. I wish to say with reference to that, and with a view to showing how thoroughly this whole matter has been gone over and digested, that the House and the Senate committees started with the same bill, the bill being introduced in the House by Mr. Clayton, then chairman of the Judiciary Committee of that body, and the bill in the Senate being introduced by myself.

With reference to that bill, Mr. Clayton made a statement in the House, to which he appended a press dispatch explaining its general character, as follows:

> The bill will be introduced at the same time by Representative Clayton and Senator NEWLANDS. The bill is modeled after the lines of what is commonly known as the Newlands bill, which was introduced in the Senate by Senator NEWLANDS, and involves the fundamental idea that a trade commission shall be created, consisting of five members, with full inquisitorial powers into the operation and organization of all corporations engaged in interstate commerce other than common carriers.

The question comes up that we are now considering the Covington bill and not the Clayton bill. With reference to that, I have to say that the Clayton bill, instead of being referred to the Judiciary Committee of the House, was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House. There it was amended in certain particulars, and was then reintroduced with the amendments by Mr. COVINGTON, a member of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce of the House, and became known as the Covington bill. That bill therefore was considered in a tentative way by the majority members of the Judiciary Committee of the House, and was afterwards fully considered by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House for some months before final action, which resulted in its passage in the House without even a roll call. The bill similar in character introduced by myself was also during that period considered by the Senate committee, and the differences between the House bill and the Senate bill simply represent slight differences in the contraction or expansion of the original measure.

With reference to the original measure, I wish to say—and I comment upon that simply with a view to showing what mature deliberation this bill has received—that the so-called Newlands bill was introduced by me early in 1911, over three years ago, and that its principles had been prior to that time the subject of discussion by me repeatedly upon the floor of the Senate in the consideration of the trust question. That bill was referred to the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate.

Shortly afterwards, in 1911, at the instance of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], who was at that time the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Committee, that committee entered upon a laborious investigation of the entire trust question with reference to the necessity of further and additional legislation. The committee took 3,000 pages of testimony and, at the conclusion of an exhaustive consideration of the subject, in which publicists, economists, lawyers, and others of the country took part, almost unanimously declared in a report, whilst they recommended no particular bill, in favor of the organization of a trade commission. That report was prepared by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] and was made early in 1913.

The surprising thing in this lengthy deliberation upon this measure—deliberation in both Houses—is that the measure as presented to-day differs very little from the measure as originally presented, which, it seems to me, is conclusive proof that the various provisions of these bills represent the judgment, after long deliberation, of the most experienced men in both the Senate and the House.

The original bill, which was introduced by me in January, 1911, was before the Interstate Commerce Committee under the so-called Clapp investigation. The first hearing had was with reference to that bill, and whilst the general investigation was proceeding the members of the committee busied themselves in perfecting that bill. It was the only bill which they took up for serious consideration at all. The original bill was Senate bill 2941 of the Sixty-second Congress, first session, introduced in January, 1911. As the result of their deliberations that bill was amended and perfected, and it was subsequently introduced by me as amended and became Senate bill 5585 of the Sixty-second Congress, first session. It appears on page 39 of the report of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate on the pending bill.

Compare those two bills and you will find that they do not differ in essentials, but I observe two or three things in the bill as first presented that have been revived by the recommendations of the Senate at this session. The bill, as I originally introduced it, provided, in section 10:

> That said commission may at any time, upon complaint of any person, corporation, or body, or upon its own initiative, * * * revoke and cancel the registration of any corporation * * * for * * * the use of materially unfair or oppressive methods of competition.

So that in 1911 the bill which was originally introduced contained this provision with reference to unfair competition.

It is true that the Senate committee at that time, in the tentative evolution of this bill, left out that provision; but it has been revived to-day in the Senate, and is presented in this body by the almost unanimous vote, I believe, of the Interstate Commerce Committee of the Senate.

I present these considerations as reasons why we should have an early vote upon this bill. There is nothing new in it. There is nothing startling in it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. Are we not ready to vote this afternoon?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I am afraid we would find difficulty in getting a quorum, but that will be tested. I know the Senator from Idaho is ready to proceed to a vote at any time, but I think some of the Members have absented themselves for the holiday, and it would be impossible to get a quorum this afternoon. I present this matter at this time simply with a view to urging an early vote upon this bill, and it seems to me the logical thing to do, for the bill will be the basis of further legislation. It is quite probable that the Judiciary Committee, when it makes its report, will call for the enforcement through the interstate trade commission of certain provisions of that bill, particularly with reference to interlocking directors and holding companies, and it is well to have the commission in existence.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. It may be true that this bill is theoretically perfect and that it has been given ample consideration by those who are familiar with its terms and charged with the duty of investigating it; but many things which are theoretically desirable are practically difficult of operation.

This commission, if I correctly understand the scope of the bill, is one which can and probably will assume jurisdiction of the commercial affairs and operation of every corporation engaged in interstate traffic. It is within our experience that every man or company engaged in competitive business unsuccessfully is very apt to attribute his failure or his partial success not to any failings or defects of his own, but to the unfair competition of his adversaries; and I assume that such will be the practical operation of this bill. That means that this commission of five members will be charged with the duty of investigating or, in fact, of trying all of the complaints that are brought to its attention or filed before it and all of the public complaints which are directed to the operations of this, that, or the other concern.

I wish to inquire of the Senator whether the committee has taken into consideration the fact that this commission in all probability will be swamped almost from its inception with controversies about which it is expected to act, and that its limitations will be such that, instead of expediting, it may prove a very serious obstacle to the removal of those practices which are here condemned, because of the multitude of controversies brought to its attention and its inability to proceed except with one case at a time.

It seems to me that is one of the most formidable practical considerations for us to determine before we ultimately commit ourselves to this bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will say to the Senator that all those matters were seriously considered by the committee. They were considered by the committee two years ago in making its report and by the committee in making its recent report.

Mr. THOMAS. That being the case, I want to ask the Senator if he has come to the conclusion that it is humanly possible for a commission of five members to begin to transact the overwhelming amount of business that is going to be launched upon it immediately after its organization?

WORK OF COMMISSION.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think it is. I do not admit that the work will be overwhelming. I assume that we will have appointed upon this commission very high-class men, very able men—lawyers, economists, and men of prominence—who are familiar with the industries of the country. I assume that as they proceed they will gain knowledge, information, and experience. I assume that they will make such rules for the consideration of complaints that come before them as will not permit the tribunal itself to be overwhelmed. I assume that they will have so many skilled employees and experts and examiners that the matters will be presented to the commission only after the most thorough and exhaustive inquiry and after the points of difference have been focused. I assume that they will take heed of the maxim of the law, "de minimis lex non curat," and that they will not allow this tribunal to be diverted into an organization for the consideration of petty squabbles, but that they will realize that the important thing for them to do is to lay down great principles of business and standards of conduct that will be accepted by the business world; and I believe that the decision of a few important cases will adjust those matters.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, it makes no difference how capable a man may be, how earnest, intelligent, or conscientious he may be, there is a physical limit to his possibilities. He can do only so much. The Supreme Court of the United States is composed of a class of men conceded to be as this commission, I trust, will be, and as the Senator says it will be. It became swamped with business some time ago, in consequence of which other tribunals had to be created in order that the business of the country might go on.

The Senator says this commission will have so many skilled experts and assistants that it can transact its business through their agency. That raises the question as to the extent to which this multitude of assistants will go. Are we going to have thousands upon thousands of employees to whom will be delegated the powers of this commission, and who will consider at second hand these enormously important matters and determine whether a given instance brought to their attention is or is not unfair competition?

The Senator calls my attention to the old maxim that the law takes no notice of small things; but, of course, his experience as a lawyer tells him that nothing is small to the man or concern interested in the thing. The term is a relative one; and I am not aware that any controversy can be so small as to justify this commission, if it is created, in setting it aside because of that reason. It may be, and generally is, of tremendous importance to the interests which call the attention of the commission to it.

I am unable to bring my mind at present to the point of voting for a commission consisting of five men which is going to have jurisdiction of the vast multitude of controversies that will arise under this bill, and practically exercise that jurisdiction over the commercial transactions of 100,000,000 people, expressed very largely through the corporate entities that come within the jurisdiction of the commission. In other words, I think it will be swamped at the start. It will be a good deal like trying to crowd 10,000 men upon a ship having a capacity of less than 100. You not only make no progress, but the ship itself is imperiled, and will be wrecked before it begins its voyage.

UNFOUNDED FEARS REGARDING THE WORK.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I feel assured that the Senator's forebodings will not be realized. He will find that every move upon the line of reform requiring investigation to ascertain the facts and make the decisions has been met by the same argument. When the Interstate Commerce Commission was organized the same forebodings were indulged. That commission is undoubtedly a hard-worked commission, and yet its members do not speak as if they were overloaded, and they are perfectly confident not only of their ability to deal with the matters under their present jurisdiction but also of their capacity to take hold of the difficult question of railway securities in the future. They have already taken hold of additional work in the shape of railway valuation and have organized a division of valuation for that purpose.

The same forebodings were indulged with reference to the pure-food law. It was claimed that we were about to organize a body of examiners and experts that would intrude themselves into business throughout the country.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, has not that identical thing been one of the consequences of the passage of the pure-food act?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not think so. I think it has met with complaint from the parties whom the law was intended to reform, but I have heard no complaint from the masses of the people. There is no subject we can undertake with reference to which gloomy forebodings can not be indulged.

Complaint is made here that we give large powers. Those who make them seem to be unconscious of the fact that those large powers, capable of being applied to all, will as a matter of fact be applied only to a few. You might as well say that when we are passing laws regarding murder and robbery and larceny, which involve every man, woman, and child in the country, we are undertaking the passage of laws that will break down because of the area of their operations.

There is not a thing in human society that requires regulation and control that may not by some possibility require vast exertion upon the part of society; but that is no reason why society should not proceed with energy and courage in its work. Thus far we have found that these great reforms which have been initiated, which have involved the employment under prominent officials of numerous subemployees, have worked well and efficiently and to the advantage of the people at large. I assume that the large force given to this body will greatly aid them in their operations. It must be recollected that the Supreme Court has no such force.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. I wanted to ask the Senator in regard to an amendment that has suggested itself to me that may possibly improve one of the provisions of the bill, and I want to get his idea in regard to it.

As I understand, it is believed that this commission, after it has worked a while and investigated and passed on a good many cases, will be able to establish or will establish by its decisions certain rules, regulations, and so forth, which, if known to the trade generally, will enable business men to shape their conduct as far as competition is concerned so as to avoid unfair competition; but there is no provision in the bill for the publication of the judgments or opinions of the commission.

PUBLICATION OF DECISIONS.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think such a provision ought to be inserted, if it is not already covered by the provision regarding publicity.

Mr. NORRIS. That was what I wanted to ask the Senator. There is another reason, it seems to me, why that should be done. If no publicity were given and their opinions were not published, if at some time in the future a commission should be in power that wanted to favor some particular corporation or line of corporations they would be enabled to do it without being exposed; whereas if their judgments and opinions were always published and were accessible to the business world, such a thing would be almost impossible, because they would be like the opinions of the courts—they would become precedents and would be followed in future investigations.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think, however, we should not be too insistent upon formal opinions. I think there should be a brief statement of the facts of the case and the decision.

Mr. NORRIS. Well, similar to the opinions of courts. As a rule they set forth the facts that are established.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. BORAH. It seems to me that if the commission should get started off wrong in the first place it would be very unfortunate to publish those opinions.

Mr. NORRIS. It would be. There is no doubt about that. It would be a good deal like the commerce court, probably; it would be legislated out of existence.

Mr. BORAH. But another point is this: It would be something like the decisions of our Commissioners of the General Land Office. They are a precedent for no one, because they reverse them next day if they desire to do so. They are not bound by them at all.

The homesteader or the entryman upon the public land gets no comfort out of a decision of the General Land Office, because he may follow it and find himself with another decision upon his particular case. This commission might render a judgment or an opinion as to what was unfair competition upon a particular state of facts coming up from one contestant or two, but it would be no guide for the next man. If he should comply with it, they nevertheless might establish another rule. In other words, they could not rely upon it as a precedent.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator will permit me one moment, I did not suppose the Senator from Nebraska wished a formal opinion in every case. I think it would be a mistake to exact that, because the preparation of such opinions must exhaust a good deal of time, and probably would prevent the commission from doing a great deal of practical work. I assumed he simply wished publicity with reference to the cases that were brought before them and their decisions.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, with reference to the suggestion made by the Senator from Idaho, comparing this commission with the Commissioner of the General Land Office, I should like to say that it seems to me this commission can not be fairly compared with the Commissioner of the General Land Office, but could be more fairly compared with a court, where everybody acknowledges respect is paid to the precedents that are established, and the opinions rendered on findings are used as a guide in subsequent cases, and litigants, knowing what those judgments are and what those opinions are, govern their conduct accordingly.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office does, I think, just what the Senator from Idaho says. I know that men engaged as attorneys in the land business never pay any attention to what a former decision is when they commence their case, but go on the theory that by the time it winds its weary way through the different departments and gets up to the Commissioner of the General Land Office or the Secretary of the Interior the decision may be reversed. That is true; but the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the Secretary of the Interior, who is the supreme court in that department, hold political offices. The personnel of the office changes every few years, with every administration, and sometimes several times during one administration.

I take it, however, that this commission is going to be somewhat similar to a court, or to the Interstate Commerce Commission. Of course, if we should have a commission appointed which, as the Senator suggests, would start off wrong, it would be very unfortunate, and might result in such a condition of affairs that it would be necessary for Congress to repeal the law; but I do not believe it is fair to assume that. I think we ought to assume that the President will be careful in his selection of these men. He ought to be more careful in the selection of the first men than perhaps at any other time, in order to get them started right, and in order that we may have the best men that can be obtained to fill the places. Assuming that, I think it would be fair to say that they would not start off wrong.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will pardon me for a moment, I wish to say to the Senator from Nevada that I do not know whether I get his idea exactly or not; but my idea was that this commission ought to render opinions and publish their opinions, in which, I take it, in every case they would set forth the facts. They would make findings. They ought to be published; and there ought to be, I think, a provision in the bill for their publication, just as we have provided for the publication of the opinions of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Every business man would follow those decisions and would know what the decisions had been, and therefore what they were likely to be in the future.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think we could parallel the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission; but I do not understand that the action of the Interstate Commerce Commission involves findings and an opinion in every case.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska a question. The Senator speaks about publishing the decisions as to what constitutes an unfair practice or unfair competition. I observed the other day that a student of this subject, in undertaking to determine what might constitute unfair competition, was unable to designate or conjure up anything which would constitute unfair competition other than that which had already been denounced by the courts of this country as unfair competition. The courts have already laid down many rules with reference to it, and they are found in the decisions and under statutes for the violation of which parties may be sent to jail or to the penitentiary. Now, those are well known to the business world, and have been for some time; and yet, notwithstanding that fact, they are constantly violated and constantly disregarded by the few who have been disregarding them from the beginning.

Can we assume that the mere publication of the decisions of a commission, without any power to punish and without any power to do anything except to have an injunction issued—and, by the way, this is the most remarkable exhibition of government by injunction we have had yet—will cause the business world to pay any more regard to it than they would to the findings or decisions of courts?

Mr. NORRIS. Probably not; but the Senator must assume, it seems to me, because opinions of courts have been published to enforce the construction of statutes, thus defining what the law is, and because people continue to violate them after such publication, that their publication has not accomplished a great deal of good. It seems to me that if the Senator's argument were carried out logically we would not publish any of the opinions of any of the courts. They will be violated, and this law will be violated, I have no doubt.

Mr. BORAH. My argument was not addressed to the proposition of the mere question of publication or nonpublication. I think it is all right to publish these decisions. It will perhaps add some information to the question that is involved. My argument was addressed to the proposition, How can we hope to stop unfair competition under the activities of a commission which has no power to do anything but go into court and ask and secure an injunction when we already have the same rules and principles announced in bodies where they have power to send men to jail or to the penitentiary? Under the Sherman Act these practices have passed in review, nor will it add anything to have another tribunal, possibly not quite of so much dignity as the Supreme Court, announcing these rules again.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator's question involves, of course, the entire proposition contained in the bill, and whether or not it is wise to pass it. He can not expect me to answer that question, of course, without taking a great deal of time, and I should probably not be able——

Mr. BORAH. I think the Senator is fully equipped to answer it if it is answerable.

Mr. NORRIS. It seems to me the question is not absolved from all doubt. While I am one of those who favor this bill, and I am one who expects to vote for it, I am not one of those who believe that it would clear the atmosphere entirely. I may be disappointed in it. At least, I am not satisfied with the present condition. If I had my way about it, if it were left to me, I think I could devise a plan that would be better, or at least that would suit me better; but I am willing to take anything that offers a fair chance of being successful; and I think this bill will improve the situation. As I understand, this commission will assist in every way possible; and if we have the right kind of a commission, and it works diligently, it will be able to assist in enforcing the laws that exist now.

Mr. THOMAS and Mr. NEWLANDS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield, and to whom?

Mr. NORRIS. I was not aware that I had the floor. If I have, I will cheerfully yield.

Mr. THOMAS. Then I ask recognition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado allow me to make a brief reply to the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator from Idaho will be equally brief in his reply to the reply of the Senator from Nevada, I will yield.

Mr. NORRIS. My judgment is that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] has the floor. I asked him to yield to me.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will only take a few moments.

UNFAIR TRADE PRACTICES.

The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] says we have never been able to point out any cases of unfair competition that have not already been covered by the decisions of the courts. Assuming that that is a fact, simply for the purpose of the argument, the Senator must realize that under existing law it is necessary for every individual who is injured to institute a suit, and that suit must be instituted, as a rule, against very powerful competitors—these large corporations which resort to these unfair practices for the purpose of destroying their pigmy competitors. That means the employment of counsel and a suit either at law or in equity. One of the very purposes of this bill is to make the wrong of that individual the wrong of society, and to create an organization that will take up his wrong and compel the corporation perpetrating it to desist from that practice, and that, too, practically without expense to the party injured.

Mr. BORAH. That is a sword that cuts both ways. It may be that we have arrived at a time in this country when we want to extend our paternalistic tendency to the proposition of trying people's lawsuits.

Mr. NEWLANDS. We have done that in the Interstate Commerce Commission act, the Senator will observe.

Mr. BORAH. I know we have. I am going to discuss that in a few moments; but that is quite a different proposition.

Mr. President, if we have arrived at that time, perhaps we will have to go forward and take care of responsibility; but when you bring your lawsuit in this case, it does not hurt the monopolists or the monopolistic combines anything like what it does when the individual brings his suit under the Sherman anti-trust law. While you are taking care of a small man in this fight, you are also taking care of the monopolist. He escapes without any treble damages, without any trouble of moment, and with no punishment and without any costs, or without anything commensurate with the wrong. All he gets is a reprimand from the Government; and he will go out to find other victims, and you have got to have another lawsuit.

Mr. NEWLANDS. They can be punished for contempt for refusing to obey the order of the court.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; for contempt in that particular matter; but as to the wrongs done and other wrongs the contempt does not affect them, nor the injunction, either.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I beg pardon; the action of the tribunal is that the organization discontinue that particular practice.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It must discontinue it as to all.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I did not yield the floor for an extended controversy.

Mr. BORAH. I thought I had the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. No; the Senator from Idaho has not the floor; but I am willing to yield; I do not want to cut him off in the midst of his statement, but, as I say, I have the floor.

Mr. BORAH. I will speak later.

Mr. THOMAS. I am perfectly willing that the Senator from Idaho shall proceed and finish his statement.

Mr. BORAH. No, Mr. President, I will wait.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall occupy the attention of the Senate for just a moment. My purpose in asking recognition was that I might express my emphatic dissent concerning the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] relative to the publication of the decisions of this commission. The Senator from Nebraska is one of our most industrious and capable Members, and his views upon questions both of principle and detail generally address themselves to my own judgment, but in this suggestion I can not agree. For my part, I wish we could enact an amendment to the Constitution of the United States making it a capital offense to publish another book of reports either of the courts or of commissions.

The Senator from Nebraska has referred to the effect upon the public of law decisions as constituting a rule of action. That may have been the happy legal condition of this country at one time, but the multitude of decisions ground out by over 50 appellate courts and dumped upon an unfortunate public has resulted in bewildering and bedeviling the law to such an extent that the best attorney in the country is unable to do more than to tell his clients what the law is, but not what the courts are going to decide it to be.

A great many years ago old De Quincey wrote a treatise which he called "The Lawless Science of the Law." That treatise was devoted to the practice of issuing decision after decision, each of which, in its turn differing from its predecessors, only served to confound and to confuse. If De Quincey were living now he would not only witness a verification of his criticisms, but if he attempted to thread through the mazes of decisions in legal principles the probabilities are he would end in a lunatic asylum. I will engage to find decisions, if you will give me time enough, that will justify the proposition that cold feet are a sufficient basis for an action of divorce; I will also agree to find decisions to the contrary; and that is true of every conceivable question that can present itself. So instead of clarifying, the constant publication of authorities only muddies and confuses jurisprudence. If this commission is also going to be turned loose upon the community with its vast number of decisions, its multitude of determinations, the result will only be to further befog and bewilder.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to suggest to the Senator that, while I agree to a great extent with what he has said about the multiplicity of decisions and the fact that you can get a decision on both sides of almost every disputed question, that does not apply to this particular commission, for the reason that the principal thing, as I understand, that they will be called upon to determine, so far as section 5 is concerned, is what is "unfair competition" in business. That is a very indefinite term, as everybody will have to admit. There will be various circumstances arise in various cases, and the question will then be asked of this commission, "Does this constitute unfair competition?" The business world, the men who are engaged in business that draws them into competition with their fellow men, will be particularly interested in what this commission decides under various circumstances to constitute "unfair competition." There ought to be a place where they can inform themselves in regard to it. There will not be a multiplicity of decisions on that question, because there will be only one tribunal whose decisions will interest the public.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, unfair competition, like fraud, is a creature of protean shapes. It assumes one attitude to-day and another to-morrow. As with fraud, so it will be with unfair competition. In fraud there is a constant race between the rogue and the chancellor. In unfair competition there is going to be a constant race between the corporation and the commission, and, of course, opinions will have to be ground out accordingly.

Mr. BORAH. Which one does the Senator think will win the race?

Mr. THOMAS. Thus far, for centuries, it has been neck and neck between the rogue and the chancellor. My impression is that the race between the commission and the corporation will be equally inconclusive and equally interesting.

The Senator, if I understood him correctly, a few moments ago drew an analogy between the proposed reports of the commission and those of the courts as contradistinguished from the reports of the published decisions of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I think the analogy is good, but I must confess that I can not bring my mind to the expediency of publishing them.

Mr. President, a word more upon another subject, and then I shall yield the floor. I agree that the Interstate Commerce Commission has been a great agency of good; there is no question but that as at present equipped and organized it is an effective arm for the control of the great transportation interests of the country; but that it has proven to be even a satisfactory means of solving the problems of transportation and of monopoly in this country, I deny. I think in many respects it has been a success, but in many other respects it has demonstrated the impossibility of regulation whenever the thing attempted to be regulated is so organized as that it can impede or prevent the enforcement of the regulation.

The Interstate Commerce Commission came into power in 1887, if I remember correctly, or rather it came into existence. It had but little power until long afterwards, but of course it always had the power to examine into and to decide upon a given proposition coming before it and within its jurisdiction.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] a day or two ago said all of the great combinations of the country had their origin subsequent to the organization of the commission. I do not think that that is strictly correct, my recollection being that a number of them existed prior to that time and that their existence and practices promoted very powerfully the enactment of the law creating the commission; but it is a fact that every one of the great railway combinations of the day is younger than is the Interstate Commerce Commission; it is a fact that every one of these combinations which has come to grief through mismanagement, overcapitalization, and exploitation has had its inception and its end subsequent to the creation of the commission. You can not name one of them but that that statement will apply to it, so far as I am able now to discover.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. The principal thing which the Interstate Commerce Commission has accomplished, in my mind, is that it has demonstrated that control—absolute control—or ownership by the Government of the great transportation lines of the country is necessary. Of course that means the doing away with the Interstate Commerce Commission except as an agency for the mechanical operation of the system; and there never will be—I am neither a prophet nor the son of a prophet, but it is my conviction that there never will be a satisfactory regulation of the great transportation companies of America so long as the companies themselves are in control of their respective systems, and therefore are so equipped as that they can bring to naught and to nothingness the laws of the United States and the regulations of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I yield now to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that whilst these great abuses in the way of enormous consolidations, accompanied by overcapitalization, have grown up since the organization of the Interstate Commerce Commission, yet the Interstate Commerce Commission has had no power, and has not to-day, over the subject of capitalization, and I think it is fair to assume that if they had been given that power these abuses would not have grown up. We are about to remedy that matter now.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask the Senator from Nevada a question?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator from Idaho for that purpose.

Mr. BORAH. What advantage does the Senator from Nevada see in applying the antitrust law to the railroads, in view of the fact that the Interstate Commerce Commission fixes the rates? What objection is there to the unification of ownership if corporations are subject to efficient regulation and control by a commission?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Well, Mr. President, I do not think there is any objection to the proper unification of the ownership. I think that ought to be advanced. As to the overcapitalization which has accompanied that unification of ownership, I admit that it is not essential that the Interstate Commerce Commission should consider that in fixing its rates; but we do know that, as a matter of fact, the large issues of stocks and bonds finally get into the hands of innocent purchasers, and as a result of the nonaction of society in properly controlling its creations—these great corporations—that those equities do have a powerful influence upon the regulating bodies—so much so——

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. If the Senator will permit me one word further—so much so that the Supreme Court itself, in laying down the rule for fixing rates, has declared that capitalization is a factor among others to be considered in rate fixing.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am aware of that view; but the question which I asked was concerning a different phase of it. I agree with the Senator perfectly that the capitalization of railroads should be controlled and regulated, and undoubtedly that is one of the things which we ought to do; but the question which I asked was, assuming that the regulation of the capitalization has been satisfactory, What objection would there be to all the railroads being owned by one company or three or four companies or half a dozen companies, in view of the fact that the charges which they may make are to be fixed by a commission?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think there is some advantage in having some degree of competition between great business. I do believe that the railroads should be organized into great systems running east and west and north and south and having connecting ocean steamships, and so forth. I have no objection to the organization of such systems on a very gigantic scale; but I do think it is important that we should keep at least 10 or 15 or, perhaps, 20 systems, so that we can have 8 or 10 systems competitive with each other, in a measure, as to service, efficiency, comfort of their passengers, and so forth, running east and west and the same number running north and south. But I think the tendency toward consolidation is a good one, provided they are not allowed to commit a fraud upon the public by overcapitalizing; and I think it is the duty of the State to see to it that they are not overcapitalized.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the question which I asked might indicate that I believed in the unification of the ownership of the railroads. I do not. I am a firm believer in competition, and I believe in only such unification as is necessary to make through connecting lines of transportation across the country; but the purpose of the question which I asked was to elucidate the proposition that will become the argument in favor of tremendous units, combinations, and monopolies in the industrial world. It will be said, if you can regulate prices or regulate competition, there is no reason why one firm should not own all the oil interests of the United States; there is no reason why some distinguished friend of reform should not control all the farm-implement industry in the United States; and there is no reason why all of this and that should not be in one hand.

That is the proposition to which I am opposed. I do not care what form of regulation you have, whenever you establish that condition in this Republic you establish two classes—the class that own the property and the children who are born inside of the charmed circle of property and influence, and the class which do not own property and the children who are born outside of the charmed circle of influence and property—and you tear down the only ladder by which the child born upon the outside can ever raise himself to power upon the inside. The law of mortmain, in another form, from of old will work its hideous and hellish results, and the price of such regulation will be independent citizenship.

Mr. THOMAS. I now yield to the Senator from Nebraska, who, I understand, desires to ask a question.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not think, Mr. President, I have any question to ask. What has been said by the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Idaho has answered the question I had in mind. I would like to say, however, if the Senator will yield to me, that I do not believe there will be anybody—at least no one who thinks as I do—who will dispute the desirability of preventing the bringing about of the condition described by the Senator from Idaho. We may disagree, and probably do, as to whether this particular bill will have a tendency in that direction or whether it will have a tendency in the other direction; but the desirability of preventing one man from owning all the oil, another man from owning all the railroads, and another man from owning all the product of some other activity in life is very great. It seems to me that we have already gone too far in that direction. My own idea is that, regardless of the legislation that is now pending, we ought to legislate along lines that would prevent the piling up of the immense fortunes and the ownership of immense quantities of land and of the natural products of the earth. I thought I was reaching that state of affairs when I offered, during the consideration of the tariff bill, an amendment imposing an inheritance tax graduated so high that when inheritances were above $50,000,000, 75 per cent would be taken for the State. I believe that such a provision of law would go a great way toward remedying that evil, which I believe all thoughtful men realize exists and against which we must legislate at some time.

We must take some steps to prevent the acquisition of different lines of activity in the hands of one man or set of men, or bring about just what the Senator from Idaho has described—one class of people who will practically own not only the earth but the people who are on it, so that the latter will become slaves rather than free, intelligent, and competitive citizens.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think we are all agreed as to the dangers which have been so eloquently outlined by the Senator from Idaho, and also as to the necessity of such legislation as we can enact that may do away with, or, at least, minimize the existence of those threatened evils. I also realize that our differences are very largely those of procedure, and out of our deliberations I trust that much good will come.

I shall not enter into a discussion at the present time either of the evils themselves or of this proposed remedy. I wanted to emphasize what seemed to me to be the chief thing that has been accomplished by the Interstate Commerce Commission, being, of course, its failure to cope successfully with those interests which are confided to its keeping but which, at the same time, are so far independent of it as that they can minimize or bring to naught, in whole or in part, the provisions and regulations which are prescribed for their proper government and operation.

It is a remarkable fact that the president of what I believe to be the first railroad commission ever created in the United States outlined precisely this result as necessarily following from a control which is opposed, and must be opposed, to the interest, as well as to the authority, of those against whom it is directed. Charles Francis Adams was the chairman of the first Massachusetts railway commission, which, I believe, was the first organized in the country. He made the statement, I think, in the first report of that commission to the Massachusetts Legislature or to the governor, among other things, that:

> Should the legislature delegate a power in this regard (specific rate regulation) to the present or any other board of commissioners, it would simply destroy it in so doing. A responsibility would be imposed unsustained by any executive power. An authority to regulate fares and freights over roads owned, controlled, and operated by others would place those in whom such authority was reposed in an entirely false and impossible position. Those managing the roads could produce what results they saw fit; they could easily demonstrate, by apparent practical workings, the absurdity of anything which was distasteful to them; they could reduce to real failures the most correctly reasoned theories. It is useless for the legislature to look for satisfactory results from the labors of any board which can work only through reluctant agents, and the position of one who can direct but can not execute is in the last degree unfortunate. It resembles nothing so much as that of a military commander all of whose subordinates feel a direct and lively interest in his failure.

Mr. CLAPP. When was that report made, if the Senator please?

Mr. THOMAS. I can not give the Senator the exact date; I think it was in 1869; at any rate, it was some time ago.

I think, Mr. President, it can be demonstrated that the great monopolies in the country owe their power or have their genesis in an illegitimate identification with the transportation interests of the country. The tariff has had its effect, and other causes have perhaps been operative, but the fundamental proposition is that he who controls the transportation of a country controls the destinies of that country. An old poet many years ago said "I care not who writes the laws of my country so long as I can write its songs." Any man having a business requiring transportation can easily say, "I care not who else is in this line of business, so long as I have an understanding with the great lines of transportation."

I think the whole question of monopoly can be largely solved by absolute Government control of the lines of transportation of the United States, so that there can be no such thing as an affiliation between private interests needing their agencies and services and the transportation companies themselves. Of course I do not mean to say that it is a panacea—nothing can be said to be a complete corrective—but if we would only exercise our reasoning powers, go back to the cause of these huge aggregations, and then remove the cause we would have taken the longest possible step forward toward the emancipation of the industries of this country and the restoration of individual opportunity everywhere. Hence I am becoming every day more and more, as I consider the subject, an advocate of absolute Government control; and, if that does not work, then of Government ownership, to the end that the transportation agencies of the Nation may through such ownership be completely divorced from the great business interests of the country.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have listened since my first impression to considerable argument in regard to the powers of this commission in defining "unfair competition" and enforcing fair competition. I have not been convinced that I was in error, but the more I have investigated the subject the more authority I have found for the support of my position. We passed the Sherman antitrust law in 1890, and in that we prohibited all restraint of interstate trade, and all monopoly, and all steps looking to monopoly of interstate trade. The first decisions of the Supreme Court seemed to sustain the law as it was popularly understood, that it prohibited all restraints. In the trans-Missouri freight case the point was made by the attorneys for the defense that the defendants were railroads and that it could not be that the Congress intended to prohibit restraint entirely; that a reasonable amount of restraint between public carriers was necessary and was beneficial, but the court said:

This law prohibits all contracts in restraint of trade.

The matter remained in that condition for some time; but finally, in the Standard Oil case and the American Tobacco case, a construction was given to the law which was almost universally criticized. Why? Because it was said that the court had rendered the statute unenforceable by rendering it uncertain; that instead of saying "All contracts in restraint of trade," it had practically said "all contracts in unreasonable restraint of trade"; and therefore the question arose as to whether or not this statute, which before was apparently certain, was rendered uncertain and unfavorable. The contention was made here by able Senators, and by the press very generally, that the statute had been emasculated to such an extent that it was practically worthless.

This very able committee—and I speak in all sincerity of that fact, because there are men on that committee who have devoted their lives to this subject of interstate commerce, among whom are the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], one of the pioneers in this fight, and the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]—after giving this matter very much attention, delivered into this body a report upon this very subject, a portion of which I want to read, because it is a late report, filed on the 26th day of February, 1913.

This report says, on page 9:

On the 15th day of May, 1911, the case of the Standard Oil Co. v. The United States was passed upon by the Supreme Court. Chief Justice White (formerly Justice White) delivered the opinion and reiterated, as the conclusion of the court, the views that he had so forcibly urged as a dissenter 15 years before. It was not necessary for the court to deal with the question at all, inasmuch as it found the defendants guilty of a restraint of trade under any and every meaning of the term, but for the very purpose, the committee assumes, of advising the country that a new rule had been adopted so that business might be guided by it, it was stated in the most emphatic way imaginable that the statute which declares that "Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations is hereby declared to be illegal" means that a contract or combination in order to be illegal must cause an undue restraint of trade.

There is not very much difference between "unfair" and "undue" and "unreasonable" when you come to execute the term, to put it into practical effect in the business world.

The following quotations from the opinion will need no comment:

"That in view of the many new forms of contracts and combinations which were being evolved from existing economic conditions it was deemed essential by an all-embracing enumeration to make sure that no form of contract or combination by which an undue restraint of interstate or foreign commerce was brought about could save such restraint from condemnation. The statute under this view evidenced the intent not to restrain the right to make and enforce contracts, whether resulting from combination or otherwise, which did not unduly restrain interstate or foreign commerce, but to protect that commerce from being restrained by methods, whether old or new, which would constitute an interference that is an undue restraint (pp. 59, 60)."

Again:

"In other words, having by the first section forbidden all means of monopolizing trade—that is, unduly restraining it by means of every contract, combination, etc.—the second section seeks, if possible, to make the prohibitions of the act all the more complete and perfect by embracing all attempts to reach the end prohibited by the first section (p. 61)."

That the chief Justice intended to announce a rule at variance with the declarations of Justice Peckham and Justice Harlan in the Trans-Missouri Freight Association and Northern Securities cases is made clear in the following extracts:

"The question is pertinent and must be fully and frankly met, for if it be now deemed that the Freight Association case was mistakenly decided or too broadly stated, the doctrine which it announced should be either expressly overruled or limited." * * *

After citing further from the court, the committee goes on to discuss this rule, which has been laid down:

The people of this country will not permit the courts to declare a policy for them with respect to this subject. If we do not promptly exercise our legislative power, the courts will suffer immeasurable injury in the loss of that respect and confidence so essential to their usefulness. It is inconceivable that in a country governed by a written Constitution and statute law the courts can be permitted to test each restraint of trade by the economic standard which the individual members of the court may happen to approve.

Is there anything more plain than the fact that we are giving this commission the power to test each restraint of trade or exhibition of unfair competition by the economic standard which individual members of the commission may happen to approve at the particular time that it is presented? Is there anything more conclusive than the fact that never until a body reaches that commission will it know the precise attitude of mind of the commission toward that particular transaction, and never after they leave will they know how long that attitude of mind in the commission will remain?

This is not a government of law; this is a government of men; because there is no wider discretion, no greater amplitude of power than to say to a commission: "You shall determine what is unfair competition, and there is no restraint upon your judgment." No one can know until they get to that commission what they may do; and, as I said—and I can not repeat it too often—no one can know after they leave the commission how long they can do it.

If we do not speedily prescribe, in so far as we can, a legislative rule by which to measure the forms of contract and combination in restraint of trade with which we are familiar or which we can anticipate, we cease to be a Government of law and become a Government of men, and, moreover, of a very few men, and they appointed by the President.

I had not read that paragraph when I made the comment which I did, which only discloses how inevitable and irresistible and remorseless is the logic as it presents itself to every mind that we are creating here a condition not for a government by law, but a government by men, and, as they say here in this report, a government by men not selected by the people of the United States, but twice and thrice removed from the people of the United States.

It may be that the Supreme Court will be so enlightened and so alert that its opinion respecting what is due and what is undue restraint of trade will be in harmony with an awakened public conscience and a disinterested public judgment, but to fashion our conduct upon that hypothesis is to repudiate the fundamental principles of representative government.

When the commercial development of the country is considered, when the forms of industrial activity are taken into account, it must be admitted by every student of affairs that the policy of the Government with respect to restraints of trade and commerce should remain a judicial question in those cases only in which Congress can not prescribe a definite rule.

In order to look at the subject in the light of illustration, it is suggested that there will presently come before the courts the combination centered in the United States Steel Corporation. In the end nine justices of the Supreme Court will be asked to say whether the restraint of trade brought about through this combination is a due or an undue restraint, and the answer which each justice makes to that question will depend upon his individual opinion as an economist or sociologist, the conclusion of the court being in substance an act of legislation passed by the judicial branch of the Government to fit a particular case.

I am not in favor of the courts legislating or conceding their power to legislate; but if there are going to be two legislative bodies in the country I prefer that the new body be one constituted as the Supreme Court is constituted rather than a body constituted as the ordinary commission is constituted. There are precedents; there are rules of evidence and rules of law with which we are familiar, which courts do not disregard, or at least seek not to disregard; but with a commission, having no circumscribed limits other than the proposition of determining whether a particular transaction is fair or unfair, it reaches out into every realm of fancy into which the mind may possibly go.

Further, it is believed by many thoughtful people that a substantial identity in the managing boards of competing corporations constitutes a restraint of trade and is harmful to the public interest. If such a case were brought before the court, what would be the "rule of reason"? What guide would the court have in determining whether such community of directors or managers was a due or an undue restraint of trade?

What guide would this commission have in determining whether boards of directors thus constituted were in fair or unfair competition? What rule would apply to this board and thereby extend its influence and its application to every other board? What universality would there be to any such order?

Again, suppose there were a dozen establishments in a given field of production competing with each other and six of them were to consolidate, employing half of all the capital and advancing the consolidated enterprise to a dominating position in the trade, where would the judge go for light in determining whether the restraint of trade was due or undue? These illustrations might be indefinitely extended, but it would serve no useful purpose to multiply them.

Mr. President, the other day I received a letter from a gentleman who is in favor of a trade commission which should have power to fix prices, and in criticism of my criticism of this trade commission, and he gave me as an illustration this situation:

Here I am engaged in a particular industry. My large competitor has lowered prices all over the country in order to get rid of us small men.

Doubtless it appeared to him as a proposition that was unfair. If the prices had been lowered in that particular locality and kept up elsewhere, nobody would dispute the proposition; but, as I drew from his letter, there had been, so far as his industry was concerned, a lowering of price beyond the point where the small man could do business, and therefore he wanted a regulation of prices which would enable him to live.

That undoubtedly would be a satisfactory proposition to the small competitor if his business was in a failing condition; but how about the consumers throughout the country? Would a commission say that that was unfair competition—that because a large business could afford, by reason of the saving in overhead charges, and so forth, to sell at a lower price it was unfair for them to sell at the lower price simply because smaller concerns could not afford to sell for that price?

I fear that my friend would not be reached at all by this commission. The people are looking for a commission, it seems, which will establish prices and fix charges, and therefore a commission which will say that "you shall charge this price, and it must be such a price as will enable you to do business successfully." That would mean, of course, the elimination of all competition and the regulation and control of prices entirely by the Government. This commission does not assume to fix prices, and, in my judgment, this commission could never reach the case referred to by my correspondent.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] referred to the situation with reference to the regulation and control of rates of railroads. That is a simple proposition compared to this proposition. Tremendous as it is, it is a simple proposition compared with the one which we are now about to indorse. There are only a few railroad units, and the question of fixing their charges is an easy matter compared with the question of determining competition, fair and unfair.

Let me recall to you, however, the situation with reference to the railroad question in this country. We are now nearer public ownership by far than we have ever been in this country before, and we are nearer to it by reason of the fact that the capitalists of the country say that they do not propose to invest their money in an enterprise which somebody else manages. The result of it is that some of the leading economists and some of the leading railroad men of the country are for the first time advocating public ownership, and stand ready and willing to turn over their properties at a reasonable value to the Government. That is one of the reasons, they say, why they can not get capital into railroad enterprises at this time; it is because somebody else passes upon the affairs and controls and manages the capital which they put in. So it brings us up to the proposition of public ownership, and the next important and controlling question in this country along that line will be the question whether the Government had not better take over the railroads of this country and run them instead of trying to manage them. The railroads say: "If you do not give us a raise of 5 per cent, we can not go ahead and do business." The shippers and the people of the country generally say: "We can not afford that raise of 5 per cent." If the raise is given, the Interstate Commerce Commission must suffer criticism, and it must be disparaged to some extent in the public mind. If the raise is denied, the railroads claim that all investment, extension, building, and so forth, must cease.

I do not know that any of those things must necessarily follow from whatever the commission may do; but it is presenting the question which soon must be met, and which will be the real test of whether or not the regulation of railroads is a success. In my judgment, it is going to bring us within the next decade up against the proposition of Government ownership, which will be presented because of the breakdown of regulation, and in saying that I do not pass any criticism upon the Interstate Commerce Commission. I think it has been the best, possibly, or one of the best, commissions that ever has been created, and has met emergencies and conditions in an exceptional way; but there seems to be approaching a condition which no commission can meet. It is too early, sir, to say that regulation is a success and is the finality on the subject. The fact that public ownership grows stronger in public opinion by no means supports those who would now enter the unbounded sea of regulation of private industries.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, as confirming the statement he is making regarding the near approach to public ownership of the railroads of the country, I should like to call his attention to something that occurred in the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce when it had under consideration the railroad securities bill, when the attorney for the railroads of this country, practically—Mr. Thom, who represents particularly the Southern Railway—was under cross-examination.

In the bill, an amendment to which we were considering at that time, the word "financial" had been put before the word "guarantee," where it was stated that there was to be no guarantee on the part of the Government implied from the oversight of the bonds which were to be issued; and I should like to call the Senator's attention to the incident, because it struck me as quite peculiar at the time, or as very indicative of what we were coming to. I should like to call his attention to the reply that Mr. Thom made, if I will not interrupt him too much.

Mr. BORAH. I shall be glad to have the Senator call attention to it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The clause was made to read as follows:

Nothing herein shall be construed to imply any financial guaranty or obligation as to such issues on the part of the United States.

I said:

Now, the question I desire to ask you, Mr. Thom, is, if you require that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall find that the proposed issue will not impair the ability of the common carrier to perform its duties as a common carrier, will it not necessarily imply that such rates will be allowed by the Interstate Commerce Commission as will enable the company to pay the interest on those issues which it approves of?

Mr. Thom said:

I do not know who introduced that word. So far as I am concerned, I do not care for it.

Then I said:

Undoubtedly the claim will be made that the Government has assumed some responsibility.

Mr. Thom replied:

I do not think the Government should try to regulate without assuming the responsibility.

Necessarily implying that the minds of railroad people at this time—as it is very natural that they should be—are drifting toward the point where they wish, just as Mr. Gary, of the Steel Trust, desired, to have the public generally assume the ownership of the enterprise in which they are concerned and guarantee the interest on their obligations and dividends on their stock.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho, who has given this subject a great deal of attention, or the Senator from Nevada, the chairman of the committee, a question about this bill.

The provision of section 5 is:

That unfair competition in commerce is hereby declared unlawful.

I quite agree with what the Senator from Idaho has said. The bill employs a term there that does not furnish, as it seems to me, any definite standard for the enforcement of the statute; but the particular matter I want to direct his attention to is that that part of section 5 is comprehensive. It includes and makes unlawful unfair competition on the part of persons, partnerships, and corporations. In that respect it is the same as the Sherman antitrust law, which included all persons within its inhibitions; but the next paragraph is:

The commission is hereby empowered and directed to prevent corporations from using unfair methods of competition in commerce.

Does the Senator understand from that that natural persons are prohibited from exercising unfair methods of competition; that partnerships are likewise prohibited from doing unfair things in competition, but that only corporations can be held amenable to the action of the commission?

Mr. BORAH. I observed that in reading the bill. I was at a loss myself to know precisely the idea of the committee in reference to it. I am unable to make any statement which would throw any light upon the matter, although the construction which the Senator puts upon it seems to be the reasonable construction, and that is that section 5 relates to all parties but that the following provision relates only to corporations.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think that is the correct construction.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I call the attention of the Senator from Nevada to the fact that in the Sherman antitrust law the provision is:

Every contract, combination in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of trade or commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, is hereby declared to be illegal.

The first paragraph of section 5 of the pending bill is quite as comprehensive as that section of the antitrust act.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But the antitrust act further provides:

Every person who shall make any such contract or engage in any such combination or conspiracy shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by fine—

And so forth. I shall not stop to read the entire provisions of the Sherman antitrust law; but the law applies to and reaches not only individual persons but partnerships and corporations who engage in any of these forbidden practices, while under the pending bill it would seem that nobody can be reached who is guilty of unfair competition except a corporation.

INTERSTATE TRADE CORPORATIONS ONLY AFFECTED.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, this bill, of course, is regulatory of corporations that are engaged in interstate commerce. We considered very carefully in the committee whether we should extend it to persons, firms, and individuals, and we concluded to confine its operations to corporations engaged in interstate commerce. Now, it is true that the first part of section 5 is a general enactment of law, "that unfair competition in commerce is hereby declared unlawful," and that applies both to corporations and to individuals; but this particular method of enforcing that law through the operation of a commission is applied only to corporations.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What is the method——

Mr. NEWLANDS. I imagine the method of enforcing that law against individuals or firms would be by an action for damages or perhaps by a suit in equity for an injunction, but there the individual having a complaint against an individual or a firm would have to institute the action himself and pay the costs of the proceeding. The purpose here was to give all who are wronged by a corporation engaged in interstate commerce through unfair competition this method of having that wrong ended through the intervention of the Government itself.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the civil remedy exists now. A statute of the United States is not needed in order to enable the person who is damaged by the unfair competition of another person to maintain an action.

Mr. NEWLANDS. That civil remedy exists to-day, provided unfair competition is unlawful without the enactment of this provision.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is true that an individual or a partnership may be quite as guilty of unfair competition as a corporation.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; that is true.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Now, the Senator says that the committee concluded to confine it to corporations?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Why was that done? What particular reason was there for it?

Mr. NEWLANDS. We wished to confine the operations of this act to corporations, with the knowledge that hereafter it might be extended; but we thought in the initial organization of this commission its operations should be confined entirely to corporations. We considered various methods of limiting its jurisdiction, because we realized that the argument would be made against it that its power would cover so broad an area as to result in the breaking down of the commission itself. We considered, among others, a limitation as to capital also, so that corporations below a certain capitalization would not come within the operation of the act, and that simply with a view to lightening the duties of the commission itself; but we realized that there might be small corporations that would exercise very large powers of oppression, or that small corporations in which other large corporations were interested would be made the agency of wrong and of oppression.

So we concluded that no limitation as to capitalization should be imposed, but that we should provide that this act should apply only to those corporations that the commission might designate, and thus not compel the 350,000 corporations in the country that might be engaged in interstate trade to make the reports that are required by this act. It was simply with a view to limiting the area of the powers of this commission that we thought it wise to keep out individuals and partnerships.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, in spite of the answer which the Senator from Nevada makes, I am unable to see any reason for excluding from the operation of the law individuals or partnerships who may be guilty of unfair competition and confining it to corporations. Certainly, to include all classes would not very greatly broaden the field. Extending it to corporations alone covers a pretty broad field.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, we realized that there might be an amendment presented on that line, but our judgment was that we should at present confine the area of the jurisdiction so far as we could logically. Now, the Senator from Utah thinks that even this limitation of area is illogical, because individuals and partnerships can be guilty of the same unfair competition that is practiced by corporations; but we know, as a matter of fact, that these practices are, as a rule, indulged in by powerful organizations with a view to destroying competitors, and that unfair competition is a means of creating monopoly. So we aimed this particular method of procedure against the corporations, but made the general declaration of the law apply to all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nevada another question about the bill?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. On page 17, in the beginning of section 3, the provision is:

The commission shall have power, among others—

Then follows an enumeration of certain powers. Does the Senator from Nevada understand that this commission will have powers that are not conferred upon it by this bill?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Oh, no. It will have no powers except those conferred by this bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But the introductory clause is——

Mr. NEWLANDS. But there are powers which are specified in other sections.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then, why does not the Senator say "that the commission shall have power in addition to others conferred by the bill"? The plain implication is that——

Mr. NEWLANDS. I imagine there would be no objection by the committee to such an amendment.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was simply wondering whether or not the Senator understood the commission had powers entirely outside of the bill.

Mr. NEWLANDS. No.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to ask another question. Subdivision (a) gives the commission power:

(a) To investigate from time to time, and as often as the commission may deem advisable, the organization, business, financial condition, conduct, practices—

I emphasize those two words, "conduct" and "practices"— and management of any corporation engaged in commerce, and its relation to other corporations and to individuals, associations, and partnerships.

First, it would seem under that provision that the commission would only have power to deal with a corporation that was engaged in commerce—that, of course, means interstate commerce?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But it is given power to investigate the conduct and practices of any such corporation, apparently, whether that conduct relates or those practices relate to interstate commerce or not. Does the Senator from Nevada understand that such power is conferred upon this commission, or does he understand that the conduct and practices which the commission is empowered to investigate must be such as relate to or affect interstate commerce?

Mr. NEWLANDS. My interpretation of that is that the corporation must be engaged in interstate commerce. While engaged in interstate commerce, its entire conduct and practices may be investigated; there is no limitation as to the inquiry.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The commission may investigate any conduct or any practices?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Even though such conduct might relate wholly to intrastate business or wholly to some local business?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Yes; and I think the Supreme Court has so decided in a case of that kind which has been instituted.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. With relation to what?

Mr. NEWLANDS. My impression is that the Supreme Court has so decided in some case of a similar nature, which I can not at this moment recall, that if you are engaged in an investigation of a corporation that is engaged in interstate commerce, you have a right to inquire both into the interstate and the intrastate business, because they are so related to each other that they are almost inseparable, and that you can not make a complete inquiry with reference to interstate commerce without embracing the action of the corporation with reference to intrastate commerce.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Of course, if we authorize a commission or anybody else to inquire into the dealings of a person or a corporation relating to interstate commerce, the investigation itself may disclose things which are not related to interstate commerce, but that would result incidentally in the exercise of the power; that is a very different thing, however, from conferring the power by an act of legislation to investigate conduct wholly unrelated to interstate commerce.

This is a legislative commission. We can confer upon a legislative commission, as I understand the rule, no power which we ourselves do not possess. We confer certain powers upon the Interstate Commerce Commission, but they are powers which Congress could exercise directly. Congress, however, does not exercise them directly, because they involve such a multiplicity of details that it would be impossible for Congress to exercise them; but they are all powers which Congress possesses potentially. Here is an attempt to confer a power, apparently, which Congress itself has no authority to exercise.

Let me ask the Senator from Nevada does he think that Congress could ascertain that a corporation engaged in interstate commerce was guilty of certain practices or of certain conduct which did not in any manner affect interstate commerce but the effect of which was confined entirely to the borders of the State or to some city, that Congress could then pass a law making such conduct and such practices illegal and could impose a penalty against the corporation guilty of them?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I imagine not, except it could restrain such a corporation from engaging in interstate commerce for any reason satisfactory to Congress.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not sure about that.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Any misconduct on purely State affairs could be made a reason for the exclusion of that corporation from interstate commerce; but as to the ability to condemn by law a transaction or a practice that purely affected State commerce and not interstate commerce I imagine the Senator is correct, that Congress would not have that power. We are, however, now testing the powers of investigation possessed by Congress. Those powers must necessarily be broader than the powers of legislation, because investigation may necessarily involve the inquiry into State conduct and State practices with a view to getting the information that is essential to the exercise of the national power. So I should say that there was a distinction between authorizing an investigation of a corporation engaged in interstate commerce as to matters relating to purely State commerce and legislating upon the subject matter of things that relate to purely State commerce.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I doubt very much the power of Congress itself to investigate the conduct or practices of a corporation, although it may be engaged in interstate commerce, if that conduct and those practices have nothing whatever to do with interstate commerce, because Congress only has the power to make an investigation with a view to exercising its constitutional authority to legislate; and after making such an investigation it could not legislate on that subject; it could not forbid the practice; and while Congress very often does investigate something that it has not any business to investigate, that does not determine that it has the rightful authority to do so.

If I may further trespass on the attention of the Senator from Nevada, I want to ask him about the next subdivision—subdivision (b)—which is:

(b) To require any corporation subject to the provisions of this act which the commission may designate to furnish to the commission from time to time information, statements—

And so on.

Is there any provision in the bill, either in this section or elsewhere, which would furnish any rule or standard according to which this commission must act in designating a particular corporation or corporations which must make these reports?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not understand that under this provision it is necessary for the commission to make any general rule. It can specify any corporation, designate it, and call upon it to furnish statements and reports.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is, arbitrarily. There may be a hundred corporations which have exactly the same kind of business, all in a situation where if it is necessary to investigate one it is necessary to investigate all; but the commission may arbitrarily pick out corporation No. 1 and corporation No. 30 and corporation No. 60, compel those 3 corporations to make these returns, and permit the remaining 97 to make no returns whatever.

Mr. NEWLANDS. In such a case, where if it is necessary to investigate one it is necessary to investigate all of the hundred or more, I should, of course, expect the commission to exercise that power.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But the proposed law does not require it.

Mr. NEWLANDS. But I should also expect it to exercise the power of determining whether, if it was necessary to examine one, it was necessary to examine all. It seems to me that is a matter that is properly left within their discretion.

As to the arbitrary exercise of power, of course, all power is arbitrary in the finality. There may be methods of hearing, and so forth, that precede the determination, but in the end all power must, I imagine, be exercised arbitrarily. So I do not see that that is an objection.

I can imagine that there would be certain corporations that would be so condemned for unfair practices, and I can understand how the commission would want to keep that corporation under supervision for some time after it had ordered it to cease and desist and why it should require it to make certain statements and reports. I can understand, with reference to a combination against which a decree of disorganization has been made, that it might be necessary for this body, which has the power vested in it to make investigations as to whether corporations against which such decrees have been made are following or are violating the law—I can understand in such instances how the commission might require statements from one and not from another, or perhaps require statements from both or discontinue the requirement as to one, being satisfied as to it, and continue it as to the other, being dissatisfied as to it. It seems to me that is a wise discretion that ought to be given to the commission.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KENYON. It seems to me this is about the most interest that has been manifested in the debate, and there seem to be a number more Senators present than usual, but I had intended to call for a quorum, unless the Senator from Utah objects.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me finish one statement I desire to make, and then I will have no objection.

Mr. KENYON. Very well.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was about to say—I may change my mind about it after reflection—but it seems to me that in the various provisions of section 3 we are conferring a good deal of arbitrary power upon this commission.

Mr. NEWLANDS. There are large visitorial powers conferred, undoubtedly; but I imagine they will be exercised in very few cases.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not like to confer power of this character upon any commission, depending upon my imagination for a guaranty that it will not be abused. I think we ought to define the power that they are to exercise. This section certainly gives the commission the authority to discriminate arbitrarily among corporations occupying exactly the same status and doing precisely the same things. It is the conferring of such power that I am objecting to. Of course I think that, ordinarily, men intrusted with high official responsibility will endeavor to discharge their duty with fairness, but that does not warrant us in conferring upon any commission arbitrary power.

We did not do that with reference to the Interstate Commerce Commission. All the railroad carriers of the country are treated exactly alike; they must all file their schedules of rates; the commission must pass upon the rates of all of them. It has not been given the power to select a railroad here and regulate it, and let a dozen other railroads go without regulation; but the attempt seems to be made in this bill to give the commission the power to select here and there a corporation to be brought under the provisions of the act and to let all the others go without any sort of supervision or regulation.

The same criticism will apply to subdivision (c), which is:

(c) To prescribe as near as may be a uniform system of annual reports from such corporations—

I repeat, "from such corporations"— or classes of corporations subject to the provisions of this act, as the commission may designate.

The requiring of the filing of annual reports may be a very burdensome thing. The commission is not even required to classify the corporations and require all corporations falling within the class to make the reports, but it may select some particular corporation and subject it to this burden, while letting all the other corporations go free. It is the conferring of such power upon the commission that is objectionable.

So it is all the way through the bill. It seems to me that if this bill shall be passed in its present form, one of two things will inevitably result: Either the act will be administered arbitrarily and with vast ineffectiveness, because it will be confined to a few corporations, or it will involve untold labor and untold expense. I do not know how many corporations there are in this country engaged in interstate commerce. I have heard the number variously estimated at from 50,000 to 100,000.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Three hundred and fifty thousand in all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then, there are more than I suspected—350,000 corporations. There are not that many engaged in interstate commerce, are there?

Mr. NEWLANDS. No.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I was speaking of the class engaged in interstate commerce. I have heard it stated that there were from fifty to a hundred thousand corporations engaged to one degree or another in interstate commerce. All of those corporations are brought under the jurisdiction of this commission. It is within the power of the commission to investigate all of them or any number of them that it may see fit. If it concludes to investigate only a few, then there is danger of an arbitrary execution of the law; there is danger of unfairness and injustice to those few who may be selected; while if all are investigated, or at least a very considerable proportion of all are investigated, I would undertake to say that we would have an army of employees that would be astounding to the Senate when it comes to making an appropriation for paying them.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Well, Mr. President, I wish to say regarding that that the committee was exceedingly desirous of making this law bear with as little harshness as possible upon the vast mass of corporations engaged in business in conformity with the law, and, with a view to preventing thousands of corporations against which no complaint could possibly be made from being investigated, we gave to the commission full discretion as to the designation of the corporations from which it would require reports or as to which its powers of investigation would be applied.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But the bill is not so limited. The commission is not given the authority to require these reports from and to make these investigations only of corporations which it may be suspected are guilty of unlawful practices, but all corporations engaged in interstate commerce are brought within its jurisdiction, and the commission may select any number of those, whether they are suspected of unlawful practices or not, and bring them under the burdensome provisions of this law.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Hughes	Nelson	Sheppard
Brady	Kenyon	Newlands	Sutherland
Burton	Kern	Norris	Thomas
Chilton	Lane	Page	Thornton
Clapp	Lee, Md.	Pittman	Vardaman
Clarke, Ark.	Martine, N. J.	Pomerene	White

The VICE PRESIDENT. Twenty-four Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. HUGHES. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned, the adjournment being, in pursuance of the previous order of the Senate, until Monday, July 6, 1914, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, July 3, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Cotden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in heaven, the heart of the true patriot turns with gratitude at this season of the year to the splendid sacrifices and deeds of valor wrought by our fathers, who, under Thy guidance, gave to us a government "of the people, by the people, for the people," whose history and achievements have justified its existence. May it be ours to keep sacred the trust reposed in us that it may continue to live and grow in all that makes for peace and prosperity, that liberty may have its perfect work, to the good of mankind; and glory and honor and praise shall be Thine forever. In the Christ spirit. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

STATUE OF GEORGE WASHINGTON GLICK.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 558.

Resolved, That exercises appropriate to the reception and acceptance from the State of Kansas of the statue of George Washington Glick, erected in Statuary Hall in the Capitol, be made the special order for Saturday, July 18, 1914, at 3 o'clock p. m.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there not a Senate resolution like this?

Mr. TAGGART. The Senate resolution relates to the acceptance by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. And this is the corresponding House resolution?

Mr. TAGGART. Yes.

The resolution was agreed to.

EVENING SESSION ON TUESDAY, JULY 7, 1914.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the order of business which I ask the Clerk to report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That on Tuesday, July 7, the House stand in recess from 5 p. m. until 8 p. m.; that a session be held from 8 p. m. to 11 p. m. for the consideration in the House as in Committee of the Whole of bills on the Private Calendar which are not objected to, commencing with No. 232 on said calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The order was agreed to.

Subsequently—

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to change the calendar number in the order just agreed to from 232 to 242. We got down to the number 242 the last time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to make the change stated by him. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to bills of the following titles, had agreed to the conference asked by the House of Representatives, and had appointed Mr. SHIVELY, Mr. BRYAN, and Mr. SMOOT as the conferees on the part of the Senate:

H. R. 13207. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 13920. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 14546. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors;

H. R. 15071. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors; and

H. R. 15504. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to bills of the following titles, had agreed to the conference asked by the House of Representatives, and had appointed Mr. SHIVELY, Mr. HUGHES, and Mr. STERLING as the conferees on the part of the Senate:

H. R. 12914. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 13542. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 14234. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war;

H. R. 14738. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war; and

H. R. 15692. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1058. An act for the relief of Dommick Taheny and John W. Mortimer;

S. 1149. An act to correct the military record of Seth Watson;
S. 4045. An act to correct the military record of John Chick;
S. 3752. An act to authorize the construction of a lighthouse at Willapa Harbor, Wash.;
S. 4875. An act to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to exchange rights of way in connection with lands pertaining to the Lighthouse Service; and
S. J. Res. 129. Joint resolution relating to the awards and payment thereon in what is commonly known as the Plaza cases.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Latta, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills and resolutions of the following titles:

On May 26, 1914:
H. R. 12806. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to grant the use of the Fort McHenry Military Reservation, in the State of Maryland, to the mayor and City Council of Baltimore, a municipal corporation of the State of Maryland, making certain provisions in connection therewith, providing access to and from the site of the new immigration station heretofore set aside.
On May 28, 1914:
H. J. Res. 264. Joint resolution authorizing the President to accept an invitation to participate in the Sixth International Congress of Chambers of Commerce and Commercial and Industrial Associations.
On June 6, 1914:
H. R. 15190. An act to amend section 103 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, as amended by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1913.
On June 10, 1914:
H. R. 3334. An act authorizing the quitclaiming of the interest of the United States in certain land situated in Hampden County, Mass.
On June 15, 1914:
H. R. 14385. An act to amend section 5 of "An act to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection, and operation of the Panama Canal and the sanitation and government of the Canal Zone," approved August 24, 1912; and
H. R. 14242. An act to increase the limit of cost for the erection and completion of the United States Federal building at Harrisburg, Pa.
On June 17, 1914:

HATTIE MILLER.

Mr. LLOYD. I present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.
The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 523 (H. Rept. 921).

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to Hattie Miller, widow of John Miller, late a laborer of the House, an amount equal to six months of his compensation as such laborer, and a sum not exceeding $250 to Joseph Gawler Sons, to defray the funeral expenses of said John Miller.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend the resolution by striking out, in line 6, the words "to Joseph Gawler Sons." With that amendment adopted, the resolution will be in the usual form.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.
The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6, strike out the words "to Joseph Gawler Sons."

The SPEAKER. If this amendment is agreed to, who will get the money?
Mr. LLOYD. The widow.
The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.
The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Missouri yield for a question?
Mr. LLOYD. Yes.
Mr. MILLER. An employee of the House by the name of Capt. De Costa died some time ago. He had been in the employ of the House, as I understand, 16 or 17 years. I wish to inquire whether the committee have under consideration the question of a payment of this kind in this case.
Mr. LLOYD. Yes; we have.
Mr. MILLER. You have not yet considered it.
Mr. LLOYD. I think it will be reported at the next meeting of the committee.
The resolution as amended was agreed to.

ASSISTANT TO COMMITTEE ON REVISION OF THE LAWS.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Accounts.
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.
The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 555 (H. Rept. 922).

Resolved, That the Committee on Revision of the Laws of the House of Representatives is hereby authorized to employ a competent person to assist the committee in codifying, revising, and compiling the statutes of the United States under the direction and supervision of the committee.

SEC. 2. That the person so employed shall be known as the Reviser of the United States Statutes for the Committee on Revision of the Laws, and shall receive as full compensation for his services the sum of $4,000 per annum, to be paid monthly by the Clerk of the House of Representatives in 12 equal installments out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives until otherwise provided.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, this resolution provides for an assistant to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. Heretofore we have had commissions at different times to perform this work. At the present time the committee charged with the responsible duty of preparing these revised statutes has one clerk, and the work is more than one clerk can do. It requires an expert. We have the expert, and the Committee on Accounts and the Committee on Revision of the Laws think it proper that there should be a person employed to take charge of this important work.
Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. LLOYD. Yes.
Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has stated that the committee has the expert in mind. Is he the same one who performed this character of service when the revision of the laws was undertaken under a former committee, when Judge Moon, of Pennsylvania, was chairman.
Mr. LLOYD. No; he is the man who has had charge of the work for the last two years—one of the most competent young men I ever met.
Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman aware that the former assistant was Mr. Lott, who was connected with the Department of Justice, which assigned him to this work?
Mr. LLOYD. Yes.
Mr. STAFFORD. I believe he received some salary additional to that which was allowed him by the Department of Justice. Is this person in anywise connected with the department?
Mr. LLOYD. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, the salary of this assistant is $4,000.

Mr. LLOYD. Yes. The view of the committee is that the only trouble about this salary is that it is not high enough for the service actually rendered.

Mr. MANN. Well, I suppose that is the view the chairman of every committee may have concerning one of its employees.

Mr. LLOYD. The chairman of the Committee on Revision of the Laws never made any suggestion at all with reference to the salary.

Mr. MANN. I think we pay but one clerk of any committee as high as $4,000 in salary. While this employee is called an expert in some ways, and probably the services may be worth $4,000, I do not see how you are going to differentiate between the Committee on the Revision of the Laws and the employee of the Committee on the Judiciary, with the employee of the Committee on Revision of the Laws getting $4,000 and the employee of the Judiciary Committee getting $2,500.

Mr. LLOYD. The commissioners that have been employed heretofore have received $5,000 each for similar services.

Mr. MANN. I understand, but this is really a clerk to the committee.

Mr. LLOYD. I beg the gentleman's pardon; this is not expected to be a clerk of the committee.

Mr. MANN. The committee has nothing to do except this work. The present clerk is a very efficient young man I know, and he will probably get the place.

Mr. LLOYD. He will be assisted by the clerk of the committee.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. Did I understand the gentleman to say that the contemplated employee is the present clerk of the committee?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. GARNER. And you propose to give him $4,000, and, in addition to that, under the general law, pay a clerk whatever salary he is now receiving. So you will then have a commissioner at $4,000 a year and the clerk of the committee at $2,000 a year.

Mr. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS].

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Revision of the Laws have deferred for three years making this request. Finally we ascertained that it was impossible to keep up with the revision work unless we did ask for additional help, an expert compiler and reviser, for the purpose of codifying and revising the laws.

In the Sixty-second Congress the compilers were dispensed with. Previous to that time there had been two compilers with a salary of $5,000 each, making $10,000. Then there was the salary of the clerk of the committee and the pay of the extra help, which amounted in all to about $15,000. All told, the annual expense approximated $20,000 a year up to that time. When these two compilers were dispensed with and the joint committee was abolished, the work fell upon the individual members of the Committee on Revision of the Laws. It was found impossible for the members of the committee to spare the time to give their personal attention to the work to such an extent as to enable them to keep up with the compilation work. It had not been expected up to that time, nor has it ever been expected, that the clerk of the committee, whose duties are of a clerical nature, would do anything toward codifying or compiling or revising. He was only expected to check up the work in a clerical way. It is true the clerk of the committee was a stenographer and a typewriter, and he studied law, and it so happened that he was able after two years' diligent effort to begin compiling and codifying

But I wish to state to the membership of this House that not only did the clerk of the committee spend two years studying in trying to equip himself for the work which he undertook on his own initiative, not at the request of the committee, because they did not expect him to do that class of work, but I also had in my employ a secretary, a licensed lawyer with several years' practice, and I permitted him to cooperate and assist the clerk of the committee in compiling the work. These two young men at times sat up night after night all night and did all in their power to get the work in such shape that it would be presentable to the House of Representatives. Finally they succeeded in getting up the compilation which, after several meritorious amendments, went through the House after 10 weeks, every Wednesday.

But while the work was being done, and while this $20,000 expense was saved by the joint committee being dispensed with, the work was lagging and getting further and further behind all the time.

The Commission on Revision of the Laws expired, or the employment expired, in 1906, and from that time until 1914, for eight years, there has been none of this compilation done except through the joint committee. Since that time there has only been one entire title and a half of another title compiled and presented to the House and enacted into law. One was a criminal code and the other was not quite half the judicial code. You can well see that if during the eight years only the criminal code and half of the judicial code has been revised, as far as the House is concerned, making only two chapters, or two subject matters, you can readily see that this work can never be completed within a reasonable time, but that it is getting further and further behind as to codification all the time.

Neither the chairman of the committee nor the committee would ask of the House of Representatives this help if they did not think it was absolutely necessary for the purpose of properly prosecuting the work. This is not a clerk of the committee. It is expected that the clerk of the committee will devote his entire time to checking up the work, transcribing it, putting it in type, and sending it to the printer, arranging the index, which it is necessary for a clerical man to do. It is a reviser which this resolution calls for.

Mr. BURNETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WATKINS. Yes.

Mr. BURNETT. How much work remains to be performed?

Mr. WATKINS. There are only two subject matters that have been disposed of, and all the other parts of the Revised Statutes ought to be codified and compiled.

Mr. BURNETT. How many subjects remain?

Mr. WATKINS. I have not estimated them.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a succinct statement, that the RECORD may show the nature of the work.

The Committee on Revision of the Laws is charged by Congress with the revision and codification of the statutes of the United States. The committee was created July 25, 1868, and took the place of the old standing committee of the House on Revisal and Unfinished Business.

The work of revision and codification accumulated to such an extent that on June 4, 1897, Congress enacted legislation creating a commission to codify and revise the laws. The commission, as provided by statute (U. S. Stat. L., vol. 30, p. 58), consisted of three commissioners at an annual salary of $5,000 and expenses. The commission was also provided with all necessary clerical assistance, and it is estimated that the Government of the United States expended annually an amount aggregating and often exceeding $20,000 for the purpose of procuring a general codification and revision of the laws.

By the act approved June 30, 1906, entitled "An act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1907, and for other purposes" (U. S. Stat. L., vol. 34, p. 754), the commission to codify and revise the laws was ordered discontinued and required to make its final report to the Congress. Upon this report, submitted to Congress in December, 1906, the general revision and codification of the laws are based.

By joint resolution approved March 2, 1907, entitled "Joint resolution to create a joint committee to consider the revision and codification of the laws of the United States," the Committee on Revision of the Laws of the House of Representatives and a like committee on the part of the Senate were enabled to proceed with the duties imposed by Congress. The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 240) creating the Joint Committee on Revision of the Laws authorized "the said joint committee to sit during the recess of Congress and to employ necessary assistants and to order such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business, and to incur such expense as may be deemed necessary." As assistants to serve on this joint committee there were at first appointed two most able and efficient men, one on the part of the Senate and one on the part of the House of Representatives. They acted in the capacity of advisers to the Joint Committee on Revision of the Laws as well as revisers for the committee. They each received a salary of $5,000 per annum, and were provided with necessary clerical assistants at salaries ranging from $6 per diem up. It is estimated that the Joint Committee on Revision of the Laws cost the Government nearly $20,000 per annum. It has not been definitely ascertained just what coterie of assistants were borne on the rolls of the Senate and House in connection with the revision and codification work, but it has been stated by a member of the clerical force that the salaries of the assistants to the joint committee never fell below $15,000 per annum from the time of the creation of the joint committee in March, 1907, to the time of its abolition, March 4, 1911.

It will appear, from the best information at hand, that the amount paid in salaries alone for the services of these men who composed the commission and joint committee in the capacity of commissioners, assistants, revisers, advisers, and so forth, during the 13 years of existence of both combined aggregated, on a minimum estimate at $15,000 per annum, $195,000. This does not include any of the vast amount expended by this Government for the printing which the commission and joint committee incurred. A rough estimate of the entire expense incurred for bringing the work up to where it was left off in 1911 would certainly appear to exceed $250,000.

During the existence of the commission, from 1897 to 1906, the Alaskan Code was adopted by Congress. During the existence of the Joint Committee on Revision of the Laws the Criminal Code and the Judicial Code were passed by Congress. The enactment into law of the Alaskan Code in 1901 was accomplished mainly by the efforts of such able men serving on the committee at that time as the gentleman from Missouri, Hon. JAMES T. LLOYD.

Taking into consideration the contents of the Revised Statutes, second edition of 1878, upon which the commission based its entire report, there was only one and part of one title disposed of by the joint committee during its entire existence, and with the able coterie it had at its command. This was the title "Crimes" and part of the judiciary title which is embraced within the Judicial Code of 1911.

Since March, 1911, the Committee on Revision of the Laws of the House of Representatives has been provided with a clerk and a messenger. Its duties, as charged by Congress, remain the same. The clerk of the committee has duties as clerk to perform. It has never been the duty of the clerk of this committee to execute the duties of revising and codifying the laws under the direction and supervision of the membership of the committee, as for one to properly and accurately execute such duties must devote his entire time to that work alone. The Committee on Revision of the Laws has had no one to aid them since 1911, and the valuable work done by the commission and the joint committee, for which thousands of dollars had been expended, seemed almost lost; but during this session of Congress the committee, as best it could under the most unfavorable conditions, labored to have prepared and presented the remainder of the judiciary title and another title brought within the judiciary—extradition—making one and one-half titles, the same, when considered by titles, as the joint committee had accomplished.

To accomplish this in the bill H. R. 15578, which passed the House of Representatives on Wednesday, June 17, without a dissenting vote, the chairman of the committee was forced to get in arrears, and badly so, with his correspondence and other official work in his individual capacity in order to allow his private secretary to aid the clerk of the committee in his work. In revising and codifying the laws there is a voluminous manuscript of typewriting and printing which must be prepared and reprepared from time to time, and it is the hardest kind of work, day and night, throughout the entire preparation of the codification. The Supreme Court decisions, which we find on nearly every section of the law being codified, must be noted and included in the report of the committee to the House. Legislation must be digested daily and inserted in its proper place, and to do this each act must be procured the day it becomes a law and be studied and, if necessary, separated properly and put in its place. The reasons assigned by the commission on the various new sections of law submitted by them to Congress in their final report must be studied and thoroughly understood, and where laws have been enacted to cover certain recommendations of the commission, as we often find is the case, this recommendation must be dropped entirely and the new law brought in to take its place. All these things, simply as an enumerated few, go to show what the work of revision and codification is and what it requires. There are few persons who have the patience and accuracy to properly accomplish it. It is readily seen that the individual Members of Congress serving on a committee of this kind can not personally consult every law passed, copy that law, and put it in its proper place. They do not have the time, even if Congress expected them to execute this work. It requires more time than a Member of the House of Representatives really has at his disposal to view and review that which one man has done and to pass upon it and determine whether or not it is such as he thinks correctly done.

The work of revising and codifying the laws is of vast importance not only to the Congress to have its laws up to date in codified form, but to the country. As the laws are now on the statute books it is a most difficult proposition in many instances to find the law on various subjects and determine whether or not it is the only law or even the last law on those subjects or that subject, whichever the case may be.

The House resolution introduced by Hon. W. B. FRANCIS, from the Committee on Revision of the Laws, makes provision for a reviser to serve the committee, devoting his entire time to the work of codification and revision. It authorizes a compensation, annually, of $4,000 per annum, which is a most reasonable amount for the duties to be performed, other men acting in the same capacity having heretofore received $5,000 for the same work, with the exception that they had clerical assistance at their beck and call. They really had not the work, clerical and otherwise, to perform which the reviser provided for by this resolution will have.

The Committee on Revision of the Laws will be enabled by the passage of this resolution to immediately begin the preparation of another title of the Revised Statutes for presentation at the next session of Congress, and with the services of the reviser provided for by this resolution and the services of the clerk of the Committee on Revision of the Laws the committee will soon be able to rapidly overcome the vast accumulation of work which is to its credit, and present to the Congress from time to time separate codes of law embracing the various titles of the Revised Statutes, which work is sadly needed and has been for a number of years. This can be accomplished by an additional expenditure of $4,000 per annum.

Mr. LLOYD. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, there was a commission established for the purpose of codifying the laws a good many years ago, as stated by the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana, which commission we finally got out of existence.

Then we had another joint committee of the House and the Senate, which did considerable work, and we passed two codification laws. I think the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS], chairman of the Committee on Revision of the Laws, has done very good service in the House as chairman of the committee and in connection with the codification bill which the House passed only a few days ago; but most of the work has been done. The codification expert, the gentleman says, is not to be the clerk of the committee; that the clerk of the committee does clerical work. I think the distinguished gentleman has not been chairman of any other committee in the House except the Committee on Revision of the Laws, and I am very sure that the clerk of that committee does not have very much clerical work to perform. The clerk of any committee that is a live committee has a great deal of work to do outside of clerical work.

Mr. LLOYD. The clerk is expected to assist this reviser. There is a vast amount of work that he must do. He does stenographic and other work.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, there is practically no stenographic work in connection with it.

Mr. LLOYD. Oh, yes, there is.

Mr. MANN. The clerk of the Committee on the Judiciary ought to, and I have no doubt does, do a great deal of work in connection with the bills which are referred to that committee. We pay the clerk of the Committee on the Judiciary, I think, $2,500 a year. We pay Mr. Courts, the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations, a regular salary of $4,000 a year, and $1,000 additional while he holds the place; but that is the only place where we pay over $2,500 for any employee in connection with a committee. I have a clerk who, I believe, does twice as much work as this expert will ever do, and I think more valuable work, who gets $2,000 a year. Most of the clerks of committees get $2,000 a year.

Mr. LLOYD. I certainly will concede the fact that the gentleman has a clerk who does more work than any person I know of about this Capitol.

Mr. MANN. If I had had the nerve at different times I should have asked for an increase to $2,500 a year, because my clerk formerly was paid $2,500 a year and was reduced to $2,000 a year; but if we start to provide committees with employees at $4,000, I do not see how you are going to make any distinction between the clerk of the Committee on the Judiciary, the clerk of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, the clerk of the Committee on the Public Lands, and somebody employed by the Committee on Revisions of the Laws. They have more difficult work to perform, and more of it to perform than this person will have.

Mr. LLOYD. Oh, I beg the gentleman's pardon. The gentleman is entirely mistaken about that, because the gentleman evidently is not very well posted on what the person in charge of that work has to do.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have followed very closely, as my friend from Missouri has followed the last bill, all of the codification bills, from the codification of the Alaskan Code down to date, and I think I am fairly familiar with the work that these people have to do.

Mr. LLOYD. With the Alaskan Code I have some familiarity myself, because I used to work upon it night and day. The chairman of that committee and myself performed the work that this reviser is expected to do, and you can hardly expect any chairman or the members of the committee to do the detail work.

Mr. MANN. Then what on earth are they on a committee for?

Mr. LLOYD. There is plenty of work to do after that work is submitted by the reviser.

Mr. MANN. I supposed that was one of the purposes of gentlemen going on committees. I supposed it was to do the work of the committee. Is it intended to have the Members who are on the committee not posted about the codification, but to have an outside employee do all of the work of codification? It is the duty of the committee to do a large share of this work, although I am not complaining about the employment of the expert. I hope the gentleman will understand that. I assume that this expert, if that is what he is properly called, is the gentleman who has been the clerk of the committee, and I think he has done very efficient work. I have no criticism, but I have much praise for the work that he has done. I am talking about the pay. If we start to raise the pay of these committee employees, I do not think that you can stop with the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors has a clerk who has more work to perform than this gentleman will ever have to do in the same length of time. Perhaps we ought to increase the pay of all of them, but I doubt whether it should be increased to $4,000.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. WATKINS. Does the gentleman make a distinction between a clerk who has only clerical work to do and a man who has to go into the decisions of the Supreme Court, the statutes enacted by Congress, and blend them and modify them and select out those that are repealed and those that are decided by the Supreme Court to be inoperative? Does the gentleman make a distinction between that class of work and the work of merely a clerk?

Mr. MANN. Yes; but the gentleman is not informed as to the work done by the clerk of the committee. The clerk of a committee does not perform merely clerical work, by any means. The clerk of the Committee on the Public Lands ought to be, and I doubt not he is, posted on the public-land laws, and when bills are introduced he must investigate not only the bills that are pending, but the laws that have been enacted and the decisions of the courts in reference to them.

Mr. WATKINS. The gentleman has referred to the public-land laws, and only last week this Congress passed an appropriation for $25,000 to codify the land laws. That work could readily have been done if we had this expert help that we are now asking. It takes a lawyer of experience, a lawyer who understands what he is doing, to do this kind of work.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman again confuses the matter. Not one of the large committees gets along with a committee clerk who does merely clerical work. The committee clerk is an adviser to the committee, an adviser to the chairman of the committee. He keeps posted on the work of the committee. I was chairman of a committee here, and my clerk went through every bill that was introduced and referred to the committee and wrote many of the reports, and the clerks now write most of the reports that are presented to the House on the bills that are reported to the House. It is not merely clerical work. It requires more skill and more knowledge than it does to take up one of these old codification revisions which have already been reported by the original commission and revise it down to date, although I think the allowance for an expert, if it amounts to anything, if we get a good codification at all, will be a good thing.

But I do not believe you can pay a salary of $4,000 to this employee and properly stop there. The other clerks are just as important and must be just as good-posted individuals.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question.

Mr. LLOYD. I will.

Mr. BRYAN. Do we have a compiler of the laws for the House and another compiler for the Senate? Will the Senate have another compiler at $4,000?

Mr. LLOYD. We have nothing to do with the Senate in this resolution.

Mr. BRYAN. This $4,000 is to be paid exclusively by the House?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRYAN. In other words, the House has a compiler to compile the laws of Congress, and then if the Senate wants to compile the laws of Congress they will have their arrangement?

Mr. LLOYD. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. If the Judiciary Department wants to compile the laws of Congress they will have their arrangement?

Mr. LLOYD. They are not charged with the duty of compiling the laws.

Mr. BRYAN. Does not the gentleman think it would be a better arrangement to have the compiler of laws of Congress a clerk or some one under the Attorney General rather than to have a compiler in each branch of the Congress to do the same work over and over again?

Mr. LLOYD. That system might be a good system, but it has never been adopted. The Committee on Revision of the Laws is charged with that duty.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks for a division.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 43, noes 39.

So the resolution was agreed to.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 1058. An act for the relief of Dommick Taheny and John W. Mortimer; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 1149. An act for the relief of Seth Watson; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 3752. An act to improve the aids to navigation at the entrance to Willapa Bay, Wash.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 4045. An act for the relief of John Chick; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 4875. An act to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to exchange rights of way in connection with lands pertaining to the Lighthouse Service; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. J. Res. 129. Joint resolution relating to the awards and payments thereon in what are commonly known as the Plaza cases; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. AUSTIN], who is detained on account of illness, be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the tariff.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that Mr. AUSTIN, of Tennessee, who is detained on account of sickness, and whom we all hope will soon return to the House, be permitted to extend his remarks on the subject of the tariff. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SALEM RELIEF FUND (S. DOC. NO. 530).

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read the message, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The governor of Massachusetts has sent me the following telegram:

"The Salem relief fund is increasing slowly. The expense of rehabilitation will be enormous, as 3,000 families are homeless and without work. If the National Government could appropriate $200,000, it would assist greatly. I am informed that the action of the National Government at the time of the San Francisco disaster furnished a precedent. Can anything in the way of substantial contribution from the National Government be obtained?"

In view of the great number of homeless and destitute in Salem I very earnestly urge the immediate appropriation by the Congress of $200,000, as requested by the governor, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 3, 1914.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12579.

The SPEAKER. The Chair promised to recognize the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEVY] for a privileged resolution.

DATE OF FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Concurrent resolution to adjourn the present session.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate be authorized to close the present session by adjourning their respective Houses on the 15th day of July, 1914.

[Applause.]

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt by July 15 the appropriation bills will be passed. I have ascertained it will be about impossible for the so-called trust bills to be reported and passed by the Senate for some months. It is perfectly useless to hold us here in session any longer. The country is anxious for us to adjourn at the present time and the Members of both Houses desire to return to their homes. We have been here for more than a year, and it is really in the interest of the people of the United States for us to adjourn on July 15. This country is in a situation like this: We are very prosperous, and have a great crop of wheat, with prospects of over a billion bushels, the largest in the history of the United States. We have passed the reserve-bank bill, which will be of great benefit to the country and help prosperity. The question is whether we shall return to our homes at the present time and give the people time to think over the trust bills, to consider how serious and important they are, and give the Senate time to consider them. They prefer to abide by the Sherman law than to have any further trust legislation.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARNER. Is a resolution of this kind debatable, a resolution to adjourn?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is. A simple resolution to adjourn is not debatable.

Mr. GARNER. But a resolution of this character is not debatable.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, yes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will find out.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Speaker, would a motion for unanimous consent allow the gentleman from New York to proceed?

The SPEAKER. Why, of course, you can do anything by unanimous consent.

Mr. DONOVAN. I so move, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This is not a resolution for simple adjournment, but a resolution to adjourn at a fixed time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows that; and the Chair was hunting it up. The Chair thinks it is debatable; but he would not want to establish any new ruling about it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This is a resolution to fix a time for final adjournment of the Congress and——

The SPEAKER. Anyway the gentleman from Connecticut cuts a Gordian knot by asking unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may have five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEVY. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take up the time of the House, as I think the question is so plain. I objected to the trust bills because they were, in my opinion, illegal and unconstitutional, and so far they have in a great part been so decided by the Senate committee. It will take some time for the Senate to consider them. I want my colleagues here to understand my position. I have always been opposed to what were called trust combinations. The impression is prevalent here that I represent Wall Street interests. I desire to say that I represent no interest; I represent no one but my constituents and the people of the United States. I want prosperity for all our country. [Applause.] That is my sole hope and desire. I have no interest whatsoever beyond that. Every prediction I have made in this House has turned out to be a correct interpretation in the end.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEVY. Yes.

Mr. ADAIR. I believe I understood the gentleman to say that the country now is prosperous?

Mr. LEVY. What does the gentleman say?

Mr. ADAIR. I understood the gentleman to say that the country is prosperous at the present time, and you want this prosperity to continue?

Mr. LEVY. Yes. The country is on the verge of great prosperity.

Mr. ADAIR. The gentleman does not want merely prosperity in New York City?

Mr. LEVY. I say we are on the verge of great prosperity in New York City and the whole country.

Mr. PAYNE. "Verge" is good. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. LEVY. And we should continue so. We have enormous crops, and the reserve banks, if put into practice, will give us great prosperity. The only trouble with us at the present time is that the people are uncertain about the consideration of these trust bills. They want no drastic propositions to interfere with business. We have the Sherman law now, and it has taken 20 years to interpret the same. It will take 10 years to decide the proposition as to what these trust bills provide, if they are carried through. Of course, it will take time. The Senate will have to take time to consider them. Give the people time to consider them. The whole trouble is that the people are uncertain about the legislation that we are passing here so hastily. That is the fact of it. I hope the House will agree with me. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. GARNER] is right. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move to lay this resolution on the table; but I ask unanimous consent that, as the gentleman has had five minutes, I may have five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. How about this side of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize some one on that side.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves to lay the resolution on the table. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned, under the order previously made, until Monday, July 6, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE.

MONDAY, July 6, 1914.

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Rev. J. L. Kibler, D. D., of the city of Washington, offered the following prayer:

Our heavenly Father, we look up to Thee for Thy blessing in meeting the tasks of this day. May we think Thy thoughts, acknowledge Thy ways, and be controlled by those lofty principles that emanate from Thy throne. Give us the consciousness of Thy favor in the consideration of Thy laws. Give us the inspiration of Thy grace in the call of every duty. May Thy kind providence mark out the way and give direction to all our plans, and may we enjoy the blessing of Thy continued favor. We ask it in Jesus' name. Amen.

He also presented petitions of the congregations of the Baptist, Presbyterian, Grace Methodist Episcopal, and Christian Churches of Franklin; of the Blaine Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, of Indianapolis; of the First Presbyterian Church of Mishawaka; of the Epworth League of the Wall Street Methodist Episcopal Church, of Jeffersonville; of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Middlebury; of sundry citizens of Anoka, Winamac, West Indianapolis, Prairie Grove, Crawfordsville, and Winchester; of sundry Woman's Christian Temperance Unions of Fort Wayne; of S. John Harris, Clarence Harris, Sherman Morris, and 47 other citizens of Summitville; of Henry Vogel, Lewis Wright, W. F. Vogel, and 28 other citizens of Terre Haute; and of Mrs. William Yard, Mrs. B. E. Wright, Mrs. Ira D. Bolt, and 6 other citizens of Peru, all in the State of Indiana, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of Local Lodge No. 16, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, of Vigo; of Huntington Division, No. 221, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Huntington; of Barker Division, No. 213, Order of Railway Conductors, of Michigan City; of Seymour Division, No. 301, Order of Railway Conductors, of Seymour; of Local Branch No. 8, Indiana Bottle Blowers' Association, of Dunkirk; of Local Division No. 121, Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of Indianapolis; and of Harbor City Lodge, No. 300, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen, of Michigan City, all in the State of Indiana, praying for the enactment of the so-called Clayton antitrust bill, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented petitions of sundry citizens of Michigan, praying for national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Michigan, remonstrating against national prohibition, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Tailors' Industrial Union of Ann Arbor, Mich., praying for the passage of the so-called Clayton antitrust bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILLIAMS presented a petition of sundry citizens of Vicksburg, Miss., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale, and exportation for sale of intoxicating liquors, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. From the Committee on Appropriations I report back favorably with amendments the bill (H. R. 17041) making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 644) thereon.

I will say, Mr. President, that on the 15th of this month, unless this bill is passed before that time, the Government will be embarrassed for the want of the money carried in it. The current appropriations have been extended until the 15th instant only. In view of that situation, I give notice that tomorrow morning, immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business, I shall ask the Senate to take up and consider the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the calendar.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 6032) for the relief of the heir or heirs of John Howard Payne; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 6033) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Morris (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 6034) granting an increase of pension to Sarah H. Pidge (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 6035) granting an increase of pension to Mary L. De Mars (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CATRON:

A bill (S. 6036) granting an increase of pension to Juan B. Gutierrez; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JAMES:

A bill (S. 6037) granting an increase of pension to Osco L. Robinson (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 6038) granting an increase of pension to Martha J. Bretney (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey:

A bill (S. 6039) for the coinage of certain gold and silver coins in commemoration of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Industrial Expositions.

By Mr. NEWLANDS:

A bill (S. 6040) granting a pension to Lelia F. Devine (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. SHIELDS. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the pending interstate trade commission bill, which I ask may lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to lie on the table and be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. SHIELDS to the bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes, viz: On page 20 strike out all of section 5 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 5. That whenever complaint shall be made to the commission, by petition duly verified, that any corporation has violated or is violating any of the provisions of the antitrust acts, it shall issue to such corporation a notice, accompanied with a copy of the petition, fixing therein the time for the hearing of the complaint, which shall be served upon the defendant 30 days before such hearing, within which time it may make its defense by answer. If upon the hearing the commission shall find that the corporation has violated or is violating the antitrust acts as alleged in the petition, it shall make an order prohibiting the continuance of such unlawful acts, agreements, or practices, which orders may be enforced at the suit of the United States, to be brought by the district attorney of the district by direction of the Attorney General, or by any person or persons prejudiced and parties to the complaint.

"The district court of the United States where the said corporation has its domicile, chief office, or may be found, or where the unlawful act was committed, is vested with jurisdiction to enforce all such orders made by the commission where the corporation fails, neglects, or refuses to comply with the same, provided the court, after a hearing upon the merits, shall be of the opinion that the order was properly made. The petition for this purpose shall concisely state the contract, agreement, acts, or practices constituting the alleged violation of the antitrust acts, the order of the commission made in the premises, and the failure or refusal of the corporation to comply with or perform the same, and contain a prayer for process and appropriate relief. The proceedings shall conform to those in equity cases, and the court may enforce its decrees in the premises by injunction, as provided in such cases.

"The evidence introduced before the commission, subject to exceptions for competency, may be used as if originally taken and filed in the district court, a transcript of the same being sufficient for this purpose; and a duly certified copy of the order of the commission, filed with the petition, shall be prima facie evidence of the alleged violation of the antitrust acts.

"When any person files a petition he shall give security for costs of the proceeding, and if successful will recover all costs of the defendant, including a reasonable attorney's fee, for services in the proceeding in the district court."

AMENDMENT TO ANTITRUST LAW.

Mr. SHIELDS. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed by me to the bill (H. R. 15657) to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the amendment was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 2, line 22, insert as section 2, changing the numbers of the other sections so as to conform, the following:

"That all contracts, agreements, arrangements, acts, and practices which tend, separately or with one or more other transactions for like purposes, to lessen competition in commerce, or restrain or monopolize commerce, or which may form a material part of a conspiracy or combination to restrain or monopolize commerce contrary to the provisions of the antitrust acts, and made or carried on with that intent, are hereby declared unlawful and are prohibited."

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Latta, executive clerk, announced that the President had, on July 6, 1914, approved and signed the following act:

S. 751. An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Morning business is closed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Borah	Goff	Page	Sutherland
Brady	Hughes	Perkins	Swanson
Burton	Jones	Pittman	Thomas
Camden	Kenyon	Sheppard	Thornton
Catron	Kern	Shields	Townsend
Chilton	Lane	Shively	Vardaman
Culberson	Lewis	Smith, Ariz.	Walsh
Cummins	McCumber	Smith, Ga.	White
Dillingham	Martine, N. J.	Smoot	Williams
Fletcher	Norris	Sterling	Works
Gallinger	Overman	Stone

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I was requested to announce the absence of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] on official business. He is paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLIVER].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-three Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. BRANDEGEE, Mr. JAMES, Mr. RANSDELL, and Mr. WEST answered to their names when called.

Mr. MCLEAN, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. HOLLIS, Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. REED, Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. SHAFROTH, and Mr. LEE of Maryland entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. KERN. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] and the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. This announcement will stand for the day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-five Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

NICARAGUAN AND COLOMBIAN TREATIES.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, out of order I wish to introduce a resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 411) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the seal of secrecy is hereby removed from all of the hearings heretofore had which have been printed, except such testimony as may have been received under a pledge of confidence, and that hereafter all hearings be given to the public as soon as the same are corrected by the parties and printed, touching the proposed treaties with Nicaragua and Colombia, and that the consideration of both the treaties with Nicaragua and Colombia be in the open session of the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I wish to say just a word in explanation of the resolution. So far as the Colombian treaty is concerned, it has been public for several weeks. It was first printed in the European papers and was recopied from European papers into American papers, and the matter has been in the possession of the public, even as to the details of the treaty, for some time.

Not only that, Mr. President, but it is being discussed by the public press, and all the details of the transaction which gave rise to the treaty are being brought forward. I can see no reason why that matter should not be considered in public upon the part of the Senate. Indeed, it is in the possession of the public, except such matters as may be deemed to be private by reason of the fact that the transactions are being had in the Committee on Foreign Relations. The nature of the discussion which is going on before the public necessarily demands, it seems to me, that the entire proceedings be in the open. The questions which are related to this treaty are such as the public are interested in. They are quite different in a large measure from questions which ordinarily accompany treaties, and the situation and the relationship of the matter are different from those which usually appertain to treaties.

The idea of having treaties considered in executive session is for the purpose of enabling you to transact that business with a foreign Government without exposing the details of the treaty upon the part of the foreign Government until the final arrangement is made; but all the details are now at hand, and the different views are being expressed by different parties, and every conceivable phase of the controversy is before the public. Why should the evidence be kept from our colleagues not members of the committee and the public?

So far as the Nicaraguan treaty is concerned, Mr. President, I feel that that is essentially a matter of public concern. It is essentially a matter of legislation and may determine a national policy.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the treaty which the Committee on Foreign Relations have been holding hearings on?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand they are printed privately for the use of the committee?

Mr. BORAH. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. And Members of the Senate generally are not allowed to receive copies?

Mr. BORAH. That is correct.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to ask the Senator what action, if any, the committee has taken upon the resolution that I introduced a few days ago to the effect that copies of the evidence which has been taken and which shall be taken on that treaty shall be sent to all Members of the Senate as well as to the members of the Foreign Relations Committee?

Mr. BORAH. I do not think that any action has been taken. I am in sympathy with the suggestion of the Senator, only I would go further; I would make the matter completely open to the public.

Mr. NORRIS. I would be very glad to go further and to express myself in that way. I can see no reason why at least Members of the Senate should not have the evidence that is being taken for the purpose of enlightening Members who will have eventually to vote one way or the other on the treaty.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not desire to discuss in public, until this matter is passed upon, anything which it is not proper to discuss here; but I think, in view of the discussion which is going on in the public press and the facts which are now in possession of the public, I can properly say that the Nicaraguan treaty is essentially a subject for public discussion. It is fundamental in its effects; it establishes a precedent which ought not to be established until the public is fully informed with reference to all the details which led up to the transaction. Those who are in favor of the Colombian treaty ought, of all people, to be in favor of a public discussion of the Nicaraguan treaty, because, as I view it, we are doing that in Nicaragua which will lay the basis for the precise kind of a claim which Colombia is now making against this Government for what it is urged and claimed by some that we did in Panama.

I do not believe, Mr. President, that we are dealing with Nicaragua at all; we are not dealing with the Nicaraguan people, nor with the public officers whom the Nicaraguan people have set up or elected; we are dealing with ourselves; we are dealing with the puppets which we put in power; we are making a treaty with those who do not represent the Nicaraguan people at all. Therefore, Mr. President, before we venture upon any such transaction we ought to discuss it, and to discuss it before those who will be finally affected by the transactions—that is, the American people as a whole.

Mr. President, I do not say anything about this investigation—I do not care to stand in the way of that—as to how things have crept out before we have authorized them to be given out, but I sincerely hope that this resolution will be either passed to-day or immediately considered by the committee and reported for passage. In view of the situation in which the public is now placed the Committee on Foreign Relations should not have anything in a confidential way concerning this transaction.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, as I understand, this resolution is to print all the hearings which have been had before the Committee on Foreign Relations in connection with the Nicaraguan treaty. That committee invited, and there appeared before it, the minister of that country and the financial agent of that country. Each of them was assured that he could speak with utter frankness, because he was speaking to us in executive session. I can not imagine a worse piece of bad faith than after that to publish what these gentlemen in thorough frankness and freedom, being thereto invited, said before that committee.

But, Mr. President, I rose for a different purpose. Upon the last meeting of the Senate I reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate by its direction a resolution which had been introduced by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. Upon request of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] I withheld the report then, and also the request for its immediate consideration until to-day, because the Senator from Nebraska thought that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] desired to be present when the report was made. I now make the report and ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What will become of the pending resolution?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, just a moment before the other matter is presented by the Senator from Mississippi.

Of course, if anyone has appeared before the Foreign Relations Committee who has received the pledge of the committee that whatever he said there would be kept secret, that might necessitate a change of this resolution of mine. I was not aware of any personal pledge having been made to anyone who appeared before the committee. I would not, of course, be in favor of breaking that pledge made upon the part of the committee, without more consideration, at least, than I have given to it. Therefore it might be as to some of these things which have been said that we ought not to divulge them because of that promise, but I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that some one else is interested in this transaction besides the finance minister from Nicaragua. If they have said anything that they would not want in print, I would be willing for that to be kept secret; but I am not willing for them to again come before the committee, or for anybody else to come before that committee, upon these two particular treaties, which are being discussed in public and by the public from every conceivable standpoint, without their understanding that the public is going to have all that comes before the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in reply to the Senator from Idaho I will say that during the entire history of this Republic it has been considered of the very highest importance to get at the very truth of matters when treaties are up for consideration, and that it has been thought always that we were very much more apt to get at the very truth if men could speak with entire freedom and with entire secrecy until such time as, in the interest of the public generally and of both countries, that seal might be removed.

We have had before us not only a minister of one of these countries and the other officer of whom I have spoken, but one of them began by saying that, understanding that he was speaking in absolute freedom and secrecy, he wanted to be interrogated, and he would answer with absolute frankness every question put to him. There was not anybody really that appeared before the committee who did not appear with the understanding that he could speak as in executive session.

Nothing, I think, emphasizes the truth of what I have just said more than the difference between the character of debate carried on in this body in open session and the character of debate carried on in the same body in executive session of the Senate. Men speak much more frankly, very much more fully, and go very much more to the real heart of things in executive session. Of course, where business is of a purely public character, concerning the United States alone, the people of the United States have the right to hear what it is; but where it concerns other parties who have their rights as well as we ours, and where it might possibly interfere with the further conduct of negotiations by the State Department with those other parties, it seems to me it is wiser to adhere to the practice of the forefathers and to consider business of that sort in secrecy until the result has been arrived at which is proposed to be sent to the Senate and the Senate has acted upon that result so reported.

I do not care to discuss the matter, and I did not rise for that purpose; but the Senator having made his remarks and this resolution having been withheld until he could return, I thought I would take advantage of the moment while he was in the Chamber to present it.

Mr. STONE and Mr. NORRIS addressed the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BORAH. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. I did not know that the Senator from Idaho had the floor.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I have the floor.

Mr. STONE. I will wait until the Senator has concluded, though I have been endeavoring to obtain the floor for some time.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like, with the permission of the Senator from Idaho, to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question. Is it the intention of the committee to permit this testimony to be read by Members of the Senate?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should say, in answer to the Senator—I can not speak, of course, of the intention of the committee, for I have no way of arriving at that—but if the Senator wants to know what my opinion of practical results will be, I should say that, if there were a favorable report from the committee upon the treaty and the treaty in that way came before the Senate, Senators in executive session would be, of course, furnished with the information which the committee had.

Mr. NORRIS. I suppose the taking of the testimony is for the purpose of enlightening the Members of the Senate as well as the members of the Foreign Relations Committee?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course——

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose the committee should report adversely; and that the Senate desired to approve the treaty, how would Senators not members of the committee be able to get information unless they were permitted to read the evidence that was taken before the committee?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am giving the Senator merely my idea. When the matter comes before the Senate, then each individual Senator will be entitled to all the information there is; but until it is reported it is not before the Senate. It is always, I suppose, in order to move that a committee be discharged from the further consideration of a certain subject matter, and that it be reported to the Senate. If it be a treaty, then it is reported to the Senate in executive session. I have no reason to believe that the usual motion to discharge a committee from the consideration of a matter and report it to the Senate at a certain time or on a day certain does not apply to treaties as well as to other business before standing committees of the Senate. So that the answer to the second part of the Senator's query would be that, if we reported the treaty to the Senate adversely and the Senate wanted it reported favorably, a motion might be made discharging us and instructing us to bring the matter into the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi would not have any objection to the Colombian treaty being considered in open session, would he?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have objections to all treaties being considered in open session. I do not think it is the right way to consider treaties, just as I do not think it is the right way to consider appointments. The Senator and I both know that in considering appointments, for example, we state what we absolutely believe, and we state things that we have heard, but which we do not know. We can meet together and go to the very heart of the matter. Discussions occur in executive session concerning the private character of appointees, and all that sort of thing, that no man would want to give to the public, if he could help it. So it is with regard to treaties. There frequently is in connection with a treaty reasons that are diplomatic in their character that ought to be confided to the State Department, to the President, and to the Senate of the United States in executive session alone. I may be old-fashioned, and that may be somewhat out of date, but that is, at any rate, my notion. I am not arguing it; I am merely stating my idea.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Mississippi that ordinarily that is true; but both of these treaties and the discussion of the facts in regard to them have been lifted out of the confidence of the committee; they are now in the possession of the public, and they are being discussed in the public press. All kinds of charges with reference to misconduct upon the part of public officers, Presidents and ex-Presidents, Secretaries of State, and everybody else are being made. There is only one way to answer charges of that kind, and that is by pitiless publicity of the facts and by discussion in the open upon the part of all parties concerned. It is better for the people of Colombia, better for the people of Nicaragua, and infinitely better for our people that these treaties be discussed in the open, in view of the charges which have been made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, it is always competent for any Senator to ask that the State Department forward to the Senate certain papers or all the papers concerning a certain transaction; and it is competent always in executive session to move that the seal of secrecy be removed from certain papers; but the question would be determined in executive session of the Senate as to whether the seal of secrecy should or should not be removed. Senators in talking to one another in executive session can talk much more freely as to the pros and contras of the motion. I ask the Senator now, however, to let us have unanimous consent to read the resolution reported by me and consider it now. I refer to the resolution which I withheld on Friday last because of the Senator's temporary absence at that time.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, as I understand, there is a resolution pending that will have to be disposed of in some way, and

I should like a few moments in which to express some views respecting that resolution, if I can have the favor of the floor.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to perfect the resolution which I offered, in view of the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi, by adding, after the word "printed," in line 2, the words "except such testimony as may have been received under a pledge of confidence." Now, Mr. President, I yield the floor to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I will speak first, briefly, to the inquiry made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS]. The Senator from Nebraska desired to know what action the Committee on Foreign Relations has taken or is likely to take on the resolution he submitted some days ago calling upon that committee to supply all Members of the Senate with printed copies of the hearings being had with respect to the so-called Nicaraguan treaty. The committee has taken no action on the resolution. What action it may take when we shall have the good fortune to secure a quorum of the committee I am not prepared to say. Personally I do not think there is any good reason for having these hearings supplied at this time to all Senators both on and off the committee.

In fact, there is no treaty with Nicaragua pending before the Committee on Foreign Relations. The Secretary of State, on behalf of the President, is carrying on some negotiations with the Government of Nicaragua with a view to making a treaty between the two countries, but no such treaty has yet been consummated. The Secretary of State has outlined to the Committee on Foreign Relations the general plan of a treaty tentatively agreed upon between the representatives of the two Governments and has asked a conference with the Committee on Foreign Relations. In advance of concluding any treaty he desires the judgment of the membership of the Senate as to the wisdom or propriety of incorporating certain tentative provisions in the proposed convention. So what is being done by the Committee on Foreign Relations with respect to the so-called Nicaraguan treaty is merely to hold a conference with the Secretary of State. In connection with that, some members of the committee have asked that certain gentlemen, more or less familiar with Nicaraguan affairs, should be heard by the committee before it shall express in confidence its opinion to the Secretary of State.

Mr. President, even if the treaty were completed and were pending before the Committee on Foreign Relations, and hearings were being had on a completed treaty pending before the committee, I can see no more reason for having those hearings printed for general distribution among the Members of the Senate than there would be for a member of that committee to come out of an executive session and detail to his fellow Senators, not members of the committee, what was said before the committee orally, and not taken down. To do that would be such a radical departure from the uniform course of procedure in executive sessions of committees as to amount to a complete revolution. It may be that it would be a wise and timely revolution to make it the rule to bring matters that are heard before committees in executive sessions out into the open Senate; but if you do that you will put an end to executive sessions. If we do that the doors of the committee rooms should be opened wide to whomsoever might desire to enter and hear what is said and see what is done. I should oppose a course of that kind with respect to committees generally. I think it would be the height of unwisdom. I think it is of the highest importance that there should be executive sessions of committees, and that the proceedings had in executive sessions should be kept and guarded by the membership with scrupulous fidelity. I think any Senator who goes out of an executive session and details or exploits what occurred in secret session scarcely deserves the honor of membership on any committee. Especially is that true when we deal with foreign affairs. Our foreign relations involve the most delicate things with which the Nation has to deal, and I think it would be destructive if we abolished the policy of private and confidential communications between Governments. Why, Mr. President, I do not believe diplomatic negotiations could be successfully conducted if they were conducted in the open. There is just as much reason for observing secrecy and confidence on the part of the Foreign Relations Committee as there is on the part of the Secretary of State or the President himself. It ought to occur to any Senator after a moment's reflection that without such confidence the nations of the world, through their representatives, would be slow to communicate with our Department of State, and certainly slow to communicate with the freedom of consultation that must obtain when negotiations of the character we are discussing are being considered. If it did not end all diplomatic negotiations, it would at least desperately embarrass them.

These hearings referred to by the Senator from Nebraska, and which are printed from day to day, are printed for the information of the members of the committee. Of course, they need not be printed. The proceedings could be heard orally without printing; but some of the members of the committee are often unable to attend some of the hearings, and naturally they desire to know what was said at the hearings when they were absent. They are printed for the use and convenience of the committee. As the Senator from Mississippi said, after the treaty has been reported favorably or unfavorably to the Senate, all information in the possession of the Committee on Foreign Relations will, of course, be laid before the Senate in executive session in order that Senators may be advised as fully as members of the committee when they come to discuss and vote upon the ratification of the treaty.

My friend from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] says that in the case of this Nicaraguan treaty and this Colombian treaty an exception ought to be made. The Senator says he was not aware that certain things had been said before the Committee on Foreign Relations at some of the hearings. I know that is true. I think the Senator's information as to what occurred before the committee is for the most part gathered from the newspapers. The Senator is a member of the committee, but I think I am safe in saying that he has not attended a single session of the committee since the hearings began, and therefore, of course, he does not know what was said or done; but he reads the newspapers, and, yielding to the pressure from the outside, he becomes the champion of the policy of putting aside the old rule and the old custom approved by the wisdom of years and of decades, and of dragging these international negotiations into the open for public exploitation. I do not agree with the honorable Senator. I think his premise and his whole argument are utterly and fatally defective.

Mr. President, there are few important treaties ever brought into the Senate, few ever even considered by the Foreign Relations Committee, with respect to which the newspapers have not, by one means or another, gotten hold of some information, no matter how firmly set the seal of secrecy may be; and this information, or alleged information, which is sometimes approximately correct, sometimes incorrect, and sometimes little more than guesswork, is printed. But I hope we shall not in future be led, as we have not been in the past, by publications of this character into a course of procedure that would seriously embarrass the Government in carrying on and consummating negotiations respecting great international agreements.

Mr. President, I move that the resolution offered by the Senator from Idaho be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. STONE. I will.

Mr. TOWNSEND. As I understood the Senator's statement, it presents a different situation from the one I supposed existed in the Senate and before the Foreign Relations Committee. If I understood him correctly, he stated that these hearings had been instigated by the Secretary of State; that he had asked the Foreign Relations Committee to collaborate or consult with him in reference to a treaty. My understanding has been that this matter originated in a resolution of inquiry which was presented to the Senate, asking the Committee on Foreign Relations to investigate for the Senate certain things that were reported to exist in reference to our relations involved in a treaty with Nicaragua, and that the Committee on Foreign Relations was about that business; that it was acting under the instructions of the Senate through a resolution to investigate and report to the Senate such conditions as it might find.

Mr. STONE. What is the question the Senator wishes to propound?

Mr. TOWNSEND. My question is whether or not I am correct in my understanding.

Mr. STONE. The Senator is not correct. I have stated the case as it is. If the Senator heard what I said——

Mr. TOWNSEND. I did.

Mr. STONE. Then it is not necessary for me to repeat it at any length. I will say, in a word, however, that there is no treaty with Nicaragua before the committee. The Secretary of State has laid before the committee a tentative treaty which he has been negotiating with the representatives of the Government of Nicaragua.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes; I understood that.

Mr. STONE. But before concluding the treaty or going further with it he has come to the Committee on Foreign Relations and with perfect frankness laid the whole business before that committee, to ask the judgment and opinion of the committee in advance as to what should be done with respect to the proposed treaty, and whether the committee itself had objections to any particular features of it or to it as a whole.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then, as I understand, the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations is not acting and has not been acting under a resolution adopted by the Senate to investigate those conditions?

Mr. STONE. No resolution has been adopted by the Senate. The Senator's colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] introduced a resolution authorizing or seeking to authorize the Committee on Foreign Relations to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and so forth, in the usual form, which was referred in due course to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate. Subsequently, in the course of the conference with the Secretary, certain gentlemen volunteered to appear before the committee and detail what they knew of conditions in Nicaragua. The minister from Nicaragua and the financial agent of Nicaragua, who, before he began to act in that capacity, was the minister of finance of Nicaragua, appeared before the committee and made a statement. They appeared on invitation. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has very accurately stated all that is necessary to be stated about the hearing of those Nicaraguan officials.

The newspapers printed some matter respecting those hearings that most of the committee, at least, if not all of them, thought was improper to come from any member of the committee; and, on the authority of the committee, I offered a resolution authorizing the committee to take such action as it saw fit to take to discover the source of these committee leaks. That resolution was likewise referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate; but neither of the resolutions to which I have referred has up to this time been reported to the Senate or acted upon.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I understand that the Senator from Missouri has moved that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations. Is that motion not debatable?

Mr. GALLINGER and Mr. STONE. It is debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks it is debatable.

Mr. BORAH. Very well. Then I want to say just a word in answer to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. President, it is true that ordinarily all negotiations and all hearings and all debate on all pending treaties should be considered in executive session, and I would not be in favor, ordinarily, of opening to the public the discussion of these matters until such time as the committee had determined what it should do. In other words, I agree with what the Senator has said in reference to the virtues of confidential communications and executive sessions, ordinarily. But all the virtues of confidential communication of an executive session have already been forfeited. These matters are in the possession of the public. Both treaties have been published. The matters are being discussed in detail. Documents—I would not say from the Secretary of State, but documents from the State Department—have been printed and are being printed, and every feature and form of the transaction is now before the public.

The only question is whether or not this committee should go on and proceed with the executive sessions, leaving the inference that something is in the possession of the committee which the public has not. Furthermore, these treaties, as I have said, are essentially matters of legislation, necessitating at some time time an appropriation of $28,000,000.

Mr. President, it is true, as the Senator has said—and I presume he thought he had good reason for saying so—that I have not been in attendance upon the Committee on Foreign Relations since the Nicaragua treaty has been up the last time. I might say truthfully, if I desired to, that business elsewhere has engaged me; but I do not desire to place it upon that ground at all. Two years ago this same treaty, in substance, was before the Committee on Foreign Relations, as everyone knows. It was thoroughly discussed and considered, and since the Senator has gone into the matter as to who was in attendance upon the committee, I will state that every Democrat upon the committee voted against the treaty at that time, and my vote, voting with them, killed the treaty.

I made up my mind as to the unfortunate terms of that treaty, and since that treaty was before the committee two years ago I have spent a great deal of time upon my own initiative in ascertaining the exact facts with reference to conditions in Nicaragua and the facts which have brought forward that treaty.

I was not willing to submit the investigation which I have made and the facts which I have in my possession to the clamp of a confidential or executive session. I regard this treaty as so fundamental, so important to the people of this country, that if I can not get the consent of the Senate to place before the Senate the facts which I have in my possession I shall feel constrained myself to disregard some of the rules of the Senate. I desire to proceed in an orderly way and to get the consent of my colleagues upon this proposition, but I have remained away from the Foreign Relations Committee because I felt that I was in possession of facts which I was not willing to have stated that I secured at the hands of the Foreign Relations Committee and was therefore violating the rules of the committee. I felt that I should likely at some time feel compelled to discuss this question in the open.

Mr. President, I should like to see these matters discussed in the open and by consent of the entire Senate. I prefer very much to proceed in that way. I have no desire to unnecessarily disregard a rule of the Senate, but there are conditions which would compel me to do so.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, just a word. I regret that my distinguished friend assigns the reasons he gave for not attending the sessions of the committee, especially when we are so often harassed by the lack of a quorum, and that he has not attended the sessions of the committee for the reason that he has in his possession certain information gathered through his own industry respecting this treaty, and that he did not care to be tied up by the rules of executive confidence.

Of course I am surprised to hear the Senator from Idaho declare what course he will pursue if he can not get the consent of the Senate to discuss what is going on in our negotiations with foreign countries. I am surprised to hear him say that if he can not lay before the public with the consent of the Senate what is contained in a treaty even before it is finally acted upon, and give publicly the reasons for his opposition to a treaty, he will do it anyhow; that he will violate the rules of decorum and what have hitherto been recognized as rules of propriety, and, taking the bit in his own mouth, will ride over all rules and customs and expose whatever he thinks he would like to expose.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Without even taking the members of the committee into his confidence.

Mr. STONE. My colleague on the committee has suggested that the Senator threatens to do this without even taking the members of the committee into his confidence. I do not know what information the Senator from Idaho has concealed in his breast. He does not honor the committee, of which he is a member, with his confidence.

Mr. BORAH. If the Senate will adopt this resolution, I will take the committee into my confidence. Otherwise I feel constrained to pursue my own course.

Mr. STONE. But unless the Senate does adopt it, then the Senator has something up his sleeve, some secret information that he is husbanding to exploit before the newspaper gallery, that it may go forth to the country as an act of his, destructive of the procedure of this body, a procedure that has had the approval of the Senate from time immemorial.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I believe firmly if this matter is discussed in public the Nicaragua treaty will die as it should die. I believe it is based upon deception, misrepresentation, fraud, and corruption, and I believe I can show it.

Mr. STONE. Does the Senator believe if that is true that his colleagues in executive session would ratify a treaty which for the reasons the Senator has given should be rejected, whether heard in the open or in executive session?

Mr. BORAH. No; I do not believe my colleagues would do so for a moment, but so long as there are called before that committee the mere puppets whom we have set up in that Government, who ask for the concealment of their statements and the secrecy of their testimony, you will not get the true facts; and that is what is happening. If you will take the lid off and invite all interested parties to come before the committee, there will be a different story told from what is being told now.

Mr. STONE. The Senator from Idaho is a distinguished member of the committee, and if he has any confidence in the membership of the committee it seems to me he could come and bring to us what he says are the true facts and lay them before the committee, and if they see any such condition of affairs as he has indicated I venture to say there is not a Senator on the committee who would vote to report the treaty favorably.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, before the Senator from Missouri takes his seat, if he will permit the interruption, I would ask him the question whether as chairman of that committee he would not immediately summon before the committee anybody whose name might be given to him by the Senator from Idaho, so that we might judge of the reliability of the witness as well as have in our possession the facts or the alleged facts stated by him?

Mr. STONE. Oh, the Senator can have the full power of the committee and of the Senate to bring before the committee anyone he wishes, leaving it wholly to him to say whom he wishes to be summoned and whose testimony he thinks would throw the flood of light he says it would throw on the whole situation. There would be no trouble about that.

Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE] suggests to me that the motion to refer can not be acted upon this morning under the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There was a request for present consideration, and the Chair understands if there is objection it must go over until to-morrow.

Mr. STONE. I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not care to have the resolution referred to the committee at this time. If it can not be voted upon here, I will ask the leave of the Chair to withdraw it.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Idaho will not take that course. A single objection will carry it over until to-morrow, and it will then come up as a resolution coming over from a former day and have a status on the calendar as a part of the morning business. It relates to an important matter. Possibly this is not an opportune time to discuss it in all its details, but it is a proper time to have it understood that the subject matter of it shall be inquired of very thoroughly here before an attitude adverse to the request contained in it is reached and announced by the Senate.

For myself, I believe that the proposed Nicaragua treaty and the Colombia treaty ought to be considered in open executive session, just as the treaty with Panama and the treaty with Colombia were in former Congresses considered on this floor. The proposed treaties are no ordinary conventions entered into by Governments of something like an equal dignity, power, and standing in relation to grave and important matters of differences which occasionally require adjustment by some form of convention. They are somewhat governmental in character, and the treatment of them here will present legislative questions rather than the determination of the mere terms of a contract which will be the end of a given dispute. They pertain to the present and the future relationship of this country to the lesser Governments to the south of us. The relationship that we establish by the ratification of either of these treaties will be fundamental and permanent in character, and will inevitably establish a closer relationship between this Government and those with whom we deal now in this preliminary and indirect way. What this relationship will be when its ultimate extent is defined by the logic of actualities is a matter concerning which I do not find it necessary to express an opinion on this occasion. The first step in a great scheme like that is the vital one, and before we enter upon it we ought to have an opportunity in open session to take the public into our confidence and to discuss it in the light of what the rational public opinion of this country will permit to be done.

Whilst I would not have presented the resolution just at this time, I think now that it has been presented it might create an erroneous idea of what is the real sentiment of the Senate if it should be summarily withdrawn or should be disposed of in some technical way.

Mr. BORAH. I withdraw the request for the withdrawal in order that the resolution may go over.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. It will be printed by that time, and we will have an opportunity of knowing just exactly what there is in it, even if we shall not be fully prepared at that time to finally dispose of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over under the rule.

INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN RELATIONS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask for the reading and for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The SECRETARY. The senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] reports favorably from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate Senate resolution 407, which is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be, and hereby is, authorized and empowered to investigate and ascertain from whom information of any business transacted before said committee in executive session relating to international affairs is given out; and to prosecute said investigation said committee is hereby authorized and empowered to send for persons and papers, to issue subpœnas, to administer oaths, and to employ stenographers to take testimony at not exceeding $1 per printed page; the expenses of said investigation to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate on warrants signed by the chairman of said committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It ought to read at the end, "the chairman of said Committee on Foreign Relations."

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator suggest that the report be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; this is for an investigation to be conducted by the Committee on Foreign Relations. It was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, and we have reported it favorably, and I ask for its present consideration.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am going to venture to ask the learned Senator from Mississippi if he has the expectation that anything valuable will result from another investigation trying to ascertain how the secrets of executive sessions reach the public through the newspapers.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, that would be one of the hardest nuts to crack that has been passed up to me in a long time. I do not believe that I can answer it either yes or no. I have a glimmering hope that we may be able to find out something, but I do not know.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was looking over my desk a few days ago and I came across a bit of parchment—possibly it is some high quality of paper—upon which was recorded the fact that five Senators had been appointed to make an investigation of this kind, at the head of which was the Senator from Texas who recently left the Senate, Mr. Bailey. I chanced to be, I think, possibly second on that distinguished list. I do not at this moment recall what gave rise to the demand for an investigation, but it was a situation similar to this. I believe that committee never was called together, at least I have no recollection of it, and it died, I apprehend, for the reason that the chairman of the committee, perhaps, or the members of the committee looking back over the history of the Senate and ascertaining that we had spent a good deal of money and a great many printed pages in investigations of this kind, with no results, concluded that there was not any use of having another investigation.

I apprehend that this will share the same fate. It will amuse the country a little; the newspapers will have some new text to exploit the futility of the Senate in discovering leaks that happen somewhere and in some way and that must come from this Chamber; they can not come from any other source; and after spending a little money in these days of economy no result will be reached.

Now, I do not object to it, of course. I hope the committee will have a pleasant time in making the investigation; but the newspapers of this country will never be caught when they exploit—getting information from some source not very far from this Chamber—the doings of the Senate in executive session. That is my judgment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, there is this much, that all must acknowledge the truthfulness of what the Senator from New Hampshire has just said. It is a sad commentary upon the membership of this body, and it is a sad commentary also upon the membership of committees now and then, that gentlemen whose honor is at stake should not regard their honor and that, then, afterwards we can not find out which particular gentlemen had not regarded their honor; but, none the less, it is our duty to try to make our rules respected, and if we can do something as a result of the investigation, so much gain. I hope the resolution will pass.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I remember sitting here and witnessing a trusted employee of the Senate driven from the position he held, going away from the Senate with a blemish on his character. The Senate believed that that particular individual, who occupied a high position in the country, who afterwards was elected to the other House, was guilty of giving away the secrets of the executive sessions. I did not believe at that time that that man was guilty. I knew him well, and was sure that he was a man of high integrity.

Now, I am not going to say that any Members of the Senate give away these secrets. I will not say that any employee of the Senate gives them away. Sometimes they are so accurate it would seem as though a first-class stenographer had taken down what was said in the Senate—better reports than I could have given, I know, as a matter of recollection; but how they have received them I confess I do not know. It has been a matter of absolute wonder to me how the newspapers do sometimes get such accurate reports. I do not know. It may be that a Senator inadvertently gives out a suggestion and some other Senator inadvertently another suggestion, and these bright men who sit in that gallery looking down on us, sometimes outrageously abusing and misrepresenting us, put those pieces together and make a story. I sometimes thought it came about in that way. It may be that I am wrong. I can not conceive any more than the Senator can that any Member of this body would deliberately and intentionally disclose the secrets of executive sessions. I can not believe that can be true.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I of course do not want to go into a discussion. Very frequently these bright young men, who sometimes know as much about public business as any of us, and, by the way, are just as competent to discuss it, do arrive at their results by putting two and two together and getting four, when it may be that they have neglected another two and there ought to have been six; but I recall one case where a speech of a Senator in executive session appeared verbatim et literatim. However these things come about, there is no use going into it now. I should like to have the resolution passed. We thought it better to recommend its passage.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The reoslution was agreed to.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SMOOT. Regular order, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. SMOOT. As I understand, the morning business has been concluded?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business was concluded about an hour ago.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. KENYON. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] and vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. TOWNSEND (when his name was called). I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] is absent from the city on important business and that he is paired with the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. I ask if the junior Senator from Missouri has voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has voted.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am paired with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], but I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. SMITH of Michigan] and vote "yea."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I wish to announce the transfer of my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CHILTON. I have a general pair with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] to the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. McLEAN. Has the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] voted. Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. McLEAN. I have a pair with that Senator, and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Has the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA] voted?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee has not voted.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Then I withhold my vote, as I have a pair with that Senator.

Mr. CATRON (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], who, I understand, is absent on account of illness in his family, and will let my vote stand.

Mr. GOFF. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. He being absent, I withhold my vote.

In justice to the Senator from South Carolina, I desire to say that I was paired with that Senator on Friday last. We had made arrangements for an announcement to that effect, but, inadvertently, the announcement was not made.

Mr. WALSH. I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT]. He being absent, I refrain from voting.

Mr. JAMES (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS] to the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. KENYON. I desire to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] on important business, and also the absence of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]; the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER]; and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. STEPHENSON] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE].

The result was announced—yeas 39, nays 16, as follows:

YEAS—39.

Bankhead	Martin, Va.	Reed	Swanson
Camden	Martine, N. J.	Shafroth	Thompson
Chamberlain	Nelson	Sheppard	Thornton

So the motion of Mr. SIMMONS was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13811) making appropriation for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, this river and harbor bill ought not to pass the Senate without very thorough consideration. I am convinced that the Members of the Senate do not understand the nature of many of the items included in this measure. I am compelled to admit that within the last week or 10 days I have discovered some items with which I myself was not familiar. I regret to notice that projects which were maturely considered 10 or 12 years ago, and excluded after careful deliberation, have at the present time, when conditions are less favorable for their development, found their way back into the bill. I do not believe that there is any way by which the extravagant and wasteful appropriations which appear in this measure year after year can be defeated, except by the defeat of a river and harbor bill, or, at least, by its very material modification.

I repeat what I said in the beginning of this discussion, that it is a time for the sincere friends of river and harbor appropriations to pause and consider. If they do, they will, I think, realize that so much that is objectionable is finding its way into this measure that before long there will be such an outcry against it, such an uprising, I may say, that the passage of river and harbor bills will be impossible. I can not think that the people will not, when this measure is thoroughly considered, visit such criticism upon it that it will not be approved, and its passage at this time will be but imposing another load on a system which is becoming very objectionable as it is now prosecuted.

When I was speaking on Wednesday last I mentioned briefly the bill of 1907, and I wish to take up that measure at this time. I do so because that bill was the result of long study and the very courageous elimination of objectionable items. It was the final development in a progress toward more salutary policies, and toward the elimination of waste in river and harbor bills. I do not say it was a perfect bill; in looking it over now after the lapse of seven years I find some items which my present judgment would not approve. I do not say that we made no mistakes; but I think it is due to the committee, which considered that bill so carefully, that it should be explained and its advantages pointed out. It was not a small bill. As I stated on Wednesday, it was the largest river and harbor bill ever passed by Congress. We were not afraid of appropriating money liberally for the harbors and rivers of the country, but we did desire to make every appropriation count for national benefit and exclude everything which was undesirable. I am credibly informed—in fact, I know—that that bill with the report upon it was before President Taft when he filed his memorandum on the bill of 1910.

In addition to the committee, I wish to give credit to the Engineer Corps of the Army. The bill was not the mere adoption of reports which had been filed, but members of the Engineer Corps from New England to Texas and California were summoned before the committee. They explained the items; there was a pruning where unnecessary amounts had been recommended, and with equal care and equal courage additional amounts were placed in the bill where their estimates were not sufficient. I wish especially to give credit to Gen. MacKenzie, who was at that time Chief of the Engineer Corps of the Army. He spent with me, along with other members of the corps, evening after evening, not only for weeks but for more than a month. He suggested the phraseology of many of the provisions of that bill. He had held, during his membership in the corps, divers assignments on the Mississippi River and elsewhere, and had a familiarity with all the projects in the country that I have never known to be surpassed. The committee and its chairman had the benefit of his judgment in regard to every item in the bill, and it was brought before the House and passed there with little opposition. Then it came to the Senate, where additions were made, but we were able to agree without any very serious difficulty, and passed a bill that carried appropriations and authorizations of about $87,000,000. Just as they call Lord Coke's reports "the reports," so I assert with confidence that it is proper to call that measure of 1907 "the river and harbor bill"; and I would that the policies exemplified in it and the same care had been continued since.

I do not wish to visit censure upon anyone. I am very sure that the present chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the House has given days and nights of the most careful and conscientious study to this measure. Members of the Senate also have granted hearings by days and have given very careful attention to it. Members of both committees have labored upon it, but in the face of the pressure brought to bear they have fallen far behind the ideas and policies which were exemplified in the bill of 1907. If these tendencies continue, wastefulness and extravagance will find such a foothold in the bill that very general popular condemnation will be awakened.

I read briefly from this report, found on page 3581 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for Thursday, February 20, 1913. The original copies of the report have now become very scarce.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if at that time we were reporting annual or biennial river and harbor bills? Had we gotten to the annual stage at that time?

Mr. BURTON. We then had biennial river and harbor bills. In 1900 there was a bill passed which was a sort of administrative measure, which included for the first time what is called a provision for emergencies, under which, on the approval of the local engineer and the Chief of Engineers and the Secretary of War, an amount could be given for what was called emergency work for the maintenance of a project already under way. Certain surveys were provided for. In 1901 a bill was reported, which failed at the last moment of the session. In 1902 a river and harbor bill was passed which, with one exception, was the largest in its appropriations that had ever passed up to that time. The continuing-contact system was adopted in that bill on a very large scale. In 1904 another administrative bill was passed, with divers appropriations for projects where appropriations were urgently needed and with another emergency provision. In 1905 a regular river and harbor bill was passed. Then, after two years, this bill of 1907, which, as I have twice stated already, was the largest ever passed, was enacted.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator if it is generally understoood that hereafter we are to have annual river and harbor bills?

Mr. BURTON. Annual river and harbor bills.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is an established principle, is it?

Mr. BURTON. I think so. At some time in the course of this discussion I may state the advantages and disadvantages of the annnual bill. I think there are both advantages and disadvantages.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will ask the Senator if we had reached either annual or biennial bills when the bill of 1907 was passed? Was not the next river and harbor bill passed in 1910?

Mr. BURTON. There was a bill passed in 1909 which made general appropriations for maintenance, and which also provided for certain projects.

Mr. RANSDELL. It was a very small bill, was it not, carrying about $9,000,000?

Mr. BURTON. No; it carried $10,071,625.

Mr. RANSDELL. May it not be fairly said that we did not reach the annual principle of river and harbor bills until the bill of 1910?

Mr. BURTON. I think that statement may be correctly made, because that was the first bill after 1907 that may be called a general river and harbor bill in which there was provision not only for the maintenance of existing projects, but also for the further improvement of projects under way and for new projects.

Mr. RANSDELL. So that practically the bill of 1907 provided for three years?

Mr. BURTON. Yes. Indeed, as to many projects, it provided, as I shall point out, for four years.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator, in addition to that, what has been the custom as to carrying appropriations for rivers and harbors, especially for maintenance, in the sundry civil appropriation bill?

Mr. BURTON. It is not the custom to carry appropriations for maintenance in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. KENYON. There are appropriations which relate to rivers and harbors carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. BURTON. Yes; amounting to $6,990,000 in the bill which has just come over from the House.

Mr. KENYON. Yes; it is here now. I want to ask the Senator whether the custom of carrying those appropriations in that bill is one that has existed for some time?

Mr. BURTON. The first projects of that nature were initiated in 1890. There were then a comparatively small number of them. It may be said that the custom of providing for continuing contracts commenced in 1890 and reached its maximum in 1907. I have not examined these specific items in the sundry civil bill, but I should fancy there were some of them for the completion of projects begun as long ago as 1907, and possibly even earlier than that.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, the point I am getting at is that the river and harbor bill does not show the real facts as to the money that is being appropriated for rivers and harbors and creeks throughout the country. We must take into consideration the sundry civil bill, also, to get at the amount.

Mr. BURTON. To get at the total amount expended. I think, however, there is rather a worse objection than that to the present bill, and that is that the bill leaves us in such doubt as to what the project is going to cost, while under the continuing contract system the total expense would be clearly set forth. There are numerous items of that nature in this bill, and I shall call attention to some of them later. I have already called attention to some.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. HUGHES. Are there any items in this bill which were put in over the protest or without the recommendation of the Board of Engineers?

Mr. BURTON. I think there is no new project in this bill—possibly there is one, however, and that added in the Senate—which was placed in the bill contrary to the recommendation of the engineers; but there are very large appropriations here for projects that the engineers never recommended that have been carried from year to year. I shall wish to take up all of those in their order.

Mr. HUGHES. That means, then, that while there are no new projects in the bill which have not been recommended by the engineers, yet the bill carries appropriations which the engineers would not now recommend?

Mr. BURTON. Yes. There is another feature. That question can not be answered without making this explanation: There are projects in this bill that at first the engineers condemned, and I may say condemned in decided language; but then a request was made for another survey, or a resolution was passed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors asking for a reexamination, and the second or third time a report came in mildly commending the project.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BURTON. In just a minute. There is another class of appropriations in this bill, and those, I think, are the most extravagant, where the engineers reported the facts, and, instead of recommending or condemning, wound up their report by saying: "It is a matter for Congress to determine whether this appropriation shall be made or not." I think some of the worst items have come in under that kind of a report, where it is correct to say that the engineers never recommended it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire of the Senator how many of those projects, reported upon in that way, were adversely considered by Congress?

Mr. BURTON. There are very few items that have found their way into this bill in which, at the time of the insertion of the item or the adoption of the project, there was a distinctly adverse report.

Mr. THOMAS. Perhaps I did not express the idea I had in mind. The Senator stated that in many instances these engineers would report upon projects without any recommendation of their own, leaving it to Congress to determine whether to go on with it or not.

Mr. BURTON. If I may interrupt the Senator from Colorado a minute, there are not many of those, but they are very important and large ones.

Mr. THOMAS. In how many instances did Congress refuse to act upon them favorably, and in how many did Congress act favorably by making appropriations for them?

Mr. BURTON. I think in the last four years they have acted favorably on every one.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator about the recommendations of the boards that have been changed. Does the Senator mean that the same board, after reporting adversely on various projects, has subsequently made favorable reports?

Mr. BURTON. The same board has done that in some instances. In some instances a special board was constituted to report on a project, and it made an unfavorable report, and then another board with different membership made a favorable report.

Mr. NORRIS. How are these special boards constituted? Who constitutes them?

Mr. BURTON. The members are chosen by the Chief of Engineers. There are sometimes three and sometimes five members.

Mr. NORRIS. What would be the occasion for a special board?

Mr. BURTON. A project of unusual difficulty or complication, or one of exceptional magnitude.

Mr. NORRIS. Would this special board report on a project that had already been examined by the regular board?

Mr. BURTON. There have been, I think, instances of that kind. I ought to add, in explaining about those special boards, that in some instances they have been appointed in pursuance of an express resolution by Congress or a provision in a river and harbor bill. Let me mention a very good illustration, the "Lakes to the Gulf deep waterway," which was examined under a provision in the act of 1907. It was directed that a special board be appointed to examine that project. They did examine it, and made a very elaborate report.

Mr. NORRIS. Had it been reported upon before by the regular board?

Mr. BURTON. No; it had not been. There is this about it: There were different sections of the route on which reports had been made. The proposed waterway to the Mississippi River had been reported by a board of which Gen. Ernst was the chairman, and then engineers had reported on other portions, including part of the Mississippi River, but there had been no general report on the whole project.

Mr. NORRIS. How many special reports had been made on the deep-waterway proposition? The first report was adverse, as I understand, was it not?

Mr. BURTON. I have the report right here before me. Yes; it was practically adverse, at any rate.

Mr. NORRIS. Was it afterwards reversed and made into a favorable report?

Mr. BURTON. No; never. The Engineer Corps have never gone back upon that report.

Mr. NORRIS. They are still standing by their adverse report?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Then that was an instance where Congress provided for something in the face of an adverse report?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; partially.

Mr. NORRIS. Has that occurred very often as to river and harbor bills?

Mr. BURTON. Not in a large number of cases; but, as I have said, they have always been of very considerable magnitude. Here is what the board reported on that proposed 14-foot waterway; this is in the final report of the Chief of Engineers:

It is not desirable to construct a navigable channel 14 feet in depth from St. Louis to the mouth of the Mississippi River, or from Chicago to the mouth of the Mississippi River.

The present demands of commerce between St. Louis and the mouth of the Mississippi River are adequately met by the existing projects, having for their object to obtain and maintain an 8-foot channel from St. Louis to the mouth of the Ohio and a channel of not less than 9 feet in depth below the mouth of the Ohio.

The board believes that an 8-foot channel from Chicago to St. Louis, corresponding to the present 8-foot project from St. Louis to Cairo, is the least that would adequately meet the demands of commerce, and believes such a waterway would be desirable, provided its cost is reasonable.

That is, they reported against a 14-foot waterway.

Mr. NORRIS. And in favor of an 8-foot waterway?

Mr. BURTON. And they favored an 8-foot waterway.

Present and prospective demands of commerce between Chicago and the Gulf will be adequately served by a through channel 9 feet in depth, which may be obtained without violent changes of existing methods of development.

Notwithstanding that recommendation, the river and harbor act of 1910, I think, provided an appropriation of $1,000,000 for an investigation with a view to beginning the work, and that was regarded as a sort of committal to the project. I give notice that before we are through with the consideration of this bill I shall move to repeal that provision, and shall offer an amendment to that effect.

Mr. NORRIS. Has not that $1,000,000 been expended?

Mr. BURTON. I do not think so.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, I should like to ask the Senator another question about these projects, where he said reports were made to the effect that "it was for Congress to decide." Does the Senator recollect any project that, in his judgment, was a desirable one where that kind of a report was made?

Mr. BURTON. I have not all of them in mind at this minute. I should be inclined to think there had been no case in which that kind of a recommendation was made where it would seem desirable to go ahead with the improvement; in other words, that we ought to make it our settled policy to depend upon a positive, affirmative recommendation before undertaking any work of this kind.

Mr. NORRIS. Now, I will ask the Senator whether, in his judgment, from his long experience with this work and his years of study, he would regard with suspicion a project recommended in that way in the first place?

Mr. BURTON. I should think so.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator tell us just why? How does he account for the board making that kind of a report? I presume the Senator, in his experience, has talked over those matters with members of the board. Why do they make reports of that kind?

Mr. BURTON. The Senator from Nebraska knows that a great many men have asserted on this floor and in the House, and the argument has been made in the country, that the engineers may have very good judgment in regard to dredging channels, river and harbor work, and, comprehensively speaking, engineering problems; but that they do not have any better judgment than the average business man on commercial propositions, and hence pressure has been brought to bear in many instances to adopt a project, notwithstanding there was an adverse report from the engineers.

Mr. NORRIS. What does the Senator mean by "pressure"? What kind of pressure?

Mr. BURTON. I could spend considerable time in telling what that is.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator could well afford to do so, because there are a lot of projects in this bill which are in that category.

Mr. BURTON. Boards of trade, business associations in the localities interested, associations to promote a specific project, with salaried officials sometimes running up as high as $5,000 or $6,000 a year, which associations are formed for no purpose except to induce Congress to accept some river and harbor improvement. That is reinforced by the demand of the press over a large area that certain improvements shall be made. Those newspapers usually say in effect: "We are against improving the little creeks; we are against wasting money in river and harbor bills, but we are in favor of our project"; and the chances are at least even that their project is the worst in the whole list.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is House bill 15613.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15613) to create an interstate trade commission, to define its powers and duties, and for other purposes.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside in order to permit the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] to conclude his remarks.

Mr. KENYON. I object. I think we should proceed with the consideration of this important measure.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Then I move that the bill be laid aside until 1 o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is proper to suggest to the Senator from Nevada that the bill would lose its place as the unfinished business. Perhaps that is not important.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not wish it to lose its place. I will go on with the bill, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

Mr. CUMMINS. I did not hear the motion of the Senator from Nevada.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He has withdrawn the motion.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I made none. The bill is now before the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Then a parliamentary inquiry. I think the pending question is upon an amendment that I offered to section 5.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has not been here all the while.

Mr. CUMMINS. The Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] was in the chair at the time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the pending amendment.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] moves to amend section 5 by adding thereto the following proviso:

Provided, That no order, or finding, of the court or commission, in the enforcement of this section, shall have any force or effect, nor be admissible as evidence in any suit, civil or criminal, brought under the antitrust acts; nor shall anything contained in this act be construed to alter, modify, or repeal the said antitrust acts, or any part or parts thereof.

Mr. SMOOT. If we are going to consider the bill, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Cummins	Newlands	Smith, Ariz.
Bankhead	Fletcher	Norris	Smith, Ga.
Brady	Gallinger	Overman	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Goff	Page	Smoot
Bristow	Hollis	Perkins	Sutherland
Bryan	Hughes	Pittman	Swanson
Burton	James	Pomerene	Thomas
Camden	Kenyon	Ransdell	Thornton
Catron	Kern	Reed	Vardaman
Chamberlain	Lane	Shafroth	Walsh
Chilton	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	Warren
Clarke, Ark.	Lewis	Shields	West
Colt	Martin, Va.	Shively	White
Crawford	Nelson	Simmons	Williams

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from Iowa is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, a single word with regard to the amendment now pending.

Mr. REED. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. REED. I understand that a request for unanimous consent to temporarily lay aside the pending measure was made, and that some Senator or Senators objected. I have been endeavoring to examine the law applicable to one or two sections of this bill, and I have pursued that inquiry with as much diligence as I was able. It has been interfered with by service upon committees, and this afternoon I am compelled to be upon attendance at the Banking and Currency Committee, where we have an important matter pending.

My investigation thus far has led me to the conclusion that unless the phraseology is changed in one section of the bill it will not at all effect the purpose its authors have in mind. I desire to speak upon this bill, but I can not under the circumstances do so to-day. It has been generally the custom in the Senate under those circumstances to allow a measure to lie over, and I ask unanimous consent that the pending measure may be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am not the Senator who made the objection. I think my colleague [Mr. KENYON] made it, and he is not in the Chamber just at this moment. I think he possibly may be in the corridor. I suggest that one of the pages notify him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri can not make any such request as that unless the Senator from Iowa yields the floor. He can not get the floor for the purpose of asking a question and then make a motion.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not intend to occupy the floor more than a moment at the most, and then the Senator from Missouri can make his request.

Mr. REED. I did not understand the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I do not intend to occupy the floor more than a very few moments at most. The amendment which is now pending is an amendment that I have offered to section 5, providing that nothing in this section or the bill shall be held to interfere with or restrict in any way the operation of the antitrust law. I think the Senator from Missouri probably thought it was my amendment relating to interlocking directorates or holding companies.

Mr. REED. No. I understand the rule, and I understand, of course, that I could not rise in the Senator's time and make the request unless I did it with his full acquiescence and consent. I thought the Senator was not especially anxious to go on this afternoon. If he is, of course I would not proffer the request.

Mr. CUMMINS. As I said a moment ago, I did not make the objection, and I am not especially anxious to go on this afternoon. My colleague made the objection. He is now in his seat. I yield to the Senator from Missouri for the purpose of preferring the request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa yields the floor and the Senator from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. REED. I wish to state to the Senator from Iowa who has just come in what I have already said in his absence. I have been examining the law with reference to certain phases of this bill. I have not been able to conclude that examination because I have been constantly occupied upon service on committees. I was engaged all this forenoon and will be engaged this afternoon upon the Banking and Currency Committee, where we have a matter pending demanding immediate attention. I wish to speak upon this bill. It is impossible for me to do so this afternoon. I have therefore asked that I be accorded the courtesy that is ordinarily accorded, of allowing the bill to go over, and I have requested unanimous consent that the bill might be temporarily laid aside. I hope that will be granted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will offer the suggestion that perhaps some other Senator is ready to go on.

Mr. REED. I have understood not.

Mr. GALLINGER. We have had very little information from the other side of the Chamber as to why we should pass this bill. I presume the chairman of the committee knows the Senators who are to speak upon it. I apprehend that we are going to have some affirmative discussion from the other side of the Chamber. All we have heard up to the present time has been from the Senator from Iowa on this side of the Chamber.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I was under the impression that the chairman of the committee had discussed the bill somewhat at length.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is not this an opportune time? Is the chairman going to discuss it further?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Not except in running debate.

Mr. GALLINGER. I presume the chairman did discuss it in my absence, but this is said to be a bill of great importance, of mighty magnitude. It is revolutionary in one sense in its character for good or for bad, and we certainly ought to have a good deal of information given to us from the other side of the Chamber as to why we should pass it. Perhaps that information is held in reserve, but the summer is passing, the fences are out of repair, and the vegetable garden is getting ready to tempt us, and it seems to me that we ought to make a good deal of progress in considering this very important bill.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator certainly does not mean that suggestion to apply to New Hampshire fences.

Mr. GALLINGER. Oh, yes; the vegetable gardens are coming along in New Hampshire even to the extent of having green peas. Well, Mr. President, I will not object.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I will say as to this side of the Chamber that there is thus far no indication that anyone wishes to speak at length upon the bill. I presume there will be more or less current discussion as we proceed with the amendments, but not at any length, I am informed. So far as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is concerned, I am aware that he has made a very serious study of this question of late, particularly with reference to section 5. He is desirous of presenting his views to the Senate, and I have no doubt the Senate will profit by it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let me ask this question: We all want to accommodate the Senator from Missouri. How would it do to lay this bill aside and take up the calendar of unobjected cases this afternoon? There are a couple of hundred bills on the calendar that Senators and our friends in the other House are interested in. That would be a good way to dispose of the afternoon. I will ask the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] if that course would be agreeable to him?

Mr. REED. Mr. President, just one word, with the permission of the Senator who has the floor. Of course I had no idea of the Senate stopping business. I understand there is pending a very important river and harbor bill, and there is also a calendar. I assume the Senate will go on with its regular work. Therefore, whatever the Senate does, it would seem to me that this bill might well be laid aside temporarily. However, I have said all I care to submit.

Mr. GALLINGER. I do not object to the request, of course. I would not do that under any circumstances.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. BURTON. I may state that I should be entirely willing to go on with the discussion of the river and harbor bill for an hour or two hours, if it would in any way facilitate the business of the Senate. I had, of course, counted on occupying perhaps nearly all the morning hour. I desire to prepare my material carefully, and I am not sure that I have my facts and figures for more than two hours, possibly for not more than one hour. If it will facilitate the business of the Senate, however, I can proceed for a time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the bill been laid aside?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not. The question is on the request of the Senator from Missouri that the pending measure be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection?

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I had not thought to object to any request that the Senator from Missouri might make in this case. If it can be arranged and understood that the Senator from Ohio will go on, say, for an hour and then we will take up the calendar, it would seem to me a very fair proposition, and I would not object to something of that kind. Of course, the Senator from Ohio is not prepared to consume the entire day and to finish his argument, and he does not desire to do so. That would seem to be about as unfair as to object to accommodating the Senator from Missouri. I will ask the Senator from North Carolina if he will have any objection to the Senator from Ohio proceeding?

Mr. SIMMONS. I, of course, have no objections to the Senator from Ohio proceeding. I hope that he will proceed and be able to conclude this evening, and upon his conclusion I think the Senator from Mississippi desires to take the floor and also discuss the river and harbor bill.

Mr. KENYON. I am certain that it will be impossible for the Senator from Ohio to conclude this evening. He has not all his material here, but he is perfectly willing to go on for an hour or an hour and a half. If that can be done, I will make no objection. I think it is a fair proposition.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator from Ohio can probably go on for a longer time. The Senator from Ohio does not require very much data in making a speech.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah will state it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the Senator from Ohio is well prepared——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah is recognized to submit a parliamentary inquiry. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The inquiry I desire to submit is this: If the pending bill, which is the unfinished business, should be temporarily laid aside, could not a Senator at any time during the afternoon call for the regular order, and would not that bring the unfinished business again before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the request of the Senator from Missouri is granted, the calendar under Rule VIII is in order. It may be followed by the motion of the Senator from North Carolina that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill. If that motion is adopted, of course, a single objection would not displace its further consideration.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. No; but my inquiry was this: The unfinished business, which is the regular order——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Being out of the way, the calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But if it is temporarily laid aside, is it not in order at any time to demand the regular order, and when the regular order is demanded does not that bring up the unfinished business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under our precedents it would not. It would not come up again until 1 o'clock tomorrow. A mere demand for the regular order would be a demand for the consideration of the bills on the calendar under Rule VIII.

Mr. SIMMONS. That would be the case unless the river and harbor bill was called up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is nothing in the rule on this subject. The practice has been the other way.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, if the unfinished business is laid aside temporarily by unanimous consent, can a Senator demand the regular order the next minute and reinstate it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair rules he can not. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 13811, the river and harbor bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gallinger	Oliver	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Goff	Overman	Smith, Md.
Brady	Hollis	Page	Smoot
Brandegee	Hughes	Perkins	Sterling
Bristow	James	Pomerene	Sutherland
Burton	Kenyon	Ransdell	Thomas
Camden	Kern	Reed	Thornton
Catron	Lane	Shafroth	Vardaman
Chamberlain	Lee, Md.	Sheppard	Walsh
Chilton	Lewis	Shields	Warren
Clarke, Ark.	McCumber	Shively	West
Cummins	Martine, N. J.	Simmons	White
Fletcher	Newlands	Smith, Ariz.	Williams

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Fifty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill. [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it. The ayes have it, and the motion is agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair presumes that the Senator from Iowa was on his feet for the purpose of making that request before the announcement of the Chair. The Chair, therefore, will grant the request. Is the demand for the yeas and nays seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CATRON (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN], who is absent on account of sickness in his family, and I vote "nay."

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] and vote "nay."

Mr. GOFF (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], and therefore withhold my vote. I desire to let this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], who is absent. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). In the absence of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. LIPPITT], with whom I have a pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). Transferring my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. TOWNSEND (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted inadvertently. I am paired with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], but I will transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], who is necessarily absent, and will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. SIMMONS (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] to the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS] and will let my vote stand.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have a pair with the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. LEA], who is absent. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. If my vote is necessary to make a quorum, I am at liberty to vote; but I also think, in view of our understanding, that on a measure such as this I could vote to take up a bill; but if my vote is not necessary to make a quorum I shall not now vote.

Mr. STONE. I have a general pair with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote "yea."

Mr. JAMES. I have a general pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 15, as follows:

YEAS—38.

Bankhead	Lane	Poindexter	Swanson
Bryan	Lee, Md.	Ransdell	Thompson
Camden	McCumber	Shafroth	Thornton

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13811) making appropriation for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I have already made reference to the act of 1907. I will state briefly its distinctive features and then some of the items included in that measure. After stating the amount that I have already given, it is said:

The aggregate of appropriations and authorizations is larger than in any preceding river and harbor bill, although the act of June, 1896, contained a larger amount of authorizations. There are several distinctive features in this bill:

1. Provision is made for completion in a much larger proportion of the projects than in any preceding measure.

2. The total amount necessary to complete the unfinished improvements, which the committee regards as most important, is provided by appropriation or authorization if completion can reasonably be expected within four years from July 1, 1907. Also upon large projects, where the amount required to finish the work is necessarily indeterminate, such as in the three divisions of the Mississippi River, provision is made for an equal time.

That is for four years.

3. Now projects are not adopted unless provision is made for completion.

4. In the case of rivers and harbors of secondary importance a somewhat larger amount than in former acts is appropriated for a considerable number of the most promising improvements.

In providing for the completion of new projects a radical departure from former methods has been adopted by the committee. It has been thought best to undertake no new improvement unless the whole amount required for its completion, whether the project involves large or small expense, is appropriated or authorized. This policy has been followed with barely an exception.

At a later time I shall take up the references made by my friend the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and show that, with one or two exceptions, the eight provisions which he named were not exceptions to this rule.

It is believed that the advantages of such a method are sufficiently obvious. Assured results will be obtained at an early date by the completion of the improvement. More substantial benefit will be conferred by selecting the most deserving projects and avoiding the scattering of appropriations. The expense for each improvement will be very much diminished, because work can be more advantageously and economically prosecuted if the whole amount necessary to complete is made available. It is also true as a practical fact that when the total expense is to be provided at one time more careful consideration will be given to a proposed improvement and the question of its adoption more intelligently considered. The rule has been followed that between two projects equally deserving it is better to complete one than to make partial appropriations for both.

Sixty-eight million seven hundred and seventeen thousand three hundred and ninety-eight dollars of the amounts included in the bill are for improvements of considerable magnitude already undertaken by the Government or for further improvements in connection therewith where increased traffic requires additional facilities.

The following is a list of appropriations and authorizations of this kind, in which a division is made into two classes—first, those aggregating $1,000,000 or more; second, those aggregating $200,000 or more, but less than $1,000,000:

Before taking up these items, I should say, Mr. President, that in some instances, upon further examination, it was found that the estimates of the engineers had not been sufficient, though that fact did not usually develop for two or three years after the bill of 1907. It has been a source of honest pride to the Engineer Corps that, in making their estimates, sufficient amounts have been included, and that in very few instances, until within recent years, was it found necessary to expend more than was named in their computations. In the last five to seven years a considerable number of instances have developed in which the estimates have been found insufficient. I take it that is but a manifestation of increased prices; it is coincident with a notable increase in the cost of living; and these inadequate estimates are rather due to facts beyond the control of the engineers than to any error in their computations.

I wish now, Mr. President, to take up a list of some of these projects and ask where in any river and harbor bill a selection can be made that can compare in merit with the 1907 bill in the provision made for the whole country and every section of it?

First, harbor at Boston, 35-foot channel, to complete, cash appropriation of $500,000; authorization under continuing contract $3,894,000. This project had been adopted by the bill of 1902, and a very considerable amount of work was done upon it. It was thought necessary that the channel should have a depth of 35 feet, notwithstanding there is at that point a considerable tide, a greater tide than at New York. The tide at Boston is about 9 feet, but in view of the importance of the port—for it was then the second in the United States in its exports and imports—it was thought best to provide a channel of 35 feet depth and to press that to completion. Indeed, the wisdom of the committee has been confirmed in that respect, because there is a provision in this very bill for deepening the outer portion of the channel nearest the sea to 40 feet.

Second, harbor of New York, Ambrose Channel, to complete, $1,148,510. That was a provision for the completion of a channel, the work upon which was undertaken under the bill of 1899. Slow progress was made at first, because there was no dredging equipment in the country adequate to dredge in channels of such considerable depth; but the Government of the United States built dredges to meet this situation. By reason of this fact there was a considerable amount of delay; but in the act of 1907 provision was made for the completion of the work. That channel is now finished and probably affords the finest entrance channel to a great port in the world. It is 40 feet deep, with a tide of 5½ feet, and 2,000 feet wide. It replaces the old channel by which boats went down to Sandy Hook and then turned almost at right angles.

Third, Black Rock Harbor and channel, $1,000,000 cash; $1,000,000 continuing contract. That channel is an extension of the harbor facilities around Buffalo and affords facilities for a lake terminus for the proposed barge canal. It has been the policy of the Government to cooperate with the State of New York in the building of the barge canal. By a vote of the people of the State of New York in 1903 it was decided that this waterway should be undertaken and paid for by the issuance of bonds, I believe, under an obligation of the State of New York. The estimated cost was $103,000,000. In view of this very large undertaking of the State, and that, too, in a type of project which in many States is appropriated for by the Federal Government, it seemed to the committee best to recommend a liberal policy. As an illustration of the same policy we have in the bill now before us a provision for improving the narrows of Lake Champlain, and in earlier bills we have made provisions for improving the Hudson River at Waterford and below, the easterly terminus of the barge canal, and also this provision for Black Rock Harbor, which served the double purpose of additional harbor facilities and providing more conveniently for the western terminus of the proposed barge canal.

Delaware River, below Philadelphia, to complete, cash $895.000; continuing contract, $500,000. This was for a channel 30 feet in depth extending to the sea, which is reinforced by a tide of about 5½ feet. It is true that since the completion of this 30-foot channel the Government has undertaken to dig a 35-foot channel from Philadelphia to the sea, and we are making appropriations for that in the pending river and harbor bill; but the policy of the committee at that time was to provide deeper channels for harbors immediately abutting or fronting on bays or portions of the sea, than for harbors which must be reached by sailing through a river for a considerable distance, as is the case at Philadelphia. So a distinction of 5 feet was made between Philadelphia and Boston.

With the growth of the traffic of the port, however, it seems desirable, though at enormous expense, to deepen the Philadelphia channel in the Delaware River to 35 feet. It will probably, when completed, be the most expensive improvement of any on our list connected with a harbor of the United States.

Next is the Patapsco River and channel to Baltimore, to complete, $500,000 cash; $1,715,000 continuing contract.

So, out of the first five items of this bill it will be observed that we have made provision—and ample provision at that—for the whole expense of improving the four harbors of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore; and I may say that the plans recognized in this bill raised those harbors to a standard unsurpassed anywhere in the world.

The next is a very important item: Channel from deep water in Hampton Roads to Norfolk, $282,000 cash, $850,000 continuing contract. Here is another harbor, altogether the greatest in its tonnage in the South, though not equal in the value of its shipments to Galveston or, perhaps, New Orleans. Provision was made for the completion of the improvement under way there.

The next is Savannah Harbor, $300,000 cash, $700,000 continuing contract. That is a very important harbor. In years past next to New Orleans it was the great cotton-receiving port in the United States. I think at one time the amount of cotton received there was greater than at any other port. It ranks now behind Galveston. I am uncertain whether it is behind New Orleans or not; but it is, nevertheless, a port of great importance.

Next, the Black Warrior, Warrior, and Tombigbee Rivers, $350,000 cash, $1,842,000 continuing contract. This was to complete this project for locks and dams up to and beyond the city of Tuscaloosa, and now includes 17 locks and dams—the number was somewhat less than that when this bill was passed.

I have always regarded this improvement as a somewhat doubtful one. It was well under way before I became a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee. The committee took the ground that if there were any stream or series of streams of comparative shallow depth which could be profitably improved by canalization, the Black Warrior, the Warrior, and the Tombigbee, affording access to the Gulf from the coal fields in the neighborhood of Birmingham, constituted such streams.

I am frank to say that when this appropriation was made I do not think the committee anticipated the total cost would amount to some $10,000,000, though we did recognize that it would be very expensive. It was, as I have said, well under way when I became a member of that committee, and a very excellent showing was made on its behalf. The advantages of this route are that there is abundant coal in the headwaters of the Black Warrior and that at Mobile and all along the Gulf there is a great demand for coal, but no supply in near-by mines.

To illustrate the cost of coal on the Gulf I may say that a business acquaintance of mine having the management of a steamship line shipping products abroad some 10 years ago made a computation as to whether it was more profitable to buy coal at Galveston or to load at that point with only sufficient coal to furnish steam to Norfolk and there take on a sufficient quantity of coal to propel the ships to their destination in Europe, which, I believe, was Rotterdam. He made this computation with a great deal of care, and concluded that the expense of coal was so much more considerable at Galveston than at Norfolk that it was profitable to load only sufficient coal to propel the boat to Norfolk, and then buy coal there for the remainder of the journey.

It will be readily seen that if any coal supply can be made available to the Gulf it is very desirable to have access to it; and while I am not now oversanguine as to the success of this improvement, while I do not believe it will pay the interest on the investment, I trust that its success may yet be attained. The official statistics up to date have been extremely discouraging, but I am informed that within the last year there has been a very large increase in shipments from the Black Warrior River.

In this connection I may say that it is not correct to base our calculations on the desirability of an improvement upon transportation facilities as they were 20 or even 10 years ago. In our country, especially, and in some degree in Europe, the advantages of the railroad and other means of overland transportation have been emphasized, while the method of transportation by water has not shown the same improvement and development. There has been little improvement in the models of the boats which carry traffic on the inland rivers, while, on the other hand, the railway car has increased in its average haul, and by the improvement of tracks and construction of larger locomotives, they can haul very much larger trainloads, as well as carloads, than formerly.

There is another factor in this situation which no one can overlook and which finds its best illustration in the United States. When a railway is constructed there is a certain fixed expense whether the traffic be large or small. To begin with, a right of way must be obtained. Then a track or tracks must be laid, and also switches to warehouses and to wharves. Next, there must be a certain force of officers and men. Those expenses are practically uniform, whether the traffic be a million tons or ten million tons; and in the development of railway traffic in the last 15 years there has been no factor more marked than the carriage of a larger share of coarse freight which it was formerly thought railroads could not haul profitably. They have their right of way; they have their tracks; they have their office force; they have their locomotives; they have their cars; and all that is necessary in order to multiply their traffic by adding coarse freight is an additional number of locomotives and an added number of cars and a somewhat increased number of employees; that is, men to man the cars and locomotives. For watching the track, and so forth, nothing additional is necessary.

This has led to the hauling of coal by railroads at very much lower rates than formerly and also to their undertaking the carriage of coarse freight, where formerly it was not regarded as at all desirable.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SMOOT in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. BORAH. This is a very important measure, and I think it ought to be discussed with more Members present. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Bankhead	Clarke, Ark.	Page	Stone
Borah	Crawford	Perkins	Sutherland
Brady	Fletcher	Sheppard	Thomas
Brandegee	Gallinger	Shields	Warren
Bryan	Hughes	Shively	West
Burton	Kenyon	Simmons	White
Camden	Lane	Smith, Ariz.	Williams
Catron	McCumber	Smith, Ga.
Chamberlain	Martine, N. J.	Smoot
Chilton	Oliver	Sterling

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce, for the day, that the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] is necessarily absent from the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. CUMMINS, Mr. LEWIS, Mr. NEWLANDS, Mr. RANSDELL, Mr. SHAFROTH, Mr. SMITH of Maryland, Mr. SWANSON, Mr. THOMPSON, Mr. THORNTON, and Mr. VARDAMAN answered to their names when called.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I wish to announce that the members of the Banking and Currency Committee are in session upon business of the Senate. The Senators there consist of Senator HITCHCOCK, Senator POMERENE, Senator LEE of Maryland, Senator HOLLIS, Senator NELSON, and Senator CRAWFORD.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. JAMES, and Mr. KERN entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-one Senators having answered to the roll call, there is a quorum present. The Senator from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, as showing the great increase in the capacity of railways for carrying freight which has developed contemporaneously with a lack of corresponding improvement in river boats of shallow draft, I read some specimen freight rates from the Railway Gazette.

On June 18, 1909, the Pennsylvania Railroad hauled 94 gondola cars from Altoona to Harrisburg, 124 miles, with a load of 5,042 tons, an average load of 56.3 tons per car. The total weight of the train, including locomotive and cars, was 6,992 tons. In August, 1909, the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern Railway hauled 100 steel cars, loaded with 7,433 tons of iron ore, from Ashtabula, Ohio, to Youngstown, in the same State, a distance of 65 miles. This is an average load per car of 74.3 tons.

To revert to the question of these waterways, the improvement of the Warrior and Tombigbee Rivers, as I have stated, presents hopeful features—the possible development of coal traffic, and possibly also the transportation of iron and marble from the headwaters to the sea. There is one very encouraging feature in connection with this waterway, and that is that boats of comparatively shallow draft can pass from the mouth of Mobile Bay, by way of Mississippi Sound and the Passes in that neighborhood, to a canal which leads to the Mississippi, and thereby can carry coal and other freight to New Orleans. The great problem with most of these waterways is a return cargo. Oftentimes charges have to be fixed in accordance with the rate for carriage for only one way, while the traffic the other way is so trivial that it is hardly a factor in maintaining a transportation agency of this kind. It is hoped that some traffic may develop from New Orleans to Mobile on the return trip.

We regarded this at that time as a desirable improvement. And I sincerely hope that it may justify the expenditure made upon it. Nevertheless, I regard these canalized rivers as problematical rather than otherwise. The railways in that neighborhood are now carrying coal at a very low rate to New Orleans and points on the Gulf. There will be sharp competition between them. I think it may be said that some degree of benefit, at least, has been conferred by this potential competition, which has had a tendency to lower these railroad rates. The question remains open, however, as to which organ of transportation will in the future carry that coal, that iron, and other articles of commerce. Will it be the railway or railways, or will it be these canalized rivers? If we may judge by instances in other localities, the chances are very largely that the railways will carry it.

The next item in this bill was the Southwest Pass of the Mississippi River below New Orleans. One million dollars in cash and $1,500,000 for continuing contracts were appropriated to complete the work. I think this amount, when expended, proved inadequate; but that was not the fault of the committee, nor of the estimates made by the engineers at that time. The sum reported as necessary to complete, two millions and a half, was according to the best judgment both of the engineers and of the committee in 1907.

That, again, is one of the most important channels in the United States. Formerly, under a plan devised and worked out by Mr. Eads, the means of communication between the deep water of the Mississippi River back from the Gulf and the Gulf itself, between which there is low land, was by the South Pass; but by an examination made, I believe, about the year 1900, it was concluded that the Southwest Pass would ultimately furnish the better route. Hence that was adopted in one of the river and harbor bills, perhaps in 1902, and it has been now practically completed, giving a channel 35 feet in depth from New Orleans to the sea.

The next is Galveston Harbor, for which an appropriation of $300,000 in cash was made and a continuing contract or contracts for $700,000 were authorized. This harbor, one of the most expensive in the United States to improve, ranking in cost with Philadelphia and the improvement of the Southwest and South Passes between New Orleans and the sea, has shown remarkable results in that it affords a gateway for the traffic north of the Gulf on the westerly side of the Mississippi River up as far as Nebraska, and to an extent even beyond that. I believe that at the present time the exports from this port are second only to those of New York in value; and the committee felt justified in making a generous appropriation for this harbor and pressing the improvements there rapidly, so that the facilities might be sufficient to meet the increasing demands of traffic.

The next is Cleveland Harbor, with $223,000 cash and $900,000 in continuing contracts. The aim of this was to improve this harbor to provide for the enormous traffic there, which now amounts to some 14,000,000 tons per annum, made up largely of coarse material, iron ore and coal, but also showing a very considerable traffic in timber and general merchandise. This improvement had been adopted in the year 1902, but the appropriation was not sufficient for its completion. The thought was that this would at least prosecute this improvement for four years, and perhaps complete it.

The next is Lock and Dam No. 26, Ohio River, $265,000 cash and $800,000 continuing contract. That lock and dam had been commenced and was under way. It has an important location, below the mouth of the Kanawha River, and there was this singular situation, to which I shall revert again later: While the Kanawha River had been canalized and improved with locks and dams to a depth of 6 feet, yet for long seasons of the year the depth of water in the Ohio below the mouth of that improvement was less than that in the canalized Kanawha; so that if coal barges were brought out from the coal mines, while they could readily find their way to the lower dam in the Kanawha River, they would find an insufficient depth in the Ohio River. There they were stopped. It was thought desirable to complete this dam, which is also in an important locality, below the city of Parkersburg.

The next is the St. Marys River at the Falls, "additional lock and duplicate canal, to complete." There were two locks there, but they had already become insufficient to handle the enormous traffic passing through the Soo, which, in the year 1913, reached, I believe, some 72,000,000 tons. It was foreseen that with the constant increase of traffic it would be at best but a few years before the two locks already there on the American side, joined with one on the Canadian side, would be entirely inadequate to meet the demands. Hence, the committee, noticing this great increase, and believing that this improvement ought to be finished as promptly as possible, instead of appropriating $200,000 or $500,000, as had been the custom, and as appears in some appropriations in this bill of 1914 for improvements of similar magnitude, provided for the whole sum at one time—$1,200,000 in cash, and $5,000,000 for continuing contracts.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. BORAH. What is the particular project to which the Senator is now referring?

Mr. BURTON. A second canal and a third lock in St. Marys River, the connecting waterway between Lake Superior and Lake Huron. That is the locality through which the great bulk of the iron ore comes from the mines of Minnesota—those furnish the principal quantity—and from the mines of northern Wisconsin, destined for the furnaces in Ohio and in Pennsylvania, and also for the furnaces around the southerly end of Lake Michigan. While there are furnaces scattered around in other places, that constitutes the great consuming field—western Pennsylvania, west of the Alleghenies; northeastern Ohio; and around Gary, Calumet, and the southerly part of Lake Michigan.

The next appropriation is for the Detroit River, an alternative channel, "to complete." Here passes the greatest traffic in the world, marvelous in its quantity, boats passing sometimes on an average of one for every minute. The figures of the total traffic in each year are so large that I hardly dare give them. For the last year the estimate is 72,871,432 tons.

There was but one channel that was adequate, and the boats in going up and down were in constant danger of collision. It was thought desirable to have an alternative channel, so this appropriation was made, not of a partial amount, but of the whole amount required—an appropriation of $2,000,000 and an authorization of $4,670,950.

The next appropriation was for the Mississippi River, from the Head of Passes to the mouth of the Ohio River, $3,000,000 cash and $6,000,000 continuing contracts. The cost of this work is indeterminate. The policy was adopted of providing for four years, $3,000,000 for the first year and $2,000,000 for each of the succeeding years. This was commensurate with the appropriations which had been made up to that time, though in later years, and especially after the great flood of a few years ago, these appropriations have been increased.

Next, the Mississippi River between the Ohio and the Missouri, $250,000 cash and $750,000 continuing contracts.

Mr. President, I have addressed the Senate again and again on that stretch of river, but before this debate is finished, at the risk of reiteration, I feel that I must talk about it again. I regard that as one of the very worst blemishes on our river and harbor appropriations.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, what particular portion of the work on the Mississippi River does the Senator now refer to?

Mr. BURTON. That part of the Mississippi between the mouth of the Ohio and the mouth of the Missouri, about 206 miles in length.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, is the Senator going to give the amount that has been spent on that portion of the river?

Mr. BURTON. I have not done so, but I think I can give it in a moment.

Mr. KENYON. It runs over $16,000,000, does it not?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. How much?

Mr. KENYON. Over $16,000,000.

Mr. BURTON. The appropriations to date are $16,894,999.

Mr. BORAH. How long have the appropriations been going on?

Mr. BURTON. Oh, I think since before the Senator from Idaho was born; and the worst of it is that the estimate for obtaining a suitable channel was less in 1881 than it is now. I have those figures here, and since we have paused here I will advert to them.

Mr. NORRIS. The cost of living has gone up since then.

Mr. BURTON. Yes; but the cost of this channel went up before the cost of living went up.

Mr. NORRIS. That was probably one reason why the cost of living went up.

Mr. BURTON. If all the appropriations made by the Government and by States and municipalities were on this basis, the cost of living would go up still more.

Mr. KENYON. The commerce of this river has gone down about 80 per cent, has it not?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; I gave some figures on that point a few days ago, and I will repeat them. I will say that prior to the great exposition at St. Louis it was thought desirable to increase this appropriation somewhat, and there was a boom in traffic in the years 1903 and 1904, which, however, proved to be only a temporary spurt. When we came to consider this stretch of river in 1907 we thought $250,000 a year was ample, full measure, running over; but for each of the last four years, and in this bill, too, $1,000,000 has been carried for this stretch.

Now, let us see what are some of the results accruing from what we have done. Sixteen million eight hundred and ninety-four thousand nine hundred and ninety-nine dollars is the amount appropriated to date. In 1881 the amount estimated to make an 8-foot channel was a little over $16,000,000. After this $16,894,000 had been appropriated and most all of it spent, the estimate to obtain 8 feet and complete the work is $17,250,000; and the worst of it—and that gives it a spice of humor, which no one who has been favoring this large appropriation seems to recognize—is that they are seeking 8 feet, but, barring just a few days in each year, they have had 8 feet for 8 or 10 years.

Mr. President, if I were to fail to criticize this improvement I should be lacking in my duty to the Senate. What justification is there for it? I repeat some figures given in my minority report on the pending bill. The traffic from St. Louis in 1880 was 1,038,000 tons, in 1900 but 245,800 tons, in 1911 but 191,965 tons. In the year 1871, 44 per cent of the shipments from the city of St. Louis were by river. In 1909 the proportion was one-half of 1 per cent. Thus, 43 years ago the proportion of shipments by the river was 88 times as large as it was in 1909. Yet we are going on solemnly appropriating a million dollars a year for that stretch of the river after the 8 feet has been obtained that we have been seeking for all those years.

I see they have a balance left on hand there, or did have when this memorandum was made out. June 30, 1913, they had a balance available of $1,325,574. I do not wonder that they had that balance of $1,325,000 left. Indeed, I do not see how they can spend a million a year on that stretch. Here at the end of that fiscal year, 1913, this very large amount was left as a balance in the Treasury.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. I have had the impression, which the statement the Senator now makes seems to prove, that this appropriation was largely designed for the construction of levees.

Mr. BURTON. There is another appropriation for levees. Formerly the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission extended only up to Cairo, but by an act passed in 1906 it was extended up to Cape Girardeau, because on the west side of the Missouri River the alluvial lands extend up to Cape Girardeau and there is every reason why the jurisdiction of the Mississippi River Commission should reach to that point.

I do not know what this is for. I fancy that to some extent it is for putting in revetment along on the banks of the river there, but it seems to me we are forcing money on them against their will at the rate of a million dollars a year before we are sure that they will need it or can even use it.

I wish to give some further statistics prepared by the Merchants' Exchange. They prepare the most careful statistics gathered in the country, showing how utterly trivial is the traffic carried.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. BURTON. Excuse me for just one minute. There is just one item in which there has been something of a revival within the last two years. I do not know exactly how long ago it began, but perhaps three or four years ago. There is a kind of coal around Pittsburgh especially suitable for making gas. I do not know whether the gas works are private or whether they belong to the city of St. Louis, but the managers of it regard that coal as the best available, and so each year they have been shipping between perhaps one and two hundred thousand tons. If it were not for that coal there would be practically nothing of substantial importance left of the traffic. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to ask the Senator what showing was made before the committee to get that kind of an appropriation?

Mr. BURTON. I do not know. That was put in the river and harbor bill in the House. I think the engineers recommend $1,000,000.

Mr. BORAH. Who are the engineers?

Mr. BURTON. I do not know the engineer at that particular place, but I refer to the Corps of Engineers.

They can spend money protecting the banks along there, putting in revetments, and putting in hurdles, and all that sort of thing; but it seems to me they have gained all that is deserved when they have 8 feet, and that, too, with such a trivial traffic there.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. RANSDELL. I think I might help the Senator by a suggestion. If I understand correctly, this project was adopted in 1910 on the recommendation of the Engineer Corps. We have been trying to carry it on the river and harbor bill since, and in accordance with the advice of the Engineer Corps of the Army.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I am exceedingly loath to criticize the engineers. They have been among the best friends I have ever had. I have associated with them; I have been with them on their trips. In the old days they were ready to accept suggestions from me in regard to these improvements; but I must say I think it is time, in the most friendly spirit, to look over these river and harbor bills and see whether all their recommendations are such as the United States ought to appropriate money for carrying out.

As I said, they are not so much to blame. They have an idea that these wild schemes are approved by the country. They have sometimes reported against a project and then Congress has sent an intimation in a resolution or statute in effect saying, "We are in favor of the project; we overrule you." You can imagine what men who were the executive officers of the Government would think as to what they ought to do after a few prods of that kind.

But, with a feeling of the utmost friendliness, before I get through I must take up some of the projects they have recommended and ask the Senate to consider whether there was any rational basis for them.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator says that when the engineers have recommended that a project be discontinued, they have been corrected by Congress?

Mr. BURTON. When they have reported against a project.

Mr. BORAH. Has Congress any information on which it recommended the appropriation?

Mr. BURTON. In the old days we used to turn down a good share of those which were favorably reported. I do not know whether they do now or not, but I think that at least they do not to the same extent.

I want to say a few words on another matter, now that we are on that subject, and I do not know but what this custom of varying somewhat from the thread of my argument is not, after all, the best. Whenever there is a fault in the men we have as officials in city and State, the fault is usually with the people themselves, because their ideals are not high or they asleep. So the fault in this matter here is with Congress, and then with the force that is behind Congress demanding these river improvements. You have men who want to have lands drained, and they come here and tell us what a great benefit it would be to navigation if some canal or channel was dug through the broad acres that they possess.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. BURTON. Excuse me just a moment. We have been ordering surveys by the hundred. It used to seem necessary to the House committee in the days when I belonged to it to shear out a good many of these surveys. When the proposition came in we looked to see if the proposed channel or harbor had been surveyed within six or eight years. If it had and if there had been an adverse report, we decided that it had better wait. If upon examining the map it seemed to be an unpromising project, we said, "No." But of late it has been the custom just to say, "Come on, Members of the House; come on, Members of the Senate, anybody who wants a survey may have it included in this bill." This multiplication of surveys is a fruitful source of evil.

To begin with, it is impossible to examine all this multitude of projects and do it as thoroughly as was the case when there was a smaller number of them. I think I am not mistaken when I say that when the bill was passed every two or three years instead of annually we did not have as many surveys, such as Big Muddy Creek and Little Muddy Creek, and all that sort of thing, as we have now. Then, with all those to report upon, the engineers are entangled; they are confused. How do they know just what Congress wants? Of course, when an executive officer is directed to do anything he proceeds on the theory that every force which has been at work, every statute under which he is to act, is rational. He does not stop to inquire how all this great list of surveys was inserted in the bill. It has been stated here occasionally in the four years past that in the next bill all these surveys will have been exhausted; that there will not be any more rivers or creeks to survey; but with every new bill there is a new crop that comes along with other directions for resurveys.

Mr. KENYON. Generally, is the fault the lack of water or is it lack of navigability. Is it the aim of some to carry a channel on the side of a mountain or some other place where the scheme is absurd?

Mr. BORAH. Does the Senator say there has been about sixteen or seventeen million dollars spent upon this particular part of the river?

Mr. BURTON. That amount has not been quite spent yet.

Mr. BORAH. If appropriated it will be spent.

Mr. BURTON. From the 30th of last June they have had a chance to spend it.

Mr. BORAH. The Senator is so familiar with the subject I should like to know what, in the opinion of the Senator, has been the benefit to the country or the benefit generally to commerce or to business of the expenditure of the sixteen or seventeen million dollars. How much worse off would we be if we were now making the first appropriation?

Mr. BURTON. Well, I do not know. Of course that question does not altogether square itself with the facts. That channel was at one time very much used. St. Louis was a great haven for boats. I may say, if the Senator from Idaho or anyone else is interested in reading upon the subject, he will find the very best treatment of the decadence of the Mississippi River traffic in a place where he would little expect to find it, and that is in Mark Twain's Life on the Mississippi River. Mark Twain had been a pilot on the Mississippi River, and he gives a quasi-humorous account of the declining commerce there, concluding by saying, "alas, for the woodyard man," who did not longer have a chance to sell his wood to boats. He points out how formerly the whole levee was lined with boats, but then they had almost disappeared. I sought to give some reasons for this a few days ago. The cause of it is the development of traffic routes by rail east and west and the general growth of other agencies of transportation.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. RANSDELL. May I ask the Senator a question in connection with what he said about the surveys? I have before me a report showing the number of surveys in these bills. I should like to read it at this time. In the act of 1902 there were 170 surveys ordered; in the act of 1905, 176; in the act of 1906, which was not a regular river and harbor bill, there seems to have been but 1 survey ordered; in the act of 1907, which the Senator praises so highly, and I believe justly—and it was a magnificent bill—there were 200 surveys ordered; in the act of 1909—the last one, I think, prepared under the Senator's chairmanship——

Mr. BURTON. It was prepared under my chairmanship, but I did not have very much to do with it.

Mr. RANSDELL. There were 274 surveys ordered.

Mr. BURTON. But I did not have much to do with framing it. The aim certainly was to include everything and make an end of surveys.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Senator was generally pretty active when he was chairman.

Mr. BURTON. I will stand for it. That is all right.

Mr. RANSDELL. I was sure the Senator would.

In the act of 1910 there were 187 surveys; in the act of 1911, 90 surveys; in the act of 1912, 226 surveys; in the act of 1913, 122 surveys; and this bill carries 186 surveys. So you see it is not so very much worse than others. It does not carry as many as the act of 1907, which carried 200, and nothing like as many as the act of 1909, which carried 274.

Mr. BURTON. I rather think it is because those bills of 1905 and 1907 carried the accumulations, respectively, of three and two years. I am free to admit that the bill of 1909 was prepared with the same removal of the brakes and that more were put in at that time. I did not exercise that supervision that I had in bills preceding that time. I really would like to have that list.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will be very glad to give it to the Senator. I wish to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that the surveys in the period of 1907 and 1909 were really as a rule a great deal more pretentious and important than the surveys made now, and if a good many of the surveys carried in the pending bill are not for the purpose of producing some slight modification of an already existing project?

Mr. BURTON. To an extent that is true, because naturally the surveys would exhaust the larger projects—the harbors, bays, and larger rivers. But that is being made up in these bills by putting on additional appropriations for the old ones. So there is not very much gain.

It will appear that the act of 1902, which was after an interval of three years, and the act of 1905, again after an interval of three years, did not have as many surveys as the act of 1910. The act of 1902 had 170. The act of 1905, three years later, had 176. The act of 1910 had 187 and the act of 1912 had 226. I do not know how many there are in this bill. There are a good many, but I have not counted them.

Mr. BRADY. What is the book and page from which the Senator quotes?

Mr. BURTON. That is the engineer's reports for 1913, volume 1, page 1419. It will perhaps be better to take the page if the Senator desires to look at it. It is on page 1419. It may in another binding be found in the second volume. I am obliged to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, it is safe to assume that the number of the items in this bill relating to surveys will be greatly increased after the Senators have had an opportunity to offer amendments from the floor. I think the Senator will admit that. It always happens so.

Mr. BURTON. Yes; but in the framing of a bill deliberately and carefully there ought to be no amendments adding surveys on the floor. It was found necessary by the Rivers and Harbors Committee years ago to make another rule that seemed severe, but which, however, I think might have been followed with good results. It was to consider no engineer's report that came in after, say, the 1st of January, so that if any reports came in after that we would not consider them.

Here we consider reports for new projects when the document is still almost wet off the press, when there is no map with it, when it is impossible to give to the project thorough consideration. Representatives and Senators rush up to the board of review the very week, almost the very day, before a bill is to be reported and say in red-hot haste, "Get out that report for us." Then it comes up here and it can not be carefully considered.

I do maintain that the old way, though it had some degree of severity, fixing a time beyond which reports could not be considered, say two or three months before the bill was brought into the House, was much better.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask the Senator if that was not an arbitrary rule, which was probably founded upon the fact that we were having bills then every three years and there was a greater length of time in which the engineers could prepare and make their reports on surveys ordered three years prior to the passage of the succeeding act?

Mr. BURTON. The Members whose plans were kept back said it was an arbitrary rule, but I really think it was a pretty good one.

Mr. RANSDELL. Did not the engineers have three years in which to prepare their reports in that instance, and do they not have much less time now? For instance, the last bill was just before the 4th of March, 1913, and they had but a few months in which to get their reports ready.

Let me call your attention to one of the most meritorious projects in the present bill—that for the improvement of Boston Harbor, which I know the Senator sanctioned heartily. We got the report just a day or two, if I recall it, before we prepared that bill, but it was so meritorious there was no dissenting voice.

Mr. BURTON. It was long before that.

Mr. RANSDELL. It was a very few days before. I do not remember exactly the time. If we had adopted an arbitrary rule we could not have gotten that appropriation in.

Mr. BURTON. Nevertheless, it is well not to make exceptions. If you had a general rule there, the probability is the report would have been sooner, and, on the other hand, the insertion of that which is, I have no doubt, a desirable improvement might lead to the introduction of half a dozen others that were only insufficiently considered and were undesirable.

The next item here is the Mississippi River between the Missouri River and Minneapolis, $500,000 cash and $1,500,000 continuing contract.

Mr. President, I have been regarded as friendly to that improvement. When a Representative or Senator has responsibilities in regard to these appropriations, he ought not to be a friend to any project. His duty is to help in framing a good bill and to look out for the interests of the whole country; but I will say I have thought there were possibilities in that upper portion of the Mississippi River. There was at one time very considerable traffic there, but in the year 1907 we thought it was sufficient to appropriate $500,000 cash per year.

I think I have the figures of that traffic near at hand. The last year it was 1,830,000 tons, not more than one-third of what it was back in the eighties. The average haul on that stretch of 658 miles was 31.6 miles, and I must submit that a million and a half dollars a year for that stretch of river is too high. That has been the amount appropriated for some years, and yet the traffic has been very gradually diminishing, due in some considerable degree to the fact that formerly logs constituted the larger part of the traffic and that the supply of standing timber has diminished.

But there is another feature here to which I will later call attention in detail. The average haul is not a twentieth part of the navigable length of the river. That is a most surprising feature. Indeed, as the reports used to come to us, there would be, say, 1,830,000 tons on the Mississippi River above the mouth of the Missouri, and I suppose everyone in reading that would think that the freight, or a good share of it, was hauled from St. Paul to St. Louis, or at least from Davenport to St. Louis, or from Burlington to Winona or some other point; but, really, when they come to give ton mileage, it appears that the total ton mileage on the whole river is about 55,000,000, or 31.6 times the number of tons. What does that show? That they haul their freight on short routes, as from Keokuk to Burlington, or perhaps from some place which has no railroad facilities. They haul the freight to the first point where there is a railroad crossing the river. So far as through traffic is concerned, traffic which is distinctly national in its scope, or at least interstate, the quantity has diminished, and it is practically vanishing.

Here is the Arkansas River, with something over 400 miles of length. The average haul on that river is only 34 miles. In the old days freight used to be carried down from St. Louis to New Orleans in great quantities. Until about 10 years ago grain used to be shipped in barges from St. Louis to New Orleans. I think it is a considerable time since any grain has been shipped between those places.

Here is the city of Memphis. That is another illustration of the extent to which traffic on the Mississippi River is local. Formerly cotton used to be carried down to New Orleans by boat, but now I do not believe there is a single bale carried from Memphis to New Orleans by boat. The river is divided into two sections between the two cities, Memphis to Vicksburg and Vicksburg to New Orleans. A great deal of cotton is picked up at local landings in those two stretches and carried to some market, but there is none carried through from Memphis to New Orleans. Indeed a prominent official of the Government who has contributed as valuable statistics as anyone to the solution of this problem and who is himself friendly to the improvement of waterways to a reasonable degree, stated before the Inland Waterways Commission that in 1906 he was at Memphis and there was then a surplus cotton crop which filled all the warehouses. The bales were even crowding the streets, and it was almost impossible to take them all away; but not a bale went down by river.

In the following year, 1907, President Roosevelt visited Memphis and with a great deal of enthusiasm he with his strong arms bound a bale of cotton. Traffic was to be restored. That was the first one to be taken down the Mississippi River to New Orleans. The statistics do not show that even that bale was ever taken from Memphis to New Orleans, because in a list of commodities from Memphis carried past Vicksburg there is not a single bale, and if that did go down probably it was the only one. I suppose, of course, as an object lesson that found its way along the river by Vicksburg and Baton Rouge down to New Orleans, but no figures are furnished to show that it ever did.

Now, the next one on this list of projects of more than a million is the mouth of the Columbia River., Wash. and Oreg., to complete, $750,000 cash, $1,700,000 continuing contract.

I regret to say that this estimate, which was before us, furnished by the engineers at that time, has proven insufficient for the completion of that very important work at the mouth of the Columbia. The amount appropriated and authorized was for the south jetty. The Columbia is the second river in the volume of its waters in the United States; it drains a very fertile region, especially rich in wheat and in timber; but the treatment of the mouth, providing access from the sea to the river and vice versa, has been exceedingly difficult, so that it is now estimated, after a lapse of years and the expenditure of a great deal of money, that $5,100,000 will be required to complete. It was not, however, the fault of the committee, because we appropriated and authorized at that time all that was thought to be necessary.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. It seems to me that during the discussion of this item the Senators from Oregon and Washington would desire to be present. So I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hollis	Nelson	Smith, Md.
Borah	James	Norris	Smoot
Brady	Jones	Overman	Swanson
Bryan	Kenyon	Page	Thomas
Burton	Kern	Perkins	Thornton
Chamberlain	Lane	Pomerene	Vardaman
Chilton	Lee, Md.	Ransdell	West
Crawford	Lewis	Reed	White
Cummins	McCumber	Shafroth	Williams
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Works
Gallinger	Martine, N. J.	Simmons

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of absent Senators.

The Secretary called the names of absent Senators, and Mr. CAMDEN and Mr. SMITH of Georgia answered to their names.

Mr. STONE, Mr. HITCHCOCK, and Mr. NEWLANDS entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Sergeant at Arms be directed to request the attendance of absent Senators.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSON entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The order directing the Sergeant at Arms will, by unanimous consent, be vacated. The Senator from Ohio will proceed.

Mr. BURTON. Mr. President, I was dwelling upon the last item of much importance in the bill of 1907—the appropriation for the mouth of the Columbia River, Wash. and Oreg. The appropriation of $750,000 made in that bill and the appropriation of $1,700,000 it was thought would complete the improvement, for that was the engineer's estimate at that time. But later estimates have shown that the improvement could not be accomplished with those amounts. So, as I said a moment ago, though not in the hearing of the Senators from that locality, it is now estimated that $5,100,000 will be required to complete the work. It goes without saying that that is one of the most difficult channels in the United States. Our friend, whom we all so highly respect, the Senator from California [Mr. PERKINS], in his practical experience in the sailing of boats has, I believe, been twice shipwrecked or stranded at the mouth of that river. The improvement is one of the most difficult in the world.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I interrupt the Senator from Ohio for a moment?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The appropriation bill for 1907, the Senator recognizes, was for the south jetty, and that has been completed.

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It has been eventually completed; but the appropriation in the present bill has reference entirely to the north jetty. I do not know that the Senator from Ohio knows that.

Mr. BURTON. I do not know but that fact had escaped my attention.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is a fact.

Mr. BURTON. This improvement of the south jetty was completed for the amount provided in the bill of 1907, was it not?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It drifted along a good many years until it was put on a continuing-contract basis and then it was finally completed.

Mr. BURTON. It was in 1907 that it was put on that basis.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. One reason why it cost more than was contemplated was because the rule which the Senator advocates had not been adopted; that is, appropriations were then made piecemeal. When the appropriation was exhausted, the jetty works would be washed out, and until it was put on a continuing-contract basis it was almost impossible to get the work completed within any reasonable appropriation.

Mr. BURTON. But, Mr. President, not to return at any length to the subject of the policy of making partial appropriations as a business method, I wish to say there can be no justification for such an appropriation as that was. The part of a jetty or a breakwater which is made by an appropriation of a small part of the amount necessary to complete is likely to be absolutely destroyed, and then you must begin again and build it over entirely. A still further fact is that it is necessary for such a work to assemble a plant and equipment on a very large scale, and unless you have this large plant and equipment it is impossible to do work economically.

There is a second class of appropriations contained in the bill of 1907 for improvements already under way aggregating $200,000 or more, but less than a million dollars. I do not care to read these through, but as there are those who may be interested in this report I would like to have it printed in the RECORD again, and I ask leave to have it inserted in my remarks. I ascribe such value to it as a guide in river and harbor appropriations that I think it would be useful.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The report referred to is as follows:

RIVER AND HARBOR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BURTON, of Ohio, from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, submitted the following report, to accompany H. R. 24991:

The Committee on Rivers and Harbors, having had under consideration House bill 24991, files the same and respectfully reports thereon, recommending that the bill do pass.

The measure carries in cash appropriations $35,181,612 and in authorizations for expenditures under continuing contract appropriations which may hereafter be made a further sum of $48,634,526.

The following statement gives the amounts of appropriations and authorizations in recent river and harbor bills:

Year.	Cash.	Authorized.	Total.
1896	$12,659,550.00	$59,616,404.91	$72,275,954.91
1899	16,091,841.94	23,866,324.13	39,958,166.07
1902	26,771,442.00	38,336,160.00	65,107,602.00
1905	18,181,875.41	17,184,657.63	35,366,533.04
1907 (as reported by Committee on Rivers and Harbors)	35,181,612.00	48,634,526.00	83,816,138.00

The aggregate of appropriations and authorizations is larger than in any preceding river and harbor bill, although the act of June, 1896, contained a larger amount of authorizations. There are several distinctive features in this bill:

1. Provision is made for completion in a much larger proportion of the projects than in any preceding measure.

2. The total amount necessary to complete the unfinished improvements, which the committee regards as most important, is provided by appropriation or authorization if completion can reasonably be expected within four years from July 1, 1907. Also upon large projects, where the amount required to finish the work is necessarily indeterminate, such as in the three divisions of the Mississippi River, provision is made for an equal time.

3. New projects are not adopted unless provision is made for completion.

4. In the case of rivers and harbors of secondary importance a somewhat larger amount than in former acts is appropriated for a considerable number of the most promising improvements.

In providing for the completion of new projects a radical departure from former methods has been adopted by the committee. It has been thought best to undertake no new improvement unless the whole amount required for its completion, whether the project involves large or small expense, is appropriated or authorized. This policy has been followed with barely an exception. It is believed that the advantages of such a method are sufficiently obvious. Assured results will be obtained at an early date by the completion of the improvement. More substantial benefit will be conferred by selecting the most deserving projects and avoiding the scattering of appropriations. The expense for each improvement will be very much diminished, because work can be more advantageously and economically prosecuted if the whole amount necessary to complete is made available. It is also true as a practical fact that when the total expense is to be provided at one time more careful consideration will be given to a proposed improvement and the question of its adoption more intelligently considered. The rule has been followed that between two projects equally deserving it is better to complete one than to make partial appropriations for both.

Sixty-eight million seven hundred and seventeen thousand three hundred and ninety-eight dollars of the amounts included in the bill are for improvements of considerable magnitude already undertaken by the Government or for further improvements in connection therewith, where increased traffic requires additional facilities.

The following is a list of appropriations and authorizations of this kind in which a division is made into two classes: First, those aggregating $1,000,000 or more; second, those aggregating $200,000 or more, but less than $1,000,000:

First class—$1,000,000 or more.

	Cash.	Authorization continuing contract.
Harbor at Boston, 35-foot channel (to complete)	$500,000	$3,894,000
Harbor of New York, Ambrose Channel (to complete)		1,148,510
Black Rock Harbor and Channel	1,000,000	1,000,000
Delaware River below Philadelphia (to complete)	895,000	500,000
Patapsco River and channel to Baltimore (to complete)	500,000	1,715,000
Channel from deep water in Hampton Roads to Norfolk	282,000	850,000
Savannah Harbor	300,000	700,000
Black Warrior, Warrior, and Tombigbee Rivers	350,000	1,842,000
Southwest Pass, Mississippi River, below New Orleans (to complete)	1,000,000	1,500,000
Galveston Harbor	300,000	700,000
Cleveland Harbor	223,000	900,000
Lock and Dam No. 26, Ohio River (to complete)	265,000	800,000
Ohio River, general improvement and completing unfinished work on locks and dams	1,458,966	1,500,000
St. Marys River at the Falls, additional lock and duplicate canal (to complete)	1,200,000	5,000,000
Detroit River, alternative channel (to complete)	2,000,000	4,070,950
Mississippi, from Head of Passes to mouth of Ohio River	3,000,000	6,000,000
Mississippi River, between Ohio and Missouri Rivers	250,000	750,000
Mississippi River, between the Missouri River and Minneapolis	500,000	1,500,000
Mouth of Columbia River, Wash. and Oreg. (to complete)	750,244	1,700,000
Total	14,774,210	36,670,460

Total of appropriations and authorizations, $51,444,670.

Second class—Appropriations and authorizations aggregating $200,000 or more, but less than $1,000,000.

	Cash.	Authorization continuing contract.
Massachusetts:
New Bedford	$100,000	$200,000
Sandy Bay, harbor of refuge	100,000	100,000
Rhode Island: Newport (to complete)	85,000	165,000
Connecticut:
New Haven breakwater	100,000	150,000
Bridgeport Harbor (to complete)	113,000	350,000
New York:

Total new projects, $5,038,391.

SUMMARY.

Total appropriations and authorizations for existing projects in amounts of $200,000 or more	$68,717,398
Total appropriations and authorizations for new projects	5,038,391
Total	73,755,789

The balance of $10,060,349 is made up of a variety of items, including $300,000, the usual appropriation for examinations and surveys; an emergency fund of $300,000; an appropriation of $190,000, part of which is conditional, for the survey of a deep waterway from St. Louis to the Gulf. This balance also includes appropriations for the maintenance and extension of various rivers and harbors, the amounts for which are not included in the above lists, including approximately 300 projects already under improvement, and upon which appropriations have heretofore been made.

In the discussion of the river and harbor bill of 1902 attention was called to a popular misapprehension to the effect that a very large amount of money was appropriated for rivers and creeks of trivial importance, and it was shown that the total amount appropriated in the act of that year for streams having a tonnage of less than 100,000 tons, or a traffic of a value less than $1,000,000, was $417,000.

It is impossible to make an accurate comparison of such appropriations in the act of 1902 with those recommended in this bill. Some streams on which no considerable traffic has yet developed are appropriated for, with the expectation that traffic may follow the improvement of these channels. The actual appropriations for the smaller streams already under improvement in which no considerable additions are contemplated are, however, approximately the same as in the bill of 1902, or somewhat less than half a million dollars.

In many instances a comparison shows that the traffic upon this class of streams has greatly increased since 1902, while in other cases the amount has remained stationary or even diminished.

While doubts have been expressed of the propriety of improving waterways of mere local importance at national expense, it must be conceded that if there is a comparison between appropriations and benefits the provision made for many of them is as beneficial as any appropriations in the bill. In this list may be included, with the amount or value of traffic and the amount herein appropriated, the following:

Project.	Appropriation.	Annual tonnage carried.
Thames River, Conn	$30,000	446,004
Bronx River and East Chester, consolidated	29,000	387,368
Mantua Creek, N. J.	34,450	136,105
Raccoon Creek, N. J.	15,000	263,317
Smyrna River (Duck Creek), Del.	2,000	204,731
Nanticoke River, Del. and Md.	2,000	121,769
Neuse and Trent Rivers, N. C.	30,000	731,534
Waccamaw River, N. C. and S. C.	20,000	207,630
St. Johns River, Fla., above Jacksonville	25,000	269,610
White River, Ark.	30,000	100,083
French Broad and Little Pigeon Rivers, Tenn.	2,000	188,700
Petaluma Creek and Napa River, Cal.	23,239	404,983
Okanogan and Pend Oreille Rivers, Wash.	20,000	55,917

Liberal provision is made for the prosecution or completion of improvements in a considerable number of rivers or harbors of secondary importance, and in cases where satisfactory results are anticipated substantial additions have been made to the average of prior appropriations. Among improvements of this class are:

Project.	Appropriations, cash.	Expenditures authorized, continuing contracts.
Rhode Island: Pawtucket River (conditional)	$138,584
Connecticut: Thames River	30,000
New York:
Bronx River and East Chester Creek	29,000
Ogdensburg Harbor	75,000
Delaware: Mispillion River	40,000
Virginia: Rappahannock River	77,729	$90,000
South Carolina: Santee, Wateree, and Congaree Rivers and Estherville-Minim Creek Canal	150,000
Georgia:
Oconee, Altamaha, and Ocmulgee Rivers	60,000
Chattahoochee River, Ga. and Ala., below Columbus	150,000
Florida:
East Pass and Carabelle	60,000
Apalachicola Bay	85,000
Manatee River	70,710
Louisiana: Bayou Teche	130,000
Texas: Brazos River, from Velasco to Old Washington	75,000
Tennessee: Tennessee River, above Chattanooga, and Little Tennessee River	105,000
Michigan:
Holland Harbor	138,452
Grand River	88,000
Wisconsin: Two Rivers Harbor	90,000
Minnesota: Red River of the North, Minn. and N. Dak.	15,000
California: Sacramento and Feather Rivers	50,000
Washington: Columbia River and tributaries above the mouth of Snake River	120,000

Mr. KENYON. I ask the Senator from Ohio where the matter which he is reading appears in the RECORD?

Mr. BURTON. It is in the RECORD of February 20, 1913, beginning on page 3581. The full report is there inserted. The request was then made that it be printed because the original copies had almost all disappeared, and it was thought desirable to preserve it.

These appropriations and authorizations for projects aggregating $200,000, but less than a million dollars to complete, include a great variety. There were two in Massachusetts, namely, New Bedford and Sandy Bay, harbor of refuge; one in Rhode Island, the harbor at Newport, which has been completed at an expense of about $250,000; Bridgeport Harbor, to complete which an appropriation was made amounting to $113,000 cash and $350,000 continuing contract. Generous appropriation was made for Newark Bay and the Passaic River of about $900,000. Then there was an appropriation for the Potomac River at Washington, for the Cape Fear River at and below Wilmington; an appropriation to complete the harbor at Brunswick, Ga., which has been one of the most successful improvements made by the United States; an appropriation for Sabine Pass, for Aransas Pass, and for divers other projects, rivers, and harbors as well. Appropriations were made to complete Ludington Harbor, Mich., a harbor which has now the largest traffic of any harbor in the southern peninsula of Michigan; Milwaukee Harbor, Manitowoc Harbor, Chicago Harbor, Osage River; the San Luis Obispo Harbor in California, the traffic on which now has grown to very large proportions, mostly in oil; Oakland Harbor, the cost of the improvements in all these places aggregating between $200,000 and $1,000,000.

Now I come to the third class of new projects, to complete which an appropriation was made in every case. My friend, the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL], mentioned a few days ago some six or eight projects which it was alleged found their way into the bill of 1907, where appropriations were not made in sums sufficient to complete them. I think it is hardly worth while to take much of the time of the Senate on this, but practically everyone was in accordance with the rule to undertake no project unless it was completed. The first one cited is New Bedford and Fairhaven, for which there was appropriated $300,000, and which, it is alleged, would cost to complete $527,000. On that subject the Government engineer, Col. Willard, in a report of May 18, 1906, page 7, Document 271, Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, says:

> To get the most favorable terms funds should be available for payment as earned, which should be accomplished by three successive appropriations, say, $300,000, $350,000, and $250,000, respectively.

There was there a plain recommendation that the appropriation be made in three divisions.

The Oswego Harbor project was one which caused a great deal of perplexity between two methods, the former engineer favoring one and the latter another, and it was not thought desirable to appropriate more than $200,000 at the time.

As regards the Newark Bay and Passaic River improvement, for which an appropriation of $850,000 was made as against an estimate of $1,216,775—the fact is that the committee is entitled to credit for having cut down that amount, because, as I said here a few days ago, the estimate for the project seemed to be exceedingly large per unit or yard. The engineers were called in, and they thought that by depositing the soil or dredged material nearer to the place where the dredging was done the work could be performed much more cheaply, and an estimate was made on that basis. I think that estimate also has proven sufficient, though a still further and more extended improvement is now in contemplation.

The Mispillion River is in a way an exception to the rule. This is a stream in Delaware, which has been under improvement for many, many years, and the $40,000 appropriation in the bill of 1907 was regarded as altogether out of keeping with prior appropriations. It is technically an exception to the rule that was followed of appropriating the whole amount for a new project, although the improvement of the river itself is an old project and by no means a new one.

The item in regard to Club and Plantation Creeks is readily explained, because it was a Senate amendment, under which $20,000 was appropriated. According to the understanding which prevailed in the committees at that time, when an amendment had been made by the Senate the amount thus fixed could not be increased above that figure. In the bill of 1910, I think it was, the Senate made an exception to that rule. I still question the desirability or the correctness of fixing a figure beyond that in either bill as a matter of parliamentary law, but in the appropriation for the harbor of Bridgeport, I think in the bill of 1910, a certain amount was fixed by the House, say $30,000, and the Senate increased it to $60,000. A decision was reached to the effect that the conference committee might raise the amount above $60,000; for illustration, I will say to $90,000. It was the impression of the committee of conference in 1907 that, as a matter of parliamentary procedure, we could not raise the amount above the maximum inserted by one of the two Houses.

In the case of the Tennessee River the project was the result of a reexamination, and the amount appropriated, $205,000, was in exact accordance with the recommendation of Col. Kingman, then having charge of the Tennessee River, now brigadier general and head of the Corps of Engineers. He stated that, with separate plants in the different sections of the river, the work could be prosecuted somewhat more rapidly, but that the expense would be greatly increased, and so he thought it desirable to proceed with one plant alone, and the amount of $205,000 appropriated was in accordance with his recommendation.

As regards the falls of the Ohio at Louisville, that is made up of two appropriations. I can see no basis whatever for the statement made that the appropriation is a violation of the rule that when a project is entered upon it should be completed. The appropriation of $314,000 is made up of two items:

> Improving the Ohio River at Louisville, Ky.: By the removal of rocks in the channel of said river near to the falls, $43,000.

That was an item complete in itself. The other is:

> Improving the Ohio River at Louisville, Ky.: By raising the dam so as to give a minimum depth of 9 feet upstream to Madison, Ind., and a minimum depth of 6 feet on the lower miter sill at lock No. 1, Kentucky River, $271,000.

The appropriation in the bill was the aggregate of these two, and each is complete in itself. How the estimate of $1,700,000 is obtained I am unable to state; at any rate it does not apply to these two improvements.

Again, the improvement at Hilo, in the Hawaiian Islands, was very carefully considered by Gen. Mackenzie and myself. It was found that a separate portion of the improvement could be finished at a cost of $400,000, and it was thought that was all that was desirable to be done at that time.

Among the smaller projects are the Cape Porpoise Harbor, in Maine, which was provided for in one cash appropriation of $46,000; the Penobscot River in Maine, $130,000; the Kennebec River in Maine, $75,000 cash and $200,000 continuing contract.

In Massachusetts, the harbor at Beverly, for which a cash appropriation of $38,500 was made; Dorchester Bay and the Neponset River, for which a cash appropriation of $125,223 was made.

In Connecticut, the harbors of Norwalk and East and South Norwalk, for which an appropriation of $63,500 was made.

In New York, Coney Island Channel, for which an appropriation of $188,300 was made; in New Jersey, Cold Spring Inlet, Cape May, at a total cost of $1,211,000; Perriwig Harbor, Delaware River, between Trenton and Bordentown; Salem River, Cohansey River, for which a cash appropriation of $55,800 was provided.

In Delaware the Broadkill River—I will not read all the amounts, as they will be printed with the report—the Meherrin River, N. C., from the mouth thereof to the town of Murfreesboro; Fernandina, Fla., Withlacoochee River; Alabama, Conecuh River; Mississippi, Wolf and Jordan Rivers and the Big Sunflower; inland waterway in Louisiana; inland waterways in Texas; Caney Fork River in Tennessee; Two Rivers Harbor, Wis.; St. Michael Canal, in Alaska; Hilo Harbor, Hawaiian Islands; and San Juan, P. R.

Mr. President, beginning with the great harbors, New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Norfolk on to Savannah, New Orleans, and Galveston, the mouth of the Columbia River, the bill in 1907 was representative of all portions of the country. It took up the great projects then pending and provided either for their completion or for the prosecution of the work for four years.

The bill might have been improved. As I look over that bill, my eye rests on one item that I do not feel should ever have been included there, though time may justify its insertion; but it was a bill passed upon a businesslike method; it was a measure which was framed with a view to keeping pace with the commercial progress of the country and increasing facilities for transportation. Perhaps the most urgent requirements were for the great harbors of the Atlantic coast and the connecting waterways of the Great Lakes, the waterway between Superior and Huron and the Detroit River between Lake St. Clair and Lake Erie; but appropriations were not made in large amounts unless they meant assured results. It was thought that these places where there was a dwindling traffic, though they were not to be put off the map, though they were not to be entirely abandoned, should be postponed in favor of others where the traffic was increasing, and where all the while greater facilities were required to meet the growing demands.

With the adoption of the one-year bill, however, this policy of continuing contracts has gone glimmering. The result is that Congress appropriates enough to finish a part; the engineers make a partial contract for the work at a greatly increased proportion of cost; no assurances are given as to the time when the work will be completed, and, worst of all—far worst of all, Senators—a project may be adopted which may be very objectionable and extravagant, when the bill only shows a comparatively small amount of appropriation.

In one instance in this bill the appropriation is only one-twenty-ninth of the total amount that will be required to finish. An item very innocent in its appearance, but requiring before completion a very large expenditure, and at best a measure of very doubtful desirability.

I now pass to another branch of this inquiry relating to the policies and methods of this bill, and that is the custom of improving branch streams before the main stream is finished.

That, more than anything else in our river and harbor legislation, gives to this measure the characteristic which some have termed the "pork barrel."

It is perfectly easy to see how this arises. The Nation starts out to improve a great main stream like the Ohio, or, say, the Columbia or the Mississippi. Before that improvement is completed along come the communities located on the branches, and say, "Why, you are improving the Ohio. All our branches here must be improved as well. You must not make an appropriation merely for this main stream. We must all have some participation in this plan."

What has been the result? There is not a stream emptying into the Ohio River that is improved with locks and dams but which for seasons of the year, sometimes continuing for months, has higher water in the pools of the tributary than there is in portions of the Ohio River itself. I want to read, briefly, some figures on that point.

The Kentucky River, the Big Sandy River, and others are canalized to a depth of 6 feet. That 6 feet extends upward from the lowest lock and dam in the tributary stream. The report of the chief of engineers for 1913, part 2, page 2527, shows the navigability of the Ohio River for 10 years from Pittsburgh to Cairo. This is close to a thousand miles. With the improvement and partial canalization of the river the depth has very greatly improved in recent years; but after the Kentucky River project was well under way, after the Big Sandy, the Green, the Cumberland, and the Tennessee had been improved so that a depth of 5 or 6 feet had been obtained in the canalized portion, let us see what we had in the Ohio.

In 1903 the number of days when the river, say at Cincinnati or Paducah, was under 3 feet in depth—Paducah is at the mouth of the Tennessee—was 29. The number of days when it was 3 feet and under 6 feet was 336.

Now, let us proceed. It is not worth while to read all these figures, but let us pass on to the latest year. In the year 1912 it was 3 feet deep at all the towns on the river the year around, although that is the first year when that has occurred. For 366 days it was 3 feet and over in practically every place. The number of days when it was 6 feet, or equal to the depth in these canalized tributary streams, was at Davis Island Dam, 255 days, or 111 days in which it was less than the depth in the canalized portions of the tributary streams; at Wheeling, 314 days, or 52 less; at Parkersburg, which is at the mouth of the Little Kanawha, a canalized river, 296 days. That is, there were 70 days of the year when the Ohio River at Parkersburg had not the depth of this branch stream which had been improved. At Catlettsburg, Ky., 309 days out of the 366. At Louisville, a very important point on the river, there was 6 feet and over all but 3 days; but at Evansville, Ind., there were 36 days when it was not 6 feet deep, and at Paducah, Ky., there were 46 days.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. RANSDELL. I have listened with much interest to the remarks of the Senator indicating a criticism of the method of improving branch streams before the parent streams are improved. I will ask the Senator if the project for giving the Ohio River a minimum depth of 6 feet was not adopted in 1875?

Mr. BURTON. I think it was.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will ask the Senator when the project for giving these branch streams a depth of 6 feet or more was adopted?

Mr. BURTON. At a later time, mostly.

Mr. RANSDELL. Considerably later, was it not?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; most of them, I think. The Kentucky was improved a considerable time ago by the State of Kentucky.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will ask the Senator what headway was made in adopting a practical, businesslike method for the improvement of the Ohio during the 10 years when the Senator was chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee?

Mr. BURTON. There were certain dams finished or prosecuted, some below Pittsburgh, where the nonnavigable period is longest; also below Wheeling and Marietta; one below East Liverpool, below Parkersburg, below Gallipolis and the Big Kanawha, and especially one below Cincinnati. I have forgotten whether there was one below Steubenville or not. I think perhaps that was adopted at that time.

Mr. RANSDELL. I will ask the Senator if he considers that the work of improving the Ohio so as to get a minimum depth of 6 feet at all stages was carried on in what he conceives to be a systematic, businesslike manner during the time the Senator was chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee?

Mr. BURTON. I shall get to that matter in a minute.

The question of the Senator from Louisiana does not at all affect the point I have made. If you project an improvement and do not prosecute it on the main stream, that is no reason why you should both project and prosecute it on the branch stream.

As regards the improvement of the Ohio, I am perfectly aware that there was an attempt to make the slow progress on that river a political issue against me for years in the State. It was but an illustration of what I said a few days ago. One reason why such slow progress has been made on many projects has been that we have been so doubtful about whether any good result could be obtained. My idea about the Ohio River was to try out the problem by the construction of dams which would at the same time serve as harbors at the more important towns upon the river and extend the period of navigation in the shallower portions. Below Pittsburgh the descent is steep, and here in its unimproved condition the navigation was suspended for the longest time.

Mr. RANSDELL. But did the Senator give it a chance to be tried out by securing a depth of 6 feet?

Mr. BURTON. Oh, yes; decidedly. The depth of 9 feet was established.

Mr. RANSDELL. You did not give enough locks to make it 6 feet.

Mr. BURTON. Oh, yes; it was 9 feet.

Mr. RANSDELL. I beg pardon. We adopted the 9-foot project about 1907, I think, or 1910; I am not sure which.

Mr. BURTON. The House adopted it as early as 1905; but in the year 1900 the Senate voted it down. I myself inserted in the river and harbor bill in 1900 the provision that it should be 9 feet.

Mr. RANSDELL. I recall very well a great trip down the Ohio in the summer of 1905, which was conducted by a party of which the Senator from Ohio was the head and which was strongly advocating giving a depth of 9 feet from Pittsburgh to Cairo; and my recollection is that we practically adopted that project in the act of 1907.

Mr. BURTON. Beginning in 1900, as rapidly as the House could, the improvement was made with a view to 9 feet. I myself drew the provision that thereafter the improvements should be made—that was the substance of it—with a view to a depth of 9 feet. For some reason, which I never have been able to understand to this day, the Senate struck out the 9 feet and put in 6 feet, though the conference committee agreed on 9 feet. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] was one of the conferees, and brought the report here to the Senate, but the Senate refused to accept the 9 feet, and the provision for 9 feet went out of the bill and was not adopted until a later river and harbor bill. I have forgotten which one it was, but I think it was in 1905.

Mr. RANSDELL. I wish to ask the Senator, further, if it is not a fact that it was not until the act of 1910 that the Ohio River project was taken up in what may be called a really systematic and businesslike manner, with a statement in the bill that we proposed to finish it in 12 years, and an appropriation of about $5,000,000 looking to the completion within 12 years of that great project which had been under way since 1875?

Mr. BURTON. Oh, I say that it was taken up in a systematic manner. It was never taken up with a view to completing it; but I will take the full responsibility for the policy that prevailed before 1910. The seventy or eighty million dollars to be expended there staggered me, and I thought it was best for us to ascertain results by dams below Pittsburgh and below the other principal towns on the river, so that we could determine whether or not it would succeed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BURTON. I do.

Mr. SHEPPARD. What is the length of the longest nonnavigable period on the Ohio River each year?

Mr. BURTON. It depends on the place. In 1903, at Davis Island Dam, there were only 185 days when it was 6 feet and over in depth. That would be just about half of the year. In 1912, however, there were 255 days when it was navigable for 6 feet and over.

I feel that if I can not commend myself to my constituents in the State of Ohio by something better than getting appropriations for their rivers and harbors I can not commend myself to them at all. Probably it was considered that I held back this river for some time, but the policy was a good one. We were going through a tentative period of river development. It was a question whether these streams would prove of sufficient importance, when improved, to pay the cost; and so, pursuing the custom that had been in vogue for more than 20 years before I became a member of the committee, and for nearly 25 years before I became its chairman, dams were selected here and there. Every one was complete in itself; every one improved a certain stretch of the river; every one made the navigable period of the whole river somewhat longer, so that there was some advance in the improvement of the river; but I did not see my way clear, during the time I was chairman of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, to advocate this enormous expense.

I have said, since the bill of 1910—and it is now under way—that the Ohio River and the Large Canal are the two places in this country to determine the feasibility of inland navigation on rivers or canals; that is, on shallow streams. Of those two the Barge Canal is the more promising, because it connects the Great Lakes with the Hudson River and the Atlantic Ocean.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. RANSDELL. I assure the Senator that I have no disposition whatsoever to criticize him or to hold him up to anything like trouble with his Ohio constituents. No man admires him more than I do; I am sure of that, and he knows it. I am just trying to give the Senator a chance to explain what seems to me an inconsistency on his part in criticizing Congress for improving branch streams and not improving the main streams.

During the 10 years the Senator was chairman of this committee a great deal of this improvement of the branch streams was made. The Ohio River project had been started long before he was chairman; and he carried on the improvement of these branch streams and finished some of them, I believe, but did not give money enough to finish the Ohio. It seems to me that is inconsistent, and I simply want to give him a chance to explain it.

While I am on my feet, I should like to say that he has complained a good deal about the dribbling policy in the present bill. Surely the term "dribbling" could be applied with justice to the great Ohio River, which has an enormous commerce and which for years got very, very small appropriations in the bill.

Mr. BURTON. I am not afraid of that issue. These branch streams were improved to an extent, but there was none of the policy of putting locks and dams into streams here, there, and elsewhere, and going ahead with such an enormous expense. On some of them locks were completed; on others there were a few locks commenced, but there was not the mad rush, as in this bill and in the bill of 1910, for providing locks and dams everywhere, like one of our humorists, who desired to put a lightning rod first on one wing of the house, then on the other, then on the barn, and finally to wind up with putting one on the mule and all the other animals around. That sort of thing is the worst waste of public money that can be found in this bill.

I say again that I favored improving the Ohio River so far as conditions promised results. While I favor the policy of completing what you have commenced, yet in the case of an indeterminate improvement, like the lower Mississippi, where estimates are made mounting up to $200,000,000 or thereabouts, it certainly would be the height of inconsistency for anyone to say that you must appropriate the whole of that $200,000,000 before you could improve any other main stream or branch stream in the country.

There is a certain amount of navigability in the Ohio, and there always was. The improvement of branch streams, I think, was pressed more rapidly. Certainly in the case of these canalized rivers it was pressed more rapidly than in the main stream. That is what I am finding fault with.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BURTON. Certainly.

Mr. KENYON. It is true, is it not, that very many of these canals that have been constructed under the provisions of the river and harbor acts have been abandoned?

Mr. BURTON. Not a considerable number of those constructed under the provisions of the river and harbor acts. A great many State canals have been abandoned.

Mr. KENYON. I notice in the report of the Commissioner of Corporations on Transportation by Water in the United States, part 1, a letter of submittal, in which he states:

> About 4,500 miles of canals have been constructed. More than one-half—2,444 miles, costing over $80,000,000—has been abandoned. State canals, however, still operate in New York, Ohio, Illinois, and Louisiana, with a total mileage of nearly 1,360 miles, and there are also 16 private canals of some importance in operation, with a total mileage of 632.

It seems to me, however, that that refers to canals constructed by the Government—over 2,000 miles.

Mr. BURTON. I do not recall at this time any of any importance.

Mr. KENYON. I judge that from the language here. He continues with the statement that about $80,000,000 has been spent on canals that have been abandoned. He goes on then to speak of the State canals.

Mr. BURTON. It is true, however, that the Federal Government made subscriptions to some canals constructed by private corporations. For instance, it made a subscription to the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal, which extends up the Potomac from Georgetown and the Chesapeake and Delaware, which will come up in this bill; but I do not at this minute recall any canal constructed by the Federal Government which has been abandoned. I think this statement must refer, although the language is perhaps a little ambiguous, to canals constructed by private corporations or individuals, and by States. I will say here, in regard to the canals in Ohio, that now they hardly operate at all, although over large stretches there is a depth of 6 and 8 feet in those canals and to the passer-by they look like model waterways.

Mr. KENYON. Does the Senater mean State canals?

Mr. BURTON. Yes; State canals.

Mr. KENYON. Not the canalization of the Ohio River?

Mr. BURTON. Oh, no. The Federal Government, by giving land grants, and so forth, assisted in the building of those canals. While I am on that point I may say that those canals, commenced in the year 1825 by the State of Ohio, determined the location of cities and the course of business. They were of the utmost importance in the development of the State. They reached their maximum traffic in the forties. Then the traffic began to decline, and now it is practically nothing, although they connect the leading cities in the State. The Miami & Erie connects Cincinnati with Toledo. The Ohio Canal connects Zanesville with Cleveland.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, the time to which the Senator alludes was before the days of railroads, I believe, was it not?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. RANSDELL. Canals were practically the only really good means of transportation in those days?

Mr. BURTON. Yes.

Mr. KENYON. It is true, too, is it not, that the transportation tonnage on the Ohio River has very much decreased in the last 10 years?

Mr. BURTON. It is somewhat irregular. The traffic last year was, I believe, 8,000,000 tons; between eight and nine million tons. It has run as high as 14,000,000 tons; but I should be slow to believe that that meant a permanent decline in the total traffic.

Mr. KENYON. I have seen figures which I thought were authentic, and which I have somewhere, to the effect that the commerce had decreased 25 per cent in the last 10 years; there was a constantly decreasing traffic; and this Ohio River project, as I understand, involves the Government in an expenditure of some $63,000,000 before it is completed.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will venture to ask the Senator from Ohio, in addition to the information the Senator from Iowa has asked for, if he has any statistics which show the relative cost of transportation between the river and the railroads, including the loading and unloading of the products and getting them to the consumer?

Mr. BURTON. I have worked on that problem a great deal. It is almost impossible to come to any definite result, as the conditions are so different in different places. Of course, the argument is made by the opponents of river transportation that if you capitalize the cost of the improvement, compute interest on it, say, at 4 per cent—that is the figure that the students of the subject in France adopt—add to that the annual cost of maintenance, and then add the cost of carriage by boat, by that time the cost of water transportation is as great as or greater than that by rail. In some places that is true, and in some places it is not.

Then, there are two further additions to be made to the cost of river transportation. The first is insurance. Sometimes, of course, river traffic is sent without insurance; but in carrying on the business on a large scale, as a shipper by railroad would do, he would wish to insure. The next item is the greater cost of loading and unloading.

I shall hope during this discussion to enumerate quite a number of cases in which I shall make comparisons between the cost of transportation by water and the cost of transportation by rail. I desire to suggest to the Senator from New Hampshire and to the other Senators who are so kind as to listen to me that there is another comparison that may be profitably made in view of the development of the automobile business, and that is a comparison between the cost of traffic by water and the cost by autotruck That comparison assumes especial importance when we take into account the fact that the average haul on most of these streams is so short—30 or 40 miles, or something like that.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yes, Mr. President; that is a very interesting suggestion. The fact is that the autotruck is now very largely taking the place of horses. I happen to know an instance where a truck service was inaugurated in the city of Boston, and the saving to the manufacturer in delivering his goods has been enormous. In fact, his goods are delivered as far away as 90 miles from Boston at a very small cost. I hope that may be worked out.

I should like to ask the Senator another question. It will take only a moment. However it may be as to the decline in river traffic on the Ohio River, I take it that it is an undisputed and indisputable fact that the decline on the Missouri River and the Mississippi River has been very large.

Mr. BURTON. I think the traffic on the Ohio is easily 30 times what it is on the Missouri.

Mr. GALLINGER. Yet I believe we have two and a half million dollars in this bill for the Missouri River.

Mr. BURTON. Something like $2,000,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. And eleven or twelve million dollars for the Mississippi.

Mr. BURTON. I will dwell at length on the traffic upon the Mississippi River.

Mr. RANSDELL. With the consent of the Senator from Ohio, I should like to furnish a few figures I have in response to the question of the Senator from New Hampshire if I may get his attention.

Mr. GALLINGER. Certainly.

Mr. RANSDELL. I made a careful examination of this question some time ago, and I have a few figures here. I read from a speech which I made on the Panama Canal tolls question:

> A study of the rates on railroads leading out of St. Louis affords striking evidence of the effect of waterways. Havana, Ill., is 159 miles from St. Louis, and Poplar Bluff, Mo., 169 miles distant, but Havana is on the Illinois River and has a first-class rate of 36.1 cents per 100 pounds, while Poplar Bluff is an inland town and has to pay 52 cents. The distance to Poplar Bluff is only 10 miles greater; the rate is more than 44 per cent higher.
> Springfield, Mo., is 239 miles from St. Louis, while the distance to St. Paul is 593 miles. Springfield, Mo., being inland, pays 62 cents, while St. Paul, being on the Mississippi River, pays only 1 cent more—63 cents—for the greater distance. If the rate to Springfield, Mo., were the same per mile as the rate to St. Paul, Springfield, would pay only 25 cents per 100 pounds instead of 62 cents. Vice versa, if the rate per mile to St. Paul were the same as to Springfield, Mo., the rate would be $1.54 instead of 63 cents.
> Mexico, Mo., is 116 miles from St. Louis; Cincinnati, Ohio, is 339 miles. Cincinnati is on the Ohio River and boats can ply between St. Louis and that city, so the railroad rate on commodities of the first class to Cincinnati is 41 cents, while that to Mexico, Mo., is 43 cents. Cincinnati is almost three times as far away and has a rate of 2 cents per 100 pounds less than the town to which the steamboats can not run.
> These rates were compiled by the Interstate Commerce Commission from the railway tariffs on file, and the distances were taken from the official railway guide.

Mr. GALLINGER. Has the Senator ascertained what proportion of freight was carried on those streams and the amount carried by the railroad?

Mr. RANSDELL. I did not examine that to see just how much freight was carried; but even if the freight is not carried on the river, there is a very large volume of freight, I take it, between St. Louis and St. Paul and between St. Paul and Cincinnati, and that freight, whether carried by water or carried by rail, is actually carried, according to the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission, at rates which are very much smaller in every instance than the rates of freight to the inland points which do not have the benefit of water transportation.

Mr. GALLINGER. If that be so, why is it that these great waterways of commerce are not utilized and why does not capital engage in the building of steamboats to go into that business?

Mr. RANSDELL. The only way I can account for it is that the railroads have so reduced the freight at competitive water points that the boats have been driven out of the business. The Senator will recall that when the Panama Canal act was passed in 1912 it was found necessary to include section 11, which provides that hereafter no railroads shall own boats that compete with them, and you also remember that we have made provision for the long and the short haul, requiring railroads to charge relatively the same for a long haul as for the short haul. We have done everything we possibly can to overcome the unfair competition to which the railroads have subjected the waterways, and it is my firm belief that when the waterways can get on the basis that they were many years ago the Congress of the United States will protect them from the unfair and cutthroat competition to which they were subjected by these railroads until practically all the boats and commerce were driven from the rivers.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is it the Senator's opinion that the waterways will ever get on the same footing that they occupied some years ago?

Mr. RANSDELL. I do not think there is the smallest doubt about it. Let me cite you one case where there is an enormous carriage of freight by water. On the Great Lakes alluded to to-day by the Senator from Ohio, there were, if I recollect correctly, over 72,000,000 tons of commerce carried last year through the canal which we improved, the St. Marys River, because it is a canal, a canalized river, and just on that river alone the commerce between the Huron and Superior amounted to over 72,000,000 tons. It was carried an average distance of about 826 miles at a rate less than seven-tenths of 1 mill per ton per mile, whereas the average railroad rate in this country last year was something like 7.7 mills per ton per mile, more than eleven times the average rate actually paid on this colossal commerce through the Soo.

Mr. President, I see no reason why if this great commerce is carried through the Great Lakes from one end to the other and to various points along either shore at a rate ridiculously low compared with the railroad rate there should not be relatively the same amount of commerce on the Ohio River and the other great rivers when they are improved.

Why does not a large commerce move on the Ohio now? Because at certain times of the year there are not more than 2 feet of water in that river.

I was at Cincinnati in the summer of 1905 and was told that you could wade across the river without getting wet to your waist. There were only about 2 feet of water over one of the bars in the river. Everyone knows that a chain is no stronger than its weakest link, and that the shipper is not going to depend on the watercourse when just at the time he needs his freight the river may be out of business.

Mr. GALLINGER. Why——

Mr. RANSDELL. If the Senator will pardon me one moment, we are trying to give the Ohio a dependable depth of 9 feet at all stages from Pittsburgh to Cairo, and I am firmly convinced that when we do give it that depth, a depth at all stages except when stopped by ice, there will be a very considerable commerce on it; and what is true of the Ohio applies largely to many of these other rivers.

Mr. GALLINGER. No doubt that is possibly so. I know that commerce is carried on the Great Lakes at very low rates per ton. There is no question about that. The reasons are obvious. Has the Senator taken into account the cost of improving the Ohio and Mississippi so that they will be open waterways like the Great Lakes and give us an opportunity to test this question there? How far do the appropriations of this bill go toward solving that problem?

Mr. RANSDELL. On the Ohio River we are giving a little over $5,000,000 in this bill. We started in 1910 on what I conceive to be a businesslike method of improving the Ohio. We said we were going to finish it in 12 years and we gave $5,000,000 for it. This is the fourth appropriation since that time. We have appropriated in round numbers $25,000,000, including the Ohio item in the pending bill, on a project which the engineers said would cost $63,000,000. I have no reason to assume that the engineers are wrong in their estimate. So if they be correct this bill carries in round numbers one-twelfth of what is necessary to complete the Ohio.

We are carrying it on about as fast as good business and ordinary prudence dictate that it should be carried on. I do not believe you could spend wisely more than $5,000,000 a year on that river. I doubt if you could find contractors who could do the work more rapidly than at the rate of about $5,000,000 a year.

The Mississippi River is such a large affair that I will take it somewhat in sections. In 1910 we adopted a project to improve the Mississippi River between St. Paul, or perhaps I should say Minneapolis, and the mouth of the Missouri. As I recall the project, it was to cost about $18,000,000, and in that instance we said we were going to finish it in 12 years. Since that time we have been consistently appropriating, as I recall, about $1,500,000 a year. That is what the present bill carries for that stretch of the Mississippi River. It is a great river; it now has a considerable commerce; there is a magnificent country on both sides of it; and I believe there is going to be a very large commerce on the river when it is completed.

The stretch between the mouth of the Missouri and the mouth of the Ohio, the one to which my friend the Senator from Ohio

[Mr. BURTON] has alluded to-day, is quite a difficult stretch. There has been a project under way for many years to improve that portion of the river, but it has not been carried on in a businesslike way until within very recent years. It is now being pushed to what I believe will bring about its completion within the same 12-year period that we have applied to the Ohio and to the upper Mississippi.

As to the lower Mississippi there is a big problem of floods and caving banks there. It is very hard to state just what percentage of that work is carried in the pending bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, we have spent on the Mississippi River about $140,000,000, not taking into account the improvements within the limits of two or more States, which are very large. Does the Senator think that that enormous expenditure of money has brought us an adequate return in giving us water transportation and reducing the cost? Is it not a fact, I will ask the Senator in all seriousness, that a very large proportion of the money that we have spent upon the Mississippi River, especially for dikes, has been utterly thrown away, except that it has protected property along it adjacent to those levees? In other words, has it actually to any appreciable extent improved navigation?

Mr. RANSDELL. In reply to the question I will say to the Senator that in September, 1882, where I live at present, Lake Providence, La., there were a great many shallow bars in the Mississippi River. I have seen as many as three large steamboats within 3 or 4 miles of the town of Lake Providence stuck hard and fast on sand bars. Across these bars there were not more than 4 or 5 feet depth of water at that time, and the channel was greatly impeded.

Congress passed in 1879 an act creating the Mississippi River Commission, which began the systematic improvement of the river, and a part of its plan was to revet the banks and to build levees. For many years now we have had practically 9 feet of water over the shallowest bars on the river from Cairo to the Gulf. In the early eighties there were a great many places, not only at Lake Providence, but at other places, especially in the vicinity of Memphis, Hopeville Bend, and elsewhere, where there were 5 feet and less over the bars.

As I said, for years we have had 9 feet from Cairo to the Gulf. I can not say that any of the appropriations made for the river have been thrown away. Some of them perhaps have not brought just the results we expected and hoped for. Some of them may have been failures, just as all of us make failures, just as some of our appropriations for the Navy have been failures, but in the main I can say that a wonderful country in the Mississippi Valley has been developed by the building of levees. I can say that in the main we have a region there which is as rich as there is in the Union anywhere, a region which is devastated whenever we have floods, by the concentrated rainfall of 31 States, and the people there can not build levees sufficient to protect themselves. They have had considerable help, but let me say to the Senator that they have been a brave people. They have spent, according to official reports, since 1865 something like $66,000,000 on their levees, during which time the National Government has spent about $31,000,000. They have spent for every dollar expended by the Government more than $2 of their own money wrung from their hard toil, from a tax on everything in the world they possess. Every kind of crop, every acre of land, indeed, everything on earth down in that country has been taxed, and the people have struggled valiantly to save themselves from the Nation's floods. They were not the normal floods of their own valleys, but the rains of nearly two-thirds of the Union, including a part of Canada.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am quite familiar with those facts, and they are to the credit of the people living along the banks of the Mississippi River, but I have been unable in my investigation thus far to discover that the expenditures of the Government have very materially improved the navigation of the stream, but they have enormously increased the value of the land, in some instances 500 per cent. I think if the Senator would strike a balance and ascertain the amount of profit that has come to the people owning those alluvial lands, enormous in quantity, he would find it greatly exceeded any expenditures that have been made by those people to help protect their own homes. That is my judgment. I do not say that the Government ought not to do this, but I think we might just as well now as at any time look it squarely in the face and ascertain whether these appropriations are being made for the benefit of commerce or for the benefit of private parties.

Mr. RANSDELL. There has been——

Mr. GALLINGER. I will add that the argument the Senator has suggested finds a lodgment in my mind. I am not at all indifferent to it, and I do not want to be indifferent to it. The floods come from several States remote from the towns along the lower Mississippi, and to that extent it may well be argued that the Nation owes a debt to those people and is under obligation as far as it can to protect them from those disastrous floods that come from distant points. I think there is very great argument in that, and I am not at all indifferent to it.

Mr. RANSDELL. I thank the Senator for his kindly expression toward my people. They certainly have been very sorely tried.

In this connection, let me remind him that the awful floods which did so much damage in Ohio last year—millions and millions of dollars' worth—one scarcely knows how many million dollars of damage was done in Ohio and Indiana last year, not only to the property, but to human life. Many lives were destroyed and the floods swept on down the Ohio, thence into the Mississippi River, where they continued their work of destruction, and onward for nearly 2,000 miles before they finished their damage and rested in the Gulf.

In the district I formerly represented in Congress, in Tensas Parish, La., 70 miles below the city of Vicksburg, a magnificent levee was broken by the waters which fell in Ohio and Indiana. We had little rain there last spring, practically none anywhere in the Mississippi Valley proper; but every drop of water, Senators, that falls between the Alleghenies on the east and the Rockies on the west, even much that falls in the Dominion of Canada, has to find an outlet to the Gulf through the Mississippi River. It has been well called the Nation's sewage ditch. These waters can not get to the Gulf in any other way. Now, think of those awful flood waters, which, after drowning many good people in Ohio and Indiana, and destroying much valuable property, rushed on down through the small rivers in those States to the big Ohio and the Mississippi, and thence on down to bear terrible destruction to Missouri, Kentucky, Tennessee, Arkansas, Mississippi, and Louisiana.

Near the home of my friend from Mississippi, Senator VARDAMAN, there was a terrible break in the Mississippi River levees which did enormous damage. Does anyone say that the people of Mississippi should be required alone and unaided to hold back flood waters that fell more than 1,500 miles away from them? Surely not. I am glad to hear such noble sentiments as those just expressed by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]. I am glad to find in the Senate a growing sentiment that it is the duty of Congress to protect the Mississippi Valley from floods which it can not control by itself. I am glad to know that all three of the great political parties of this country in their recent platforms have committed themselves to the control of that valley from floods. The local people have done their best and they intend to continue to help themselves to the very utmost. But, Senators, in the name of common sense, how can people do much when they are overflowed as they were in 1912 and again in 1913 and all their crops ruined? With no crops out of which to get any money with which to pay taxes, how can they help themselves? It is impossible. The Nation must come to their relief.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL. Just one word more on the subject of navigation. I always believe in being fair about everything, and it is a fact that a considerable portion of the expenditures made on the Mississippi River have been to protect those lands from floods. I have never thought otherwise; I have never contended otherwise during the 16 years that I have been in Congress; but there has been a very large increment of navigation as well. Let me say to Senators, that when a big flood is in progress, unless you have levees there is no landing place. You can not have commerce, no matter how deep the water, unless there is a place for the boats to land, unless there is dry land on the inside of the levees for the people to haul freight out. How much commerce can there be on a river when the entire valley is overflowed? When the railroads are flooded, as well as the dirt roads, how much transportation can there be?

Is it not the duty of Congress to provide for safe carriage of the mails to all of the citizens of the country? How much mail can there be carried when there are floods 50 miles wide, as I have seen them in that valley?

The levees, let me repeat, are necessary to form landing places for the boats in time of flood, and they are also necessary to cause the river to scour out the shallow places. As I said a moment ago, before the building of those levees in 1882 there were many shallow bars, from 4 to 5 feet, and when the levees were built, when the gaps were closed, when the waters were confined to the river, those bars were scoured out and became deep, and we now have 9 feet of water in the shallowest places. That navigable depth is very largely due to the levees.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Louisiana if there is not a great diversity of opinion among those who have given study to this subject as to the value of the scouring process when the flood is confined?

Mr. RANSDELL. I have never heard any difference of opinion expressed among really able engineers on that subject. I have been studying it very carefully, and I will state that in connection with the preparation of this bill we had several of the ablest engineers in the country before us. I shall be glad to furnish the Senator one of the bulletins containing their report. All of them testified to the very valuable aid which the levees are to the navigation, to the scouring qualities, of the stream, as well as to the protection of the lands from overflow.

Mr. GALLINGER. Was there in the section that the Senator mentions—I do not know the facts—any dredging done?

Mr. RANSDELL. There was some dredging done there; yes, sir. The Mississippi River Commission has several dredges, and they use them as an adjunct. The building of the levees alone did not complete the scouring; but I will say to the Senator that the engineers contend that if the levees had been perfect and continuous all the way down, the scouring would have been sufficient; but, unfortunately, during every flood there would be more or less breaks in the levees, and it invariably followed that when a break occurred in the levee the water would sweep out with a tremendous rush in the gap, and the volume of water in the river would be very much diminished, a large percentage of it sometimes, probably half, escaping through the gap. That would cause a very great diminution in the rapidity of the flow, the impetus of the flood; and the sand and sediment carried in solution, naturally being affected by the decreased flow, would be deposited in large quantities, and a great sand bar would be formed below a crevasse.

Mr. GALLINGER. I wish to ask the Senator one further question in that connection. While a bar is washed out—and we will say that it is done because of controlling the water in a comparatively narrow channel—is not that silt carried to some other point and deposited, and thereby another bar formed?

Mr. RANSDELL. Well, it is scattered throughout the river to some extent, and a great deal of it is carried to the Gulf of Mexico. As the Senator knows, Louisiana is the youngest State in the Union, geologically speaking. That great jurist and wonderfully good man, Judge Robert S. Taylor, of Fort Wayne, Ind., said a few years ago in a public address which I heard him make, that Louisiana was composed of the geological cream of the American Continent; that it was formed of the washings of soil from the hillsides and valleys of the 41 States which contribute their waters to the floods of the Mississippi River; and in very recent times the peninsula has extended quite a long way into the Gulf of Mexico. Land is being made there all the while. Our area is growing annually.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, in that respect Louisiana is different from the little State which I in part represent. Some distinguished southerner once said that after the other States had been made the débris was gathered up and deposited in New England, and that was the reason we had so many rocks.

Mr. RANSDELL. They must have deposited some very good débris in New England from the character of the people who come from there.

Mr. GALLINGER. However that may be, I want to ask the Senator a really honest, practical question. We all recognize the Senator—and I do not think I will exclude the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] from that suggestion—as having perhaps given more profound study to this question of waterways than has any other Senator. I, too, have given some study to it. I came to the conclusion long ago that levees were of small account in the matter of benefiting navigation; they did something, but that their chief value was—and I am not at war with that thought—that they protected the adjacent territory from inundation and destruction. I gave some thought and investigation to the matter of the reservoirs, and I about came to the conclusion that you might as well stick a knitting needle into the Potomac River and undertake to stop the flow to the ocean as to undertake to control the Mississippi River by the construction of reservoirs.

I gave a good deal of consideration to the subject, and in my innocence was profoundly impressed with the thought that we might at least greatly mitigate the evils of floods by the outlet system; but in that respect scientists differed from my immature views, and I abandoned them.

Now, I ask the Senator if he has given—and I have no doubt he has given—consideration to the question as to whether or not this great country, with all its wealth, will ever be able probably to devise a means within the limits of human expenditure that will remedy the evil of which the Senator complains and which I very fully recognize.

Mr. RANSDELL. Does the Senator from New Hampshire refer to the floods on the lower Mississippi River?

Mr. GALLINGER. I refer to the floods on the lower Mississippi River.

Mr. RANSDELL. In answer to the Senator's question, I will state very frankly that I have studied it. I have studied it as the representative of my people, who have suffered terribly from those floods; of my entire State, which is damaged by them more than any other State in the Union, for out of about 28,000 square miles of flood area in the valley of the Mississippi River 14,000 are in the State of Louisiana. I have studied the question as one whose every dollar is invested back of the levees, for I have lived during all my business life in the little town of Lake Providence, on the banks of the Mississippi River. In front of that little town there are levees about 17 or 18 feet high.

During the 32 years I have lived there I have seen a number of overflows in the river. My plantation and property—for I am a cotton planter—have been overflowed a number of times, and my individual losses have been very heavy; so that I have had every incentive that could make a man study a subject make me study this one. As the result of practically a third of a century of earnest study and investigation I am firmly convinced that if we will build the levees along the banks of the Mississippi River from Cape Girardeau, Mo., to the Gulf on both sides of the river, where they are needed, according to the plans of the Mississippi River Commission, the valley will be fully protected from overflow. In some places the hills come down and levees are not needed. If we will build the levees strong and high, as this commission suggests, with the crown, the height, and the base they suggest, with the banquettes as adjuncts to the levees, and prevent the caving of the banks of the river by proper revetments along the plans advocated by the Mississippi River Commission, worked out by them in detail, and which to some extent they have actually carried into practice, I believe the people of the lower valley will have adequate relief.

The most recent testimony in regard to that subject was given by Judge Robert Taylor, of Indiana. Let me say that he is one of the greatest men in the United States. I compare him favorably with any man I have ever known. He was appointed——

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I want to indorse what he has said concerning Judge Taylor.

Mr. RANSDELL. I thank the Senator. Judge Taylor is a great man, and the people of that valley honor and love him. I wish he belonged to my political party, but unfortunately he does not.

Mr. GALLINGER. Which party is that?

Mr. RANSDELL. The Democratic Party.

Mr. GALLINGER. I supposed it was the "Louisiana" party, of which we have heard lately.

Mr. RANSDELL. No, sir; I do not belong to that branch of a political party.

When the Mississippi River Commission was created, in 1879, there were seven members, six of whom were engineers and one was a civilian. The first civilian was Benjamin Harrison, afterwards President of the United States. I presume that it will not be necessary to prove that he was an able man.

When he resigned from the commission to become United States Senator, in March, 1881, he was succeeded by Robert S. Taylor, and Judge Taylor held the position until March, 1914—33 years. If ever a great man studied a great subject carefully and understood it well, Judge Taylor studied and understood that subject. He was not an engineer, but in many respects he was better qualified to understand those problems than an engineer. He did not have the limitations which every profession, be it law, medicine, engineering, or any other, throws upon its members. He was a great lawyer, and he gave to the study of that question a wonderfully clear mind. Twice every year the Mississippi River Commission, during the 33 years when he was a member, went from St. Louis to New Orleans in their boat, called the Mississippi, studying those levees, studying every problem connected with the river, and time and again has Judge Taylor been summoned to Congress to testify in regard to the river. He studied, I believe, every question connected with the subject everywhere in the world. He has written a number of most instructive and entertaining articles concerning the river, and to any Senator who wishes to know about it, who wishes something really interesting, let me advise that he read these articles by Judge Taylor.

A few weeks ago this gentleman was summoned to testify before a subcommittee of the Commerce Committee in regard to the Mississippi River, and he again repeated what he had said often before, that the one, sole, and only solution of the floods of the river was to build the levees big and strong under the plans of his commission and to prevent other levees from caving into the river by the construction of bank revetments.

Mr. GALLINGER. And to build them on both sides of the river?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes, sir; he thought they should be built on both sides of the river. The other man to whom I wish to refer and who testified before us recently was Maj. J. A. Ockerson, also a member of the Mississippi River Commission. As a young engineer he was employed by the great James B. Eads when working out that wonderful problem which resulted in the jetties at the mouth of the Mississippi River. For years and years, after being with Eads, who himself was an early member of this commission, Maj. Ockerson occupied a high position under the Mississippi River Commission. For 16 or 18 years he has been one of its members; he has attended a great many international engineering conferences in the Old World; he has visited and studied the levee systems of the Po, the Danube, the Nile, and of other rivers of the world. He is a remarkably high-grade engineer.

Recently, when the great break in the levees of the Colorado River occurred, and the Salton Sea, in southern California, with which we are all more or less familiar, was being filled with flood waters pouring out of the Colorado, Maj. Ockerson was employed and sent there, along with other great engineers, to close the break during the time of the flood, and his efforts and those of the others were successful. He testified very fully before the Senate committee recently. He repeated the same things stated by Judge Taylor, that if we will build the levees as they should be built, build them as the Mississippi River Commission advocates they be built, and at the same time protect the banks from caving so that the new levees when built will not cave into the river, we will get the desired protection; and I am firmly convinced, as the result of my own study, that the levees, and the levees alone, will give us that orotection.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. RANSDELL. I will be delighted to yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I am greatly impressed, Mr. President, by what the Senator has just said. His conclusion is based upon his own and the experience of other very able men who have studied the subject. I quite agree that if the United States Government can put a stop to these enormous overflows and the consequent destruction of life and property which they entail, it ought to be done; and, for my part, I am willing to give my vote to any appropriation within reason that would bring about that result. Now, does not the Senator think that it would be very much better to enter upon the accomplishment of that plan than to continue these river and harbor bills, with their numerous enterprises, so many of which are of a questionable character?

Mr. RANSDELL. I thank the Senator sincerely for his expression of interest in the Mississippi Valley; and, in response to his question, I will say that for years I have personally been very anxious to see a solution of the Mississippi River flood problem adopted as a great, broad, general project, similar to the Panama Canal. Beyond question, Senators, it is as big a problem from an engineering viewpoint as the Panama Canal.

Mr. THOMAS. A larger one, perhaps.

Mr. RANSDELL. Perhaps larger. It is not going to cost anything like as much money, but it is a more difficult engineering problem than even the Panama Canal. I have been exceedingly anxious to have it adopted as a specific single project, put under the continuing contract system, and the money provided just as we provided it in the case of the Panama Canal. There is no question about that being the wise thing to do. I have advocated it, but there seemed to be no chance to get it adopted.

There is now pending in the Senate a bill which I introduced, proposing to appropriate $12,000,000 a year for five years to build levees on the river, requiring the local people to contribute $3,000,000 a year for five years, making a total of $15,000,000. Now, how do I arrive at that sum? The Mississippi River Commission says it will cost $60,000,000 to complete the levees. They tell us that in order to carry on properly the work of bank revetment an appropriation of $3,000,000 per annum is advisable. So, if the commission had $15,000,000, $12,000,000 to be furnished by the National Government and $3,000,000 by the local people—and that is all they can pay to save their lives—it would give them during the next five years $75,000,000, of which $12,000,000 per annum, or a total of $60,000,000, would go into levees, while $3,000,000 per annum, or a total of $15,000,000, would go into the work of bank revetment; and at the end of that time the work would have been completed, so far as the levees were concerned.

In all candor, Senators, I must say that the work of bank revetment must go on for a number of years. Some of the engineers estimate that it will probably cost $90,000,000 to finish the work of bank revetment, but it will run on through a long period of years. If you had the whole amount now, you could not possibly spend it. Why? You would not have the plant with which to operate. Three million dollars a year is a large sum, and they would have to increase their present plant considerably to spend more than $3,000,000 a year. Moreover, there is a very large amount of willows needed in revetment work. They use the very small willows, and you would exhaust the supply of willows if you tried to expend over three or four million dollars a year.

Another thing: In order to do the work properly you must slightly precede the caving of bends. You revet one bend; the Mississippi winds around, as you know, like a great snake down through the country; caving occurs on a certain bend. You revet that bend to prevent any further caving from going on there, and you do not know where the next caving will break out. You must wait a few months, or perhaps a year or two, to see where the indications of caving are; and then, before the next high water, you put in revetments at that point, 1 or 2 or 3 miles, as the case may be. So you could not spend more than about $3,000,000 a year if you had it.

Let me say again that I believe it would be wise for us to take this great project away from the annual river and harbor bill, and no man would sanction it more than myself. My bill is pending for that purpose. I am not opposed to the Senator from Ohio in his general idea of continuing contracts. When my time comes to speak—and I thank the Senator for letting me talk so long now—I shall show that this bill is framed along the lines of continuing contracts, and along the lines of his great bill of 1907; but I should like to see some exceptions made, and this is one of them. We ought to be statesmen enough to take the Mississippi River out of the ordinary river and harbor bill and provide for it once and for all, and I hope the Senator is going to help me when my bill comes before us.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. RANSDELL. I do.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will ask the Senator from Louisiana if he is at all certain, from the investigations he has made—and doubtless they have been very thorough—that the amount included in his bill will accomplish this great result?

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, in response to that I will say that I believe it will more than do the work, and I will tell you what I base that on.

The engineers, in making their estimate of $60,000,000, thought, and so estimated, that it would cost about 30 to 35 cents per cubic yard to move the dirt. Most of the levee building is done with scrapers and mules. It is about like making the fills in railroads. The estimate was 35 cents per cubic yard to move that dirt. Very recently a great dirt-moving machine has been invented. I have some pictures of it here. It is very recent. It is not on the market, but they are building a levee with it now in the vicinity of Memphis, Tenn. It is thought that this wonderful machine will probably move that dirt at about 10 cents a yard; so that instead of our having to pay 30 to 35 cents, the estimate made by these engineers—and they have made it very carefully; they have erred, if at all, on the conservative side—we may be able to move it for 10 cents. I am sure that if we have $60,000,000, and have it systematically, at the rate of at least $12,000,000 a year, which is enough, as we could not very well spend more than that economically, and could make our contracts and our calculations in advance, we could build the levees for less than $60,000,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I am interested in the statement the Senator has made that this great project includes the building of levees on both sides. It has seemed to me that we have been profligate in our expenditures in levee building, for the reason that we have constructed levees only on one side of the river at critical points. There are lodged now in the proper department of the Government perhaps thousands of claims, and certainly hundreds of claims, of citizens on the side of the river opposite where the Government has built levees, the contention being that their property has been destroyed and the Government ought to reimburse them.

I know that as far back as 1898 there were claims of nearly a million dollars filed. I at one time thought they were ridiculous; but more recently, after giving the matter more mature consideration, it looks to me as though they have a pretty valid claim. The property holders on the one side where the levees were built have had their property increased from 50 to 300 per cent in value, while the property holders on the opposite side have had their property swept away. It does seem to me that if this great project is to be entered into—and it commends itself pretty warmly to my untutored mind—the levees ought to be built the entire stretch on both sides of the river.

Mr. THOMAS. At the same time.

Mr. GALLINGER. At the same time. I presume, however, that if we solve the problem of floods on the lower Mississippi, we shall have to back up and come to Pittsburgh and some other points farther north and engage in another great enterprise to prevent floods there. There is, or was recently, a great clamor in Pittsburgh to the effect that they were suffering from floods that might be controlled and that the Government ought to make liberal appropriations for that purpose.

I simply want to say this to the Senator from Louisiana: I may not be wise in saying it, because I do not know exactly how it will strike the people I represent, and yet I am in the habit of doing things without much regard to the popular view. I suppose the bill to which he alludes is before the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. And the Senator is a member of that committee?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator's pleasing personality can induce that committee to report the bill and it ever comes before the Senate for action, unless I change my mind I will vote for it. That would be only one vote, of course; but I think we ought in some way to take up this great question on a large scale and see if it can not be solved, because I do think our piecemeal work is not very wise.

Mr. RANSDELL. I again wish to thank the Senator for his very kind and statesmanlike remarks.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. RANSDELL. Let me answer the Senator from New Hampshire for just a few moments, and then I will yield to the Senator from Colorado.

I wish to say that the Senator is only partially correct in regard to the building of levees on both banks of the river. From the Gulf of Mexico to the city of Baton Rouge, La., there is a continuous line of levees on both banks of the river. Then, from the city of Baton Rouge, La., to a short distance above the city of Vicksburg, Miss., there is no levee on the east bank of the river. Then, from a point just above Vicksburg, for several hundred miles, to the city of Memphis there is a levee along the east bank. On the west bank of the river there is a practically continuous levee line from the Gulf to a point slightly north of the city of Cairo, except at the mouth of the Red River, the mouth of the Arkansas, the mouth of the White, and the mouth of the St. Francis. There is practically a continuous levee line on the west bank.

So, repeating what I said, on the east bank from the Gulf to Baton Rouge and from a point just above Vicksburg to Memphis there is a levee line. There are narrow strips of land in the sections between Baton Rouge and Vicksburg and between Memphis and the Ohio River, with the exception of a few miles at Reel Foot, which never have been leveed in the past because they were comparatively small and the money was so scarce, and the commission and others thought they would have to spend the money where it would do the most good.

I am delighted to hear the Senator say that this matter should be taken up in a big, broad, general, far-reaching way. Let me call your attention to section 13 of this bill, which provides:

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to appoint a commission of three persons, two of whom shall be from civil life, and the third an engineer of the United States Army, one of whom shall be designated as chairman, to investigate the question of damage to lands on the Mississippi River below Cape Girardeau, Mo., resulting from the construction of levees and the improvement of said river in the interest of navigation since 1890. Said commission shall examine and report upon all such damages caused by floods resulting from levees and shall report the facts to Congress with suggestions of a basis of equitable adjustment of the liability, if any, for such damages, and what part the National Government, the State and local authorities shall, respectively, contribute in the settlement of such liability. Said commissioners shall have power to subpœna witnesses and to administer oaths: Provided, That no fee shall be paid to any witness except those subpœnaed on the part of the Government. The commissioners appointed from civil life shall receive a salary of $5,000 a year each, payable monthly, on the warrant of their chairman, and the commission shall be entitled to necessary clerical and expert assistance, stationery, etc., together with traveling expenses. The term of office of this commission shall expire when its final report is made to Congress, which shall not be later than July 1, 1916. In order to carry out the purposes of this section, the sum of $60,000 is hereby appropriated. All expenditures herein authorized shall be paid out of this appropriation upon the warrant of the chairman.

This section provides for a commission to study that question and report to Congress, so that we will have intelligently before us all matters connected with damages by floods and levees on the river, and an estimate of the cost of probable damages if the Government is to pay them. The friends of the river wanted light on the subject, and we are trying to get it under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator to say that in his opinion $60,000,000 would do all the necessary improvement on the Mississippi, including the necessary revetment work?

Mr. RANSDELL. No; I stated that $60,000,000 would finish the levees, and that the revetment work would probably cost about $90,000,000. That estimate of $90,000,000 is made by Maj. Ockerson. I have his report here, if the Senator would like to see it.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not an engineer, but——

Mr. RANSDELL. Let me say that that $90,000,000 would be expended during a period of about 30 years. They can not expend the money much more expeditiously than at the rate of $3,000,000 a year, for the reasons I have stated, owing to the scarcity of willows and many things of that kind.

Mr. SMOOT. The last trip I took down the Mississippi River from St. Louis to New Orleans I came to the conclusion that if $500,000,000 would do the necessary levee work on the Mississippi River and also provide the necessary revetments, it would be a closer estimate than the one just cited by the Senator. I do not believe $150,000,000 will begin to cover the expense. I watched the banks on both sides of the river caving in, caused by the high water at that particular time, and I noticed the immense amount of work that would have to be done for hundreds of miles on both sides of the river, which would be exceedingly costly work, particularly the revetment; and yet I thought to myself that if that river could me made navigable and secure against future floods and the great Mississippi Valley could become all that people thought it would be in case floods were prevented, even that amount of money could be justified. I would not, however, want to start in with any idea of $150,000,000 doing the work, because, in my opinion, it is absolutely impossible to accomplish that work for that amount of money.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, responding to the Senator, I thank him for his kind words, as I have the other Senators. Of course I am not an engineer, and I would not like to put up my untutored opinion against that of the doctors in a case of this kind. When I get a serious disease I go to the best doctor I can find and take his medicine, and I usually get well. We have had, I believe, the best doctor on earth on this question, the Mississippi River Commission, composed of six very able engineers and that great man, Judge Taylor, of whom I have spoken. All of the members of the commission, so far as I know—and I think I know them well—are a unit in saying that the levees can be built for $60,000,000; and I have given the reasons which make me believe and make some mighty well-posted people believe that the levees will not cost $60,000,000, because that estimate was based on 35 cents a cubic yard for moving dirt, and we believe—I stated it while the Senator was out—that a recently invented dirt-moving machine, of which I will show the Senator a picture——

Mr. SMOOT. I heard the Senator's statement. I was here.

Mr. RANSDELL. A machine has been evolved which will cheapen it very much. There was one estimate made that the revetment work would cost $158,000,000, but I do not consider that a reliable estimate.

Mr. BURTON. May I ask, first, who made that estimate of $158,000,000?

Mr. RANSDELL. It was made, as I understand, by the Mississippi River Commission, under a resolution of Congress asking them to go into some details and give an estimate of the entire cost; but Maj. Ockerson, who was a member of the commission when the estimate was made, stated before our committee the other day that he was convinced that $90,000,000 would do the work.

Mr. BURTON. What was the estimate of Col. Townsend on the revetment and on the levees?

Mr. RANSDELL. As I recall, Col. Townsend thought something like ninety to a hundred million dollars would probably do it.

Mr. BURTON. That is for the revetment?

Mr. RANSDELL. For the revetment, and $60,000,000, he said, for the levees.

Mr. BURTON. What is the average cost per mile, under present conditions, of levee construction and of revetment construction? It has changed so from year to year that I could not rely on the estimates I had in mind some years ago.

Mr. RANSDELL. The cost of levee construction depends entirely upon the yardage. I should have to give it to the Senator by yardage rather than otherwise.

Mr. BURTON. Running from levee district to levee district, what has been about the average cost per mile or per thousand feet—we can get the result by computation in either case—of those two, the levees and the revetments?

Mr. RANSDELL. Our revetment work 20 to 25 years ago, when I first became closely connected with it, and they were doing some work in the vicinity of my home, cost between $140,000 and $150,000 a mile; but the latest reports of the commission show that it costs in the neighborhood of $200,000 per mile. The cost of labor has increased considerably. Willows have diminished in quantity. They are more expensive to get than they used to be. Everything that is used in connection with the revetment seems to be more expensive. They say this revetment will cost in the neighborhood of $200,000 per mile.

I can not give you the exact figures of the cost of levees. I know that the price per yard ranges from about 18 to 35 cents. Just after a levee is breached during the overflow, when much of the materials have to be hauled a long distance and you have all the bad material that has to be moved before they can get the good, the prices sometimes run considerably over 35 cents per cubic yard. Some of the levees, at least, are small—that is, only 12 or 15 feet high. Others range 25 feet high. A levee has a crown of 8 feet, with a slope of 3 to 1 on each side. On the land side the best levees are always built with a banquette, which banquette should be in width twice the height of the levee. If the levee is 20 feet high, the crown of the banquette should be 40 feet. The crown of that banquette is practically level. It reaches within 8 feet ordinarily of the top of the levee, and slopes back very gradually. There is just enough slope to let it drain off nicely. Then the remainder of it is built at a slope of 3 to 1.

So, you see, the conditions as to the dimensions of levees are so variable that I could not state just what it would be per mile, but the engineers have all this calculation. They have figured out very carefully throughout the entire length of the levee line just how many cubic yards are needed to put these levees up to what they conceive to be the necessary grade, and, having multiplied that by 35, they arrive at the $60,000,000.

Mr. BURTON. Where are those figures published?

Mr. RANSDELL. It is the statement made by the witnesses, and I would be very glad to point it out to the Senator in the testimony given before us.

Mr. KENYON. I should like to ask the Senator the status of the bill at this time.

Mr. RANSDELL. It is pending before a subcommittee of the Commerce Committee. We have had a number of hearings on it. We actually had hearings relating to the terrible flood on the Hwai River in China. Our Government has sent Col. Sibert, formerly a member of the Panama Canal Commission, to China. I expect that he has gotten there about to-day. We saw in yesterday's paper where there have been great loss and suffering on the rivers in China. I suppose Col. Sibert is over there now and will help them to solve that problem. We had testimony in regard to that.

Mr. KENYON. The bill would provide for levees that would protect the adjacent country?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes, sir; it will protect the entire alluvial delta along the river.

Mr. KENYON. I hope the Senator will get that bill into the Senate. For my part, I should like to vote for some protection to the people of the South. I do not think it is fair or just to dump all this water from the North down upon the people of the South. I hope the Senator will get that bill out of committee. I think it would be better to do something in that way by means of a defensive bill. It seems to me that the pending bill is composed of patchwork and some things that in the end will practically amount to nothing. The other is a substantial proposition. It is more important than the Panama Canal, and we ought to undertake it. I think the Senator will find great support for his plan in the cooperation of the States and the landowners and the Government.

Mr. RANSDELL. I appreciate very highly your encouraging words, and assure you it is my intention to press that bill. There is a valid reason why it was not done heretofore, but it is my intention to press it hereafter as rapidly as I can.

Mr. GALLINGER. In addition to the Government loaning China one of our best engineers, is it not a fact that the Red Cross has taken up that matter and is going to make a large donation of money toward the consummation of that scheme?

Mr. RANSDELL. I understand that is true—that it has already made a donation of a very large sum and that it is helping considerably. It is not going to furnish money, if I am correctly informed, for building levees on the Hwai River, but it is going to lend its moral support. It is going to encourage an engineering and constructive firm in this country to undertake the work of building those levees and is going to help in every way possible.

Mr. GALLINGER. My attention was called to that recently, and it seemed to me a philanthropic movement that was very commendable. At that time I thought, and it rather impresses me now, that if that great organization had taken up the Mississippi River first and gone to China afterwards it might have been a better scheme.

Mr. RANSDELL. I want to say to the Senator that the president of the Red Cross, Miss Mabel Boardman, testified before our committee, the particular committee which has in charge the bill of which I have been speaking, and said that their association during the last three years—that is, during the flood season of 1912 and 1913—had expended something over $3,000,000 on the floods in the Mississippi River and the Ohio. She did not differentiate between the two, but I know they have been doing a great deal of magnificent work, for which I am delighted to give them credit, during the floods there in 1912.

Mr. GALLINGER. That was for the relief of the sufferers?

Mr. RANSDELL. Yes, sir; for the relief of the sufferers.

Mr. GALLINGER. Not for construction?

Mr. RANSDELL. Not for construction. Unfortunately we have not had as much construction as we should have had.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, there is no question that the duty devolves upon the Government of the United States to prevent the recurrence of these floods, or, rather, the consequences of the floods, in the Mississippi River; but I fear that one of the obstacles, and possibly it is an insuperable one, for the consummation of the project which the Senator has outlined in a bill yet to be reported is due to the fact that so much money is being and has been appropriated in so-called river and harbor bills for enterprises that are not meritorious and which smack very strongly of enterprises that are designed for personal and local benefit instead of those benefits for which river and harbor bills are supposed to be designed.

I wish the Senator could in some way substitute as an amendment to this bill his project for the improvement o the Mississippi River, that we could cut out some twelve or fifteen million dollars in appropriations, which we are going to be asked to pass, which are not necessary and some of which are indefensible; take the amount of those appropriations and give it for the great enterprise which is designed to be accomplished by the bill to which he has referred.

I am very much afraid that if these huge river and harbor bills continue to be presented to the Congress for passage every year, subject as they are to criticism, not only in but outside of Congress, the feeling against the making of appropriations will continue to grow to such an extent that the improvement of the great Mississippi River for the prevention of these floods will be so confused and confounded with the popular notion of what river and harbor bills in these modern days are designed for that we shall not be able to enact that measure into a law even if it should be reported from a committee.

Mr. RANSDELL. I would not like at this time, as I am trenching on the time of the Senator from Ohio, to go into a general defense of this bill. At the proper time I shall do so, but I am going to ask the Senator to please make me out a list of what he terms the indefensible items in this bill and I will endeavor to explain them hereafter. There are a great many items in the bill, something like 350, and I am quite sure those items are good. If there be any bad ones, I do not know it. I took part in preparing the bill, and I studied it just as well as I knew how. All humanity is liable to err. I do not pretend to claim that we have not been guilty of errors in the preparation of this bill.

There may be bad items; we may have some items in it which should not be there; but we have tried our best to get a good bill. Some of the very small items that several Senators would like to cut out are just as important relatively as the large items. I should like to have the items pointed out to which the Senator refers, and then I will try to explain them.

Mr. THOMAS. I am depending very largely upon the Senator from Ohio in the statements which he has made and those which I think he will make concerning this bill for my assertion that much of the bill is indefensible. My own personal knowledge of the various items is too indefinite to enable me to comply with the Senator's request, but I think the Senator from Ohio is doing that identical thing now. So I think that by the time he will have finished his remarks all the information, and very much more than I could possibly give the Senator, will have been furnished.

Mr. RANSDELL. From my experience on this floor I think the Senator from Colorado is one of the best lawyers I have ever come in contact with, and his experience must teach him that when one knows but one side of a case he knows very little about it. When we get through defending this bill you will know something of the other side, and we will be very glad to answer any criticism made upon the bill. All we ask is that Senators sit patiently by and listen to our defense as they have listened to the criticism of the bill by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. THOMAS. That is what I have done and what I propose to do. I will also remind the Senator that I also sat by and listened to a great deal of the discussions of the bill which was passed a year ago.

Mr. RANSDELL. I thank the Senator from Ohio very much for yielding to me so long. I did not intend to trespass on his time.

Mr BURTON. Mr. President, I am much obliged to the Senators from New Hampshire and Louisiana, as well as to the Senator from Colorado, for their suggestions and for bringing to the attention of the Senate important subjects relating to this bill.

There are three subjects which have been treated by them which must require very careful discussion before we are through. The first one to which at a later time I intend to give considerable attention is the question of discriminatory railroad rates between cities on and off waterways, and whether the United States should improve waterways with a view to regulating freight rates. Is that a correct policy or not? Another question arises is this: Are those differences in rates between towns on and off from rivers exclusively traceable to the fact that there is potential water competition? Are the towns which have lower rates located on rivers or near to them? Must they ascribe their lower rates exclusively to water competition?

The second topic is the general subject of the improvement of the lower Mississippi from Cape Girardeau and Cairo to the Gulf. The third, which has just been suggested by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], is a list of objectionable items in this bill. I shall try before I am through and before the end of the general discussion to point out some of those objectionable items. It is possible that there will also be other items to which remarks can be more profitably directed when the bill is taken up in detail.

I wish to say now that I am going to submit two amendments relating to prior bills. One is for the repeal of the item of $100,000 for the Youghiogheny River, the project which contemplates the building of three locks, each to cost $350,000. As an illustration of the piecemeal policy that was pursued in the bill of 1910, $100,000 was appropriated—not enough to finish one lock or one dam; not enough to even begin a lock or a dam profitably.

The other item is an appropriation in the same bill of $1,000,000 for the 14-foot waterway from the Lakes to the Gulf. It is an extended provision, and it is a question how far, if at all, this million dollars commits Congress to proceeding with its construction. In any event I wish to introduce an amendment to repeal that provision so that there may be no doubt about it.

I wish to say just a word more in regard to the remarks of the Senator from Louisiana on the improvement of the Ohio River and its tributaries. He raises, and very naturally, the argument that the prosecution of the improvement of the Ohio was somewhat slow during the time when I was a member of the River and Harbor Committee of the House. In view of the appropriations made at that time, Mr. President, I do not think so. The fact of the matter is when I first became connected with the River and Harbor Committee or had an active part in its proceedings, about 1898, it was exceedingly difficult to reconcile the sentiment of the country to the passage of bills carrying any considerable amount.

In 1882 President Arthur vetoed the river and harbor bill. It was passed over his veto, but a vote in favor of such passage over his veto was a fatal obstacle to the reelection of many Members of the House of Representatives in the autumn of that year. In the year 1896 President Cleveland vetoed a river and harbor bill. That was passed over his veto, but I do not think it exercised any very great influence on the fortunes of those who voted for it, because in the following campaign of 1896 there was an all-absorbing issue, the so-called silver question of 16 to 1. I was one of those who voted to pass that bill over his veto, nevertheless there was a very strong feeling against river and harbor legislation.

It was the first effort of the committee during my incumbency, or, at least, during the time in which I was chairman, to relieve these river and harbor bills of excrescences, to bring forward no appropriations unless the projects for which they were to be made had had expert examination and would stand the acid test. Even so, items were included in the bills of 1899 and 1902 which I do not think commend themselves to our judgment to-day.

So a new plan was devised of a river and harbor board, which should review all projects and make recommendations. That board was expected to contain some of the ablest officers in the Engineer Corps. It had been found that in the years preceding 1902 reports came to Congress made oftentimes by a single engineer. If a man had the rank of lieutenant colonel or higher his estimates virtually came directly to Congress. It was in the power of the Chief of Engineers to review his findings, but virtually his report came directly here. If the rank was under that of lieutenant colonel, the report went to the division engineer, who expressed his opinion upon the judgment of the local engineer, and then the two were transmitted. It developed that we had as many different judgments as there were men in the corps. One man would examine a project that would cost $100,000, and being of a conservative disposition he would report against it. Another man would examine a project costing $200,000 that did not promise nearly the same benefit, and he would report enthusiastically in favor of it, and so we were including many ill-considered projects in our bills.

This board of engineers did most excellent service, and is doing it to this day; but I do not think that of recent years they have shown by any means the care—I will not say "the care"—but they certainly have not maintained the conservatism which they maintained in the first five or six years of their existence. So, I say that it is hardly just to say that the Ohio River was not improved with rapidity while I was chairman because the first effort of the committee during my membership of it was to relieve these bills from the obloquy which was so general throughout the country.

The people of the United States and the Congress would not then submit to a bill carrying the great figures which have been carried in bills in later years. Beyond that, I am perfectly free to say that I did not at that time feel sure that this improvement, costing sixty or seventy million dollars, although it borders on my own State, was justified. It would have been out of keeping with improvements that we were making at that time, and it is hardly fair to say that the Ohio River should have been improved to a high grade and hence the tributary streams. If it were not desirable to improve the Ohio River on this enormous scale, then the tributary streams should have waited as well. In any event, we should adopt a broad and comprehensive policy, the rational policy of first improving the main stream, and not, as has been done in many instances, as is being done in this bill, and in bills preceding it, provide a channel in a branch stream deeper, more ample, more thoroughly improved than in the main trunk line or stream itself.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

Mr. KERN. I move that the Senate adjourn until to-morrow, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 6, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Behold, O God our Father, we seek Thee with all our heart, for we realize that without Thee our work is vain; for Thy ways are fixed, Thy laws inexorable. Open Thou our eyes that we may see the way; strengthen our hearts that we may walk therein, and be profitable servants to those for whom we labor, and feel Thine approval welling up in our souls. Thus may our work live, and Thy will be done; in the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, July 3, was read and approved.

THE PRESIDENT'S FOURTH OF JULY SPEECH.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD the speech of the President of the United States made at Philadelphia on Saturday, July 4.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the President's Philadelphia speech of July 4. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE CHANGES.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move the election of certain gentlemen to fill vacancies on committees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will send up the list.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. First I will ask the Clerk to read the letter which is at the Speaker's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., July 6, 1914.

Hon. CHAMP CLARK, Speaker.

DEAR SIR: I beg to herewith tender my resignation as a member of the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress, and of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

Yours, respectfully,

FRANK PLUMLEY.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the resignation will be accepted.

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I move the election of Hon. FRANK PLUMLEY, of Vermont, as a member of the Judiciary Committee, to fill the Republican vacancy caused by the unseating of Mr. Dyer. I make this motion at the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama moves the election of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. PLUMLEY] to the Judiciary Committee in the place of Mr. Dyer. Are there any other nominations? If not, the nominations are closed. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, also at the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] I move the election of Hon. DOW H. DRUKKER, of New Jersey, to the Committees on the Census, Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress, and Expenditures in the War Department.

The SPEAKER. Are there any other nominations? The Chair hears none, and the nominations are closed. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Alabama.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. WILSON of Florida, indefinitely, on account of the death of his brother.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER. This is unanimous-consent day. The Clerk will report the first bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

CERTAIN LAND OWNERS IN MISSISSIPPI AND LOUISIANA.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13581) for the relief of the landowners on the east bank of the Mississippi River, in the counties of Warren, Claiborne, Jefferson, Adams, and Wilkinson, in the State of Mississippi, and the parish of West Feliciana, State of Louisiana.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. QUIN. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Rivers and Harbors of the Senate have reported an amended bill, and I would like to have the bill hold its place until some time when it can be taken up under a motion to suspend the rules. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] wishes to object to it, I shall have it put on the calendar to come up under a suspension of the rules.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman asks unanimous consent to pass the bill over, I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi ask to pass this bill over?

Mr. QUIN. I ask unanimous consent that it be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent to pass this bill without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

POST OFFICE AT THOMASVILLE, GA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 15110) to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, additional land for the post office in the city of Thomasville, Ga.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I do not see the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. PARK].

Mr. ADAMSON. I do not know the reason for his absence. He is usually very punctual.

Mr. MANN. He is, indeed.

Mr. ADAMSON. I ask unanimous consent in his behalf that the bill be passed without prejudice, if it is agreeable.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to pass the bill without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CERTAIN LANDS IN OREGON.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 49) to provide for the exchange with the State of Oregon of certain school lands and indemnity rights within the national forests of that State for an equal area of national forest land.

The bill was read.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have this bill passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to pass this bill without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT MARLIN, TEX.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13815) to increase the limit of cost for the construction of a public building at Marlin, Tex.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the limit of cost fixed by the act of Congress approved June 25, 1910, for the erection and completion of a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, and approaches, complete, for the use and accommodation of the United States post office and other governmental offices at Marlin, Tex., be, and the same is hereby, increased from $45,000 to $65,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 10, strike out the figures "$65,000" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "$57,000."

The SPEAKER. Who has charge of this bill?

Mr. MANN. It is the bill of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY].

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. My colleague, Mr. HENRY, is not present, and I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. First, is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask where the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] is?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. He is not in the House at this time.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Is he one of the band of heroes so commended in the President's Fourth of July speech for staying here and performing his patriotic duty? Is he not here?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I can not answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Then is he present?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not see him. I have not seen him this morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not appear to be in the Hall.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I ask unanimous consent, then——

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

AIDS TO NAVIGATION—LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2876) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize aids to navigation and for other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913.

The Clerk read the bill at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

ORDINANCE OF SECESSION—LOUISIANA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House concurrent resolution 34, authorizing the Secretary of War to return to the State of Louisiana the original ordinance of secession adopted by said State.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized to return to the State of Louisiana the original ordinance of secession that was adopted by the people of said State in convention assembled and that is now in the possession of the War Department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, this is a concurrent resolution. I do not know who has charge of it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. WATKINS] introduced it.

Mr. MANN. I do not see where Congress has any authority to restore property in the hands of the War Department by a concurrent resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It ought to be a joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. There is no question about that.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, would it be in order to amend it so as to make it a joint resolution?

The SPEAKER. The Chair sees no objection to it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution may be amended so as to make it a joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that this concurrent resolution be so amended as to make it a joint resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. And that it may be properly numbered as a joint resolution.

The SPEAKER. And that it may be properly numbered as a House joint resolution. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does the title need changing?

Mr. MANN. It has no title. I move that it be given a title when it passes.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the House joint resolution.

The resolution (H. J. Res. 295) was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will be given a title.

There was no objection.

TERMS OF COURT AT JONESBORO, ARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 2167) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 71 of chapter 5 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 71. The State of Arkansas is divided into two districts, to be known as the eastern and western district of Arkansas. The western district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Sevier, Howard, Little River, Pike, Hempstead, Miller, Lafayette, Columbia, Nevada, Ouachita, Union, and Calhoun, which shall constitute the Texarkana division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Polk, Scott, Yell, Logan, Sebastian, Franklin, Crawford, Washington, Benton, and Johnson, which shall constitute the Fort Smith division of said district; also the territory embraced on the last date mentioned in the counties of Baxter, Boone, Carroll, Madison, Marion, Newton, and Searcy, which shall constitute the Harrison division of said district. Terms of said district court for the Texarkana division shall be held at Texarkana on the second Mondays in May and November; for the Fort Smith division, at Fort Smith, on the second Mondays in January and June; and for the Harrison division, at Harrison, on the second Mondays in April and October. The eastern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Lee, Phillips, St. Francis, Cross, Monroe, and Woodruff, which shall constitute the eastern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Independence, Cleburne, Stone, Izard, Sharp, and Jackson, which shall constitute the northern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Crittenden, Clay, Craighead, Greene, Mississippi, Poinsett, Fulton, Randolph, and Lawrence, which shall constitute the Jonesboro division of said district; and also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Arkansas, Ashley, Bradley, Chicot, Clark, Cleveland, Conway, Dallas, Desha, Drew, Faulkner, Garland, Grant, Hot Spring, Jefferson, Lincoln, Lonoke, Montgomery, Perry, Pope, Prairie, Pulaski, Saline, Van Buren, and White, which shall constitute the western division of said district. Terms of the district court for the eastern division shall be held at Helena on the second Monday in March and the first Monday in October; for the northern division, at Batesville, on the fourth Monday in May and the second Monday in December; for the Jonesboro division, at Jonesboro, on the second Monday in May and the fourth Monday in November; and for the western division, at Little Rock, on the first Monday in April and the third Monday in October. The clerk of the court for the eastern district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Little Rock, at Helena, at Jonesboro, and at Batesville, which shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of the court. And the clerk of the court for the western district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Fort Smith, at Harrison, and at Texarkana, which shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of the court."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will make two suggestions in regard to this Unanimous Consent Calendar: If a Member knows in advance that he is going to ask that a bill be passed over without prejudice, it seems that it would expedite business very much if he would make the request as soon as the title is read. That saves the reading of the bill. If any Member has made up his mind resolutely that he is going to object and that he is not going to be persuaded, after debate, to yield his opinion, it seems that it would be better for him to make his objection as soon as the title is read. These are suggestions merely to expedite business.

GRANTING COAL LANDS TO CITY OF GRAND JUNCTION, COLO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 1633) granting certain coal lands to the city of Grand Junction, Colo.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill maintain its place on the calendar.

Mr. MANN. What is the use? This is not a bill that can pass except by discussion and consideration. No one ought to think of it.

Mr. RAKER. It has the unanimous report of the committee.

Mr. MANN. That is not in its favor; it is a little against it. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

INTERSTATE TRANSPORTATION OF IMMATURE CALVES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 1818) to regulate the interstate transportation of immature calves.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no person, firm, or corporation shall ship or deliver for shipment, nor shall any common carrier nor the receiver, trustee, or lessee thereof, receive for transportation or transport from one State or Territory or the District of Columbia into or through another State or Territory or the District of Columbia any live calf not accompanied by its mother unless the same is 6 weeks old or over: Provided, That the Secretary of Agriculture may make rules and regulations permitting, in cases of emergency only, the shipment in interstate commerce of live calves less than 6 weeks old; and the Secretary of Agriculture may also permit, under such restrictions as he may deem proper, one shipment in interstate commerce of live calves less than 6 weeks old and over 3 weeks old when the entire time consumed in such interstate shipment to final destination, including time of loading and unloading, does not exceed 12 hours.

SEC. 2. That any person, firm, or corporation, or any common carrier or the receiver, trustee, or lessee thereof, who shall violate any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished by a fine of not less than $20 nor more than $50 for each calf offered for shipment, shipped, or received for transportation or transported in violation of any of the provisions of this act.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I object to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma objects to the bill.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Will not the gentleman reserve his objection for a moment?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I regret very much to have to object; but if there is any sense in making the limitation for six weeks, there is for six months. Sometimes the stock grower is obliged to ship stock when it is in good condition and when they could not comply with these regulations. As a man experienced in the stock business, I object.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I ask the gentleman to hear me a moment. The very objection that the gentleman refers to was made by a committee representing the stockmen of the Southwest, who appeared before the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and an amendment——

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I am not talking for the stockmen. I am talking about the farmer.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The farmers of the Southwest——

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the objection, and vote against the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HAMILTON] to let this bill go over until I can look into it. I did not know that this bill was on the calendar.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Certainly, if my friend from Texas feels that the bill ought to go over until he can have an opportunity for further consideration, I would feel in duty bound to ask that.

Mr. GARNER. I will say to the gentleman that two years ago the representative of the Cattle Raisers' Association of Texas and the National Cattle Raisers' Association did appear before his committee to oppose a bill of this nature. I am informed that that same gentleman, Mr. Cowan, has not had an opportunity or, at least, has not taken the opportunity to be heard on this bill.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. He has withdrawn his objection.

Mr. GARNER. I do not know just exactly what the position of the cattlemen on this bill is.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. He has withdrawn his objection. After he appeared before the committee, I personally conferred with the Bureau of Animal Industry and asked the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to insert an amendment in the bill which provided for the very matter in relation to which Mr. Cowan appeared before the committee, so that his objection is completely met in the bill as it is now presented, and he makes no objection to it in its present form.

Mr. GARNER. Has the gentleman any statement to that effect from him—that he does not object to it in its present form?

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. I have no statement in writing; but on the occasion when he appeared before the committee—and the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce is here, though I do not know whether he recalls the circumstances or not—he stated that at times there were peculiar conditions existing in the Southwest; that at certain times of drought it was necessary, perhaps, to slaughter cows before their calves were six weeks old, so we inserted in the bill a provision that calves might be shipped in interstate commerce under certain conditions under rules and regulations provided by the Agricultural Department in cases of emergency.

Mr. GARNER. We can refer back to this a little later on.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. The only difficulty about that is that I have tried for some time to get this bill up. It is designed to reach not conditions in the Southwest, but abuses which exist in other parts of the country; and if the gentleman only appreciated the cruelties that are being perpetrated by shipping calves as young as two days old in interstate commerce, and the barbarisms that are being practiced upon humanity in offering for food the flesh of these calves shipped under those conditions, I am sure he would withdraw any objection that he has to the bill. These calves which have suffered agony for hours in transportation are slaughtered and the meat is sold for food. They are kept in shipment for three and sometimes for six days, and the testimony shows that in every carload many starve to death. The gentleman knows from his experience and observation that a calf taken from its mother at the age of 2 or 3 days has not yet learned to take any other sustenance than the milk of its mother. These calves are taken from the mothers out of warm stables and are put on cars, 50 or a hundred of them at a time, and many of them are dead when they arrive at their destination, and in many instances those calves are slaughtered when they are on the verge of death by starvation, and their carcasses are sold for food to the poor people. It is an outrage, not only from the standpoint of the kind of food that is being offered to humanity, but it is a cruelty in the extreme.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be temporarily passed over.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over temporarily without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ARMY AND NAVY MEDAL-OF-HONOR HONOR ROLL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12179) to establish in the War Department and in the Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as "the Army and Navy medal-of-honor honor roll," and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., There is hereby established in the War Department and Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as "the Army and Navy medal-of-honor honor roll." Upon written application made to the Secretary of the proper department, and subject to the conditions and requirements hereinafter contained, the name of each surviving person who has served in the military or naval service of the United States in any war, who has attained or shall attain the age of 65 years, and who has been awarded a medal of honor for having in action involving actual conflict with an enemy distinguished himself conspicuously by gallantry or intrepidity, at the risk of his life, above and beyond the call of duty, and who was honorably discharged from service by muster out, resignation, or otherwise, shall be, by the Secretary of the proper department, entered and recorded on said roll. Applications for entry on said roll shall be made in such form and under such regulations as shall be prescribed by the War Department and Navy Department, respectively, and proper blanks and instructions shall be, by the proper Secretary, furnished, without charge, upon request made by any person claiming the benefits of this act.
